Congressional Quarterly services are primarily for newspapers and broadcasters at standard rates based on circulation and radio time rates respectively. Services are also available at standard rates to other media such as general magazines, forums, and publications of all political parties, civic groups, educational groups, veterans organizations, trade unions and trade associations. A school and library rate provides no publication or broadcasting rights. Written or oral use, direct or indirect, is reserved for current clients who pay for such rights in their regular editions, broadcasts, newsletters, bulletins or other releases. Special permission must be obtained before CQ may be used in special supplements, hand books, etc. Congressional Quarterly sources must be indicated if lack of credit jeopardizes any part of copyrights to any of its material.

Congressional Quarterly reserves second and subsequent rights in its services. Hence clients are not entitled to use back CQ material in any way that would cause Congressional Quarterly Inc. to lose its rights and values in its own material. Non-clients wishing to quote or use material from any of its services must obtain written permission from Congressional Quarterly Inc., 1156 Nineteenth Street, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Policy Statement . . .

"By providing a link between the local newspaper and Capitol Hill we hope Congressional Quarterly can help to make public opinion the only effective pressure group in the country. Since many citizens other than editors are also interested in Congress, we hope that they too will find Congressional Quarterly an aid to a better understanding of their government.

"Congressional Quarterly presents the facts in as complete, concise and unbiased form as we know how. The editorial comment on the acts and votes of Congress, we leave to our subscribers." Foreword, Congressional Quarterly, Vol. 1, 1945–Henrietta and Nelson Poynter.

Volume XIV, 1958

Page 69, Column 2, and paragraph 3, line 3, and Page 156, Column 2, under OASI, paragraph 3, line 3 -- The increase in taxes for the self-employed was given incorrectly; it should read: (to 3.75 percent) not (to 3.5 percent).

Page 160, Column 2 -- Under "Provisions," add the following sentence in the next to last paragraph: However, the law provided that any transfer of functions proposed after Dec. 31, 1958 must be transmitted to Congress, which could veto the transfer within 60 days by adoption of a concurrent resolution.

What Is Congressional Quarterly?

Congressional Quarterly Inc., a private enterprise devoted to producing background facts on the news, consists of the Congressional Quarterly Service, which provides reference data and analyses on Congressional issues and politics; and Editorial Research Reports, which covers the full range of the news.

The CQ Service includes: special stories for newspapers; a current reference document on Congress, CQ Weekly Report, indexed quarterly; and the permanent reference volume, Congressional Quarterly Almanac.

Congressional Quarterly is nonpartisan and unbiased. It is complete, concise and convenient.

Until Congressional Quarterly began publication in 1945, there was no way for an editor or an interested citizen to find out about Congress and his own Representative and Senators without great expense or the use of official documents containing millions of words.

Congressional Quarterly is the only news bureau devoting exclusive attention to the United States Congress. Reproduction and quotation rights are reserved for its editorial clients, which include daily newspapers, magazines, radio broadcasters and publications of trade associations and unions.

Congressional Quarterly's staff organizes and indexes the vast stream of material pouring from Capitol Hill, from day to day, in session and out. Every week it reports on legislation, investigations, votes, lobby activities, political developments and major administrative actions and appointments.

Special Services

CQ provides its newspaper clients with three exclusive news stories a week. Each spotlights a major trend, legislative issue or political development concerning Congress.

Congressional Quarterly keeps individual voting records of every Member of the House and Senate on all roll-call votes. Blank forms for recording the votes of Members of the 79th through 86th Congresses are available. They can be filled in from CQ material, or CQ will complete them on assignment.

Congressional Quarterly stands ready at all times to answer queries about Congress.

CQ Weekly Report

The story of Congress as it unfolds from day to day is told in CQ Weekly Report, which includes:

Bills Introduced and Enacted -- A chronological listing, within categories, of all public bills introduced, with their sponsors' names, and a brief summary of action taken by the House or Senate on bills that became law.

Committee Roundup -- Committee hearings and action on important bills plus testimony and reports on major investigations.

Floor Action -- The provisions of important bills passed or rejected by the House or Senate, including amendments voted on and a summary of debate.

Vote Charts -- Every roll-call vote appears on a chart giving the party breakdown on the vote and how each Member of Congress voted. Members are listed by states.

Analysis of Issues -- Background stories and fact sheets on issues before Congress, election outlooks and campaign developments.

Pressures on Congress -- A continuing story of the forces exerted on Congressmen, presenting summaries of the legislative programs of key organizations on important bills and problems. The Weekly Report also lists all lobbyist registrations, salaries and expenditures.

Political Notes -- A weekly survey of political events and personalities, campaigns and elections affecting Congress and the Presidency. Another feature, State Roundup, highlights the political picture on the state level.

Congressional Quiz -- A weekly question-and-answer feature centered on issues affecting Congress and the Presidency.

Week in Congress -- A summary of the week's events, giving the top news in capsule form. During the session, another feature, Congressional Boxscore, traces the progress of major bills.

Index -- A quarterly, cross-referenced cumulative index providing a quick means of relating past events to new action as it occurs.

CQ Almanac

At the end of the year the Weekly Report and its indexes are augmented by the Congressional Quarterly Almanac, which organizes the past year's material by subject, instead of chronologically, for permanent reference.

Basic facts on the Members of Congress, texts of the President's messages to Congress, key achievements and votes of Congress are followed by detailed stories on the major legislation and investigations of the year. Sections on major nominations, lobby activities and political developments conclude the book.

The Almanac includes several special features that do not appear in the Weekly Report. In the CQ Poll, Congressional Quarterly sends to all Members of Congress who failed to take a stand on significant roll-call votes ballots asking how they would have voted if present. Results of the CQ Poll are incorporated in the Almanac's vote charts, which also include corrections of votes that Members sometimes make days after the roll call was taken and recorded in the official Congressional Record.

The Almanac includes an explanation of How a Bill is Passed, describing the complex legislative process from the introduction of a bill to its enactment into law, and a Glossary of Congressional Terms, which defines key parliamentary words and phrases.

In addition, the Almanac contains a roundup on the nominations made by the President during the year and a list of the major appointments confirmed by the Senate.

Voting Yardsticks

Congressional Quarterly offers exclusive statistical analyses of roll-call voting that show:

Support of the President --- How frequently each Member voted "for" and "against" the President on roll-call tests of his legislative program and leadership.

Economy Voting -- How Members voted on roll calls that directly affected Federal spending.

Party Unity -- The frequency with which a Member voted in agreement with, and opposition to, the majority of his own party on roll calls which split Republicans and Democrats along partisan lines.

Bipartisan Support and Opposition -- The percentage of a Member's votes in agreement with, and opposition to, the bipartisan majority on roll calls on which majorities of both parties voted together.

Voting Participation -- Frequency with which each Member voted.

On The Record -- How often each Member voted, entered into "live" pairs, announced his stand, or answered the CQ Poll.

A Congressman's Record

To gauge a Congressman's record, locate his name in the Index. Here are listed Congressional committees on which he served and the major legislation in which he played a significant role during the year. Page references to important investigations that he took part in also are included. For his personal data, see the "Ages and Professions" chart for his chamber.

Voting Record -- For a quick survey of the Congressman's voting on the crucial issues of the year, check for his name in the charts entitled "Key Votes."

For a complete record of his voting in any comprehensive field -- such as Agriculture or Foreign Policy -- check the list of Roll-Call Votes (p. 6) that were taken in the House or Senate. Then turn to the vote chart on the page indicated.

CQ lists every record vote for every Member of Congress. Senate votes appear together in chronological order, as do House votes. To find a Congressman's complete record on roll-call votes for the year, check all the charts for the appropriate chamber. Also check his performance by CQ's "Voting Yardsticks" (above).

Bills Sponsored -- Find out what bills he introduced. To do this, refer to the Index. Measures he introduced will be listed by bill number under his name, together with the general field to which they pertained. For a summary of each bill's purpose, and the name of the committee to which it was referred, turn to the "Bills Introduced" section and locate, under each of the categories in which he submitted legislation, the bills he sponsored.

To discover whether Congress acted on the bills he introduced, check the "Bills Acted On" section, which lists bills that received committee or floor action.

Past Record -- Check the Congressman's past record. Key votes for each year since 1951 appear in the Almanacs for those years. Key votes of 1945-1951 are in the 1951 Almanac, pp. 722-43. The most significant roll calls for 1919-1944 are in the 1949 Almanac, pp. 100-116. Other actions by the Congressman, beginning with the 79th Congress, may be found in the 1945 Almanac and succeeding volumes.

Checking A Bill

CQ Almanac offers these three main sections for checking legislation:

Bills introduced Bills acted on Major legislation

In the Bills Introduced and Acted On sections, information on legislation is broken down into Congressional Quarterly's eight regular categories: Agriculture; Appropriations; Education and Welfare; Foreign Policy; Labor; Military and Veterans; Miscellaneous and Administrative; Taxes and Economic Policy.

Bills Introduced -- Every public bill and resolution introduced during the year is listed under subject categories, chronologically by bill, and then resolution, numbers.

Bills Acted On -- Every public bill reported from committee or acted on by House or Senate is listed under subject categories and divided into "Action Completed" and "Unfinished Business" sections.

Public Laws -- All public laws enacted during the year are listed under Bills Acted On.

Major Legislation -- The legislative history of major bills acted on during the year is presented in the following general sequence:

The bill's number, significant dates in its passage through Congress, final public law number, if any.

Summary of the bill's primary purpose and most notable provisions.

Background and history of issues involved, keyed to previous Almanacs for past developments.

Committee testimony, votes and reports.

Floor debate pro and con, highlighting major arguments of both sides before passage or rejection.

All roll-call votes and principal amendments.

Conference proceedings in the case of differing House and Senate versions; outstanding points in dispute and how they were reconciled.

Presidential comments upon enactment of the bill.

Lobby pressures for and against the measure.

How A Bill Is Passed

Note: Parliamentary terms used below are defined in the Glossary, which follows.

Introduction of Bills

A House Member (including the territorial Delegate) may introduce any one of several types of bills and resolutions by handing it to the Clerk of the House, or placing it in a box called the hopper. A Senator first gains recognition of the presiding officer to announce the introduction of a bill. If objection is offered by any Senator the introduction of the bill is postponed until the following day.

As the next step in either the House or Senate, the bill is numbered, referred to the appropriate committee, labeled with the sponsor's name, and sent to the Government Printing Office so that copies can be made for subsequent study and action. Senate bills may be jointly sponsored and carry several Senators' names; in the House each bill carries the name of one sponsor only; however, other Members may file identical measures. Bills written in the executive branch and proposed as Administration measures usually are introduced by the chairmen of the Congressional committees that have jurisdiction over the subjects involved.

Types of Congressional measures:

Bills -- Prefixed with "HR" in the House, "S" in the Senate, followed by a number. Used as the form for most legislation, whether permanent or temporary, general or special, public or private.

Joint Resolutions -- Designated H J Res or S J Res. Subject to the same procedure as bills with the exception of joint resolutions proposing an amendment to the Constitution which must be approved by two-thirds of both houses and are thereupon sent directly to the Administrator of General Services for submission to the states for ratification rather than being presented to the President for his approval.

Concurrent Resolutions -- Designated H Con Res or S Con Res. Used for matters affecting the operations of both houses. These do not become law.

Resolutions -- Designated H Res or S Res. Used for a matter concerning the operation of either house alone and adopted only by the chamber in which it originates.

Committee Action

A bill is referred to the appropriate committee by the House parliamentarian on the Speaker's order, or by the Senate President. Sponsors may indicate their preferences for referral, although custom and chamber rule generally govern this. An exception is the referral of private bills, which are sent to whatever group is designated by their sponsors. Bills are technically considered "read for the first time" when referred to House committees.

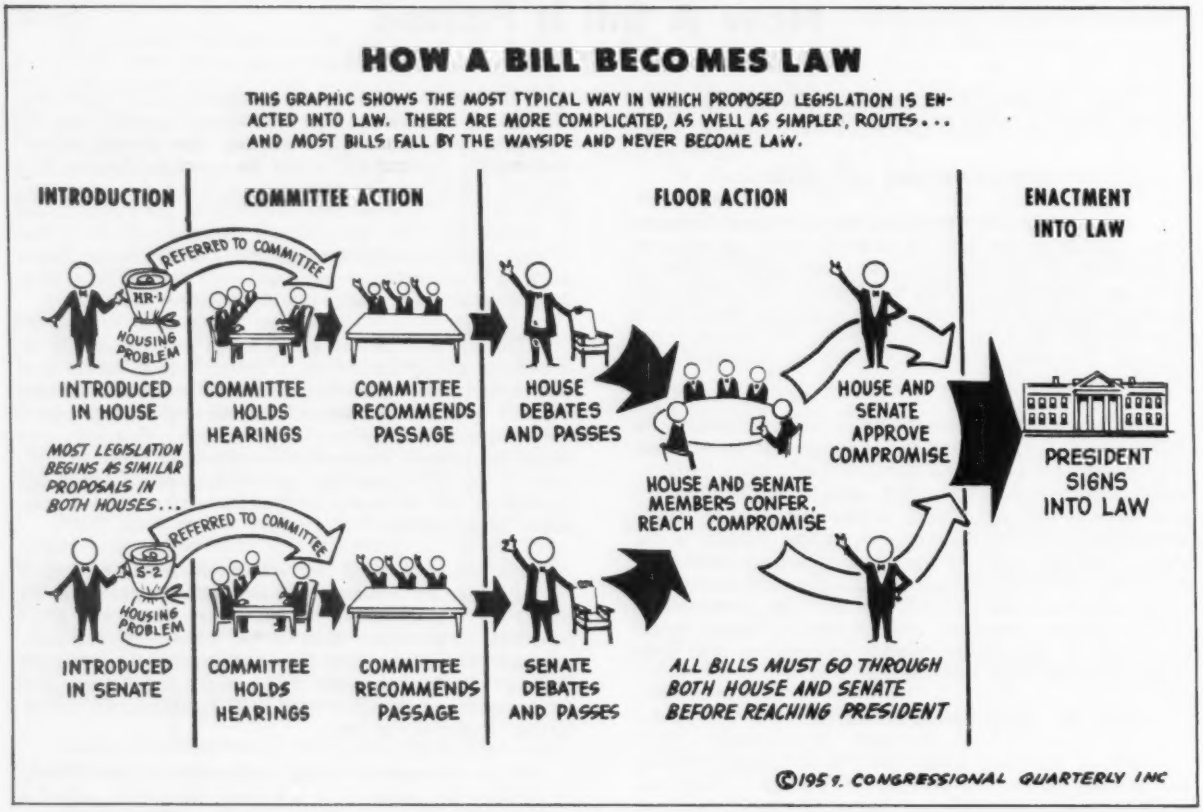
When a bill reaches a committee it is placed upon that group's calendar. At that time it comes under the sharpest Congressional focus. Its chances for passage are quickly determined -- and the great majority of bills fall by the legislative roadside. Failure of a committee to act on a bill is equivalent to killing it; the measure can be withdrawn from the group's purview only by a discharge petition requiring signatures of 219 House members on House bills, or by passage of a special resolution in the Senate. Discharge attempts rarely succeed.

The first committee action taken on a bill usually is a request for comment on it by interested agencies of the government. The committee chairman may assign the bill to a subcommittee for study and hearings, or it may be considered by the full committee. Hearings may be public, closed (executive session), or both. A subcommittee, after considering a bill, reports to the full committee its recommendations for action and any proposed amendments.

The full committee then votes on its recommendation to the House or Senate. This is called "ordering a bill reported." Occasionally a committee may order a bill reported unfavorably; most of the time a report, submitted by the chairman of the committee to the House or Senate, calls for favorable action on the legislation since the committee can effectively "kill" legislation by simply failing to take any action.

When a committee sends a bill to the chamber floor, it explains its reasons in a written statement, called a report, which accompanies the bill. Often committee members opposing a measure issue a dissenting minority report.

Frequently, the committee proposes amendments to the bill. If they are substantial and the legislation is complicated, the committee may order a "clean bill" introduced, which will embody the proposed amendments. The original bill then is put aside and the "clean bill," with a new number, is reported to the floor.



The chamber must approve, alter, or reject the committee amendments before the bill itself can be put to a vote.

Floor Action

After a bill is reported back to the house where it originated, it is placed on the calendar.

There are five legislative calendars in the House, issued in one cumulating calendar titled Calendars of the United States House of Representatives and History of Legislation. The House Calendars are:

The Union Calendar to which are referred bills raising revenues, general appropriation bills and any measures directly or indirectly appropriating money or property. It is the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

The House Calendar to which are referred all bills of a public character not raising revenue nor appropriating money or property.

The Consent Calendar to which are referred bills of a noncontroversial nature that are passed without debate when the Consent Calendar is called on the first and third Mondays of each month.

The Private Calendar to which are referred bills for relief in the nature of claims against the United States or private immigration bills that are passed without debate when the Private Calendar is called the first and third Tuesdays of each month.

The Discharge Calendar to which are referred motions to discharge committees when the necessary 219 signatures are signed to a discharge petition.

There is only one legislative calendar in the Senate and one "executive calendar" for treaties and nominations presented to the Senate. When the Senate Calendar is called, each Senator is limited to five minutes debate on each bill.

DEBATE

A bill is brought to debate by varying procedures. If a routine measure, it may await the call of the calendar. If it is urgent or important, it can be taken up in the Senate by unanimous consent, or by a majority vote. The Policy Committee of the majority party in the Senate schedules the bills that it wants taken up for debate.

In the House, precedence is granted if a special rule is obtained from the Rules Committee. A request for a special rule is usually made by the chairman of the committee that favorably reported the bill, supported by the bill's sponsor and other committee members. The request, considered by the Rules Committee in the same fashion that other committees consider legislative measures, is in the form of a resolution providing for immediate consideration of the bill. The Rules Committee reports the resolution to the House where it is debated and voted upon in the same fashion as regular bills. The resolutions providing special rules are important because they specify how long the bill may be debated and whether it may be amended from the floor. If floor amendment is banned, the bill is considered under a "closed rule" which permits only members of the committee that first reported the measure to the House to alter its language, subject to chamber acceptance.

When a bill is debated under an "open rule," amendments may be offered from the floor. Committee amendments are always taken up first, but may be changed, as may all amendments up to the second degree, i.e., a changed amendment cannot be further altered. Substitute motions, however, are permissible.

Duration of debate in the House depends on whether the bill is under discussion by the House proper or before the House when it is sitting as the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union. In the former, the amount of time for debate is determined either by special rule or is allocated with an hour for each Member if the measure is under consideration without a rule. In the Committee of the Whole the amount of time agreed on for general debate is equally divided between proponents and opponents. At the end of general discussion, the bill is read section by section for amendment. Debate on an amendment is limited to five minutes each for supporters and opponents.

Senate debate is usually unlimited. It can be halted only by unanimous consent or by "cloture," which requires a two-thirds vote.

The House sits as the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union when it first considers any tax measure or legislation dealing with public appropriations. It can also resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole if a Member moves to do so and the motion is carried. The Speaker appoints a Member to serve as the Chairman. The rules of the House permit the Committee of the Whole to meet with any 100 Members on the floor, and to amend and act on legislation with a quorum of the 100, within the time limitations mentioned previously. When the Committee of the Whole has acted it "rises," the Speaker returns as the presiding officer of the House and the Member appointed chairman of the Committee of the Whole reports the action of the Committee and its recommendations.

VOTES

Voting on bills may occur repeatedly before they are finally approved or rejected. The House votes both on the rule for the bill, and various amendments to it. Voting on amendments often is a more illuminating test of a bill's support than is the final tally. Sometimes Congressmen approve final passage of bills after vigorously supporting amendments which would have scuttled the legislation if adopted.

The House and Senate vote both by untabulated voice votes and a recorded roll call of their names, to which they answer "yea" or "nay." The House also uses a standing vote, called a division, and a teller vote, when Members file up the center aisle past counters. The Senate also has a division, or standing, vote. It does not employ the teller vote. House totals on division and teller votes are announced. Division vote totals in the Senate are not announced. Only a roll-call vote reveals the yea or nay vote of a Member.

After amendments to a bill have been voted upon, a vote may be taken on a motion to recommit the bill to committee. If carried, this vote removes the bill from the chamber's calendar. If the motion is unsuccessful, the bill then is "read for the third time." An actual reading usually is dispensed with, although an opponent of a bill can delay this move by objecting and asking for a full reading of an engrossed (certified in final form) copy of the bill. After the "third reading," the vote on final passage is taken.

The final action vote may be followed by a motion to reconsider, and this motion itself may be followed by a move to lay the motion on the table. Usually, those voting for the bill's passage vote for the tabling motion, thus safeguarding the final passage action. With that, the bill has been formally passed by the chamber. While a motion to reconsider a Senate vote is pending on a bill, the measure cannot be sent to the House. Once a bill has been passed by either chamber, it becomes, officially, an "act," though it continues generally to be referred to as a bill.

ACTION IN SECOND HOUSE

After a bill is passed it is sent to the other chamber. This body may then take one of several steps. It may pass the bill as is -- accepting the other chamber's amendments. It may send the bill to committee for scrutiny or alteration, or reject the entire bill, advising the other house of its actions. Or it may simply ignore the bill submitted while it continues work on its own version of the legislation. Frequently, one chamber may approve a version of a bill that is greatly at variance with the version already passed by the other house, and then substitute its amendments for the language of the other, retaining only the latter's bill designation.

Often the chamber makes only minor changes. If these are readily agreed to by the other house, the bill then is routed to the White House for signing. However, if the opposite chamber basically alters the bill submitted to it, the measure usually is "sent to conference." The chamber that has possession of the "papers" (engrossed bill, engrossed amendments, messages of transmittal) requests a conference and the other chamber agrees to it.

Conference

A conference undertakes to harmonize conflicting House and Senate versions of a legislative bill. The conference is staffed by interested senior Members, appointed by the presiding officers of the two houses, from the committees which managed the bills. This charges the Members of one house who are most familiar with the bill with the duty of maintaining their chamber's position in the face of amending actions by the conferees (or "managers") of the other house.

The number of conferees from each chamber may vary, the range usually being from three to nine Members in each group, depending upon the length or complexity of the legislation involved. There may be five Representatives and three Senators on the conference committee, or the reverse. But a majority vote controls the action of each group so that a larger representation does not give one chamber a voting advantage over the other chamber's conferees.

Theoretically, conferees are not allowed to write new legislation in reconciling the two versions before them, but this curb sometimes is by-passed. Many bills have been put into acceptable compromise form only after new language was provided by the conferees.

Frequently the ironing out of difficulties takes days or even weeks. Conferences on involved appropriations bills sometimes are particularly drawn out.

As a conference proceeds, conferees reconcile their differences, but generally they grant concessions only insofar as they remain sure that the chamber they represent will accept the compromises. Once in a while uncertainty over this, or the positive refusal of a chamber to back down on a disputed amendment, results in an impasse, and the bills die in conference even though each was approved by its sponsoring chamber.

Conferees sometimes go back to their respective chambers for further instructions, when they report certain portions in disagreement. Then the chamber concerned can either "recede and concur" in the amendment of the other house, or "insist on its amendment."

When the conferees have reached agreement, they prepare a conference report, explaining why they did -- or did not -- retain some amendments, and cut out others. The reports are the justifications to their respective houses of the actions of the conferees, and the explanations, in document form, must be submitted to each house. Conference reports, with an explanation by the House conferees, are always printed in the House. In the Senate an explanation is often made orally by one of the conferees.

The conference report must be approved by each house. Consequently, approval of the report is approval of the compromise bill worked out. In the order of voting on conference reports, the chamber which asked for a conference yields the other chamber the opportunity to vote first.

Final Steps

After a bill has been passed by both the House and Senate all of the original papers are sent to the enrolling clerk of the chamber in which the bill originated. He then prepares an enrolled bill which is printed on parchment paper. When this bill has been certified as correct by the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House, depending on which chamber originated the bill, it is signed first (no matter whether it originated in the Senate or House) by the Speaker of the House and then by the President of the Senate. It is next sent to the White House to await Presidential action.

If the President approves the bill he signs it, dates it and usually writes the word "approved" on the document. If he does not sign it within 10 days (Sundays excepted) and Congress is in session, the bill becomes law without his signature.

VETOES

However, should Congress adjourn before the 10 days expire, and the President has failed to sign the measure, it does not become law. This procedure is called the pocket veto. Occasionally a President vetoes a bill by refusing to sign it and returning it to the Congress with a message stating his reasons. The message is sent to the chamber which originated the bill. If no action is taken there on the message, the bill affected dies. Sometimes, however, Congress attempts to override the President's veto and enact the bill, "the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding." This requires a two-thirds vote of those present, who must number a quorum and vote by roll call.

Debate can precede this vote, with motions permitted to lay the message on the table, postpone action on it, or refer it to committee. If the President's veto is overridden by a two-thirds vote in both houses, the bill becomes law. Otherwise it is dead, and can be revived only by reintroduction and routing through the process all bills undergo.

When bills are passed finally and signed, or passed over a veto, they are given law numbers in numerical order as they become law. There are two series of numbers, one for public and one for private laws, starting at the number "1" for each two-year term of Congress. They are then identified by law number and by Congress -- i.e., Private Law 21, 86th Congress; Public Law 250, 86th Congress (or PL 86-250).

GLOSSARY OF CONGRESSIONAL TERMS

Act -- The term for legislation which has passed both houses of Congress and has been signed by the President or passed over his veto, thus becoming law.

Also, used technically for a bill that has been passed by one house and engrossed.

Adjournment sine die -- Adjournment without definitely fixing a day for reconvening; literally "adjournment without a day." Marks the official end of a Congressional session.

Adjournment to a Day Certain -- Adjournment under a motion or resolution which fixes the next time of meeting. Neither house can adjourn for more than three days without the concurrence of the other. A session of Congress is not ended by adjournment to a day certain.

Amendment -- Proposal of a Congressman to alter the language or stipulations in a bill or act. It is usually printed, debated, and voted upon in the same manner as a bill.

Appeal -- A Congressman's challenge of a ruling or decision made by the presiding officer of the Senate or House. The Congressman appeals to Members of the chamber to override the decision. If carried by a majority vote, the appeal nullifies the chair's ruling.

Appropriation Bill -- Grants the actual monies approved by authorization bills, but not necessarily to the total permissible under the authorization bill. Normally an appropriation bill originates in the House, and is not acted on until its authorization measure is enacted. In addition to general appropriation bills, there are two specialized types. (See Deficiency and Supplemental.)

Authorization Bill -- Authorizes a program, specifies its general aim and conduct, and puts a ceiling on monies that can be used to finance it. Usually enacted before appropriation bill is passed. (See Contract Authorization.)

Bills -- Most legislative proposals before Congress are in the form of bills, and are designated as HR (House of Representatives) or S (Senate) according to the house in which they originate and by a number assigned in the order in which they were introduced, from the beginning of each two-year Congressional term. "Public bills" deal with general questions, and become Public Laws if approved by Congress and signed by the President. "Private bills" deal with individual matters such as claims against the government, immigration and naturalization cases, land titles, etc., and become Private Laws if approved and signed.

The introduction of a bill, and its referral to an appropriate committee for action, follows the process given in "How a Bill Is Passed." (See also Concurrent Resolution, Joint Resolution, Resolution, in this Glossary.)

Bills Introduced -- In the Senate, any number of Senators may join in introducing a single bill. In the House, no more than one Member's name may appear on a bill. The result is that in the House many duplicate bills are introduced, only one of which is passed.

Many bills in reality are committee bills and are introduced under the name of the chairman of the committee or subcommittee as a formality. All appropriation bills fall into this category, as do many other bills, particularly those dealing with complicated, technical subjects. A committee frequently holds hearings on a number of related bills, and may agree on one of them or on an entirely new bill. (See Clean Bill and By Request.)

Bills Referred --When introduced, a bill is referred to the committee which has jurisdiction over the subject with which the bill is concerned. The appropriate reference for bills is spelled out in the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. Bills are referred by the Speaker in the House and the Presiding Officer in the Senate. Appeals may be made from their decisions.

Budget -- The document sent to Congress by the President in January of each year estimating government revenue and expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year and recommending appropriations in detail. The President's Budget Message forms the basis for Congressional hearings and legislation on the year's appropriations.

By Request -- A phrase used when a Senator or Representative introduces a bill at the request of an executive agency or private organization but does not necessarily endorse the legislation.

Calendar -- An agenda or list of pending business before committees or either chamber. The House uses five legislative calendars. (See Consent, Discharge, House, Private and Union Calendar.)

In the Senate, all legislative matters reported from committee go on a single calendar. They are listed there in order, but may be called up irregularly by the Majority Leader either by a motion to do so, or by obtaining the unanimous consent of the Senate. Frequently the Minority Leader is consulted to assure unanimous consent. Only cloture can limit debate on bills thus called up. (See Call of the Calendar.)

The Senate also uses one non-legislative calendar, for treaties, etc. (See Executive Calendar.)

Calendar Wednesday -- In the House on Wednesdays, committees may be called in the order in which they appear in Rule X of the House Manual, for the purpose of bringing up any of their bills from the House or the Union Calendars, except bills which are privileged. General debate is limited to two hours. Bills called up from the Union Calendar are considered in Committee of the Whole. Calendar Wednesday is not observed during the last two weeks of a session, and may be dispensed with at other times -- by a two-thirds vote. It usually is dispensed with.

Call of the Calendar -- Senate bills which are not brought up for debate by a motion or a unanimous consent agreement are brought before the Senate for action when the calendar listing them in order is "called." Bills considered in this fashion are usually non-controversial and debate is limited to five minutes for each Senator on a bill or on amendments to it.

Chamber -- Meeting place for the total membership of either the House or the Senate, as distinguished from the respective committee rooms.

Clean Bill -- Frequently after a committee has finished a major revision of a bill, one of the committee members, usually the chairman, will assemble the changes plus what is left of the original bill into a new measure and introduce it as a "clean bill." The new measure, which carries a new number, is then sent to the floor for consideration. This often is a timesaver, as committee-recommended changes do not have to be considered one at a time by the chamber.

Clerk of the House -- Chief administrative officer of the House of Representatives with duties corresponding to those of the Secretary of the Senate. (See Secretary of the Senate.)

Cloture -- The process by which debate can be limited in the Senate, other than by unanimous consent. A motion for cloture can apply to any measure before the Senate, including, under a 1959 revision, a proposal to change the chamber's rules. It requires 16 Senators' signatures for introduction and the votes of two-thirds of the Senators present and voting. It is put to a roll-call vote one hour after the Senate meets on the second day following introduction of the motion. If voted, cloture limits each Senator to one hour of debate.

Committee -- A subdivision of the House or Senate which prepares legislation for action by the parent chamber, or makes investigations as directed by the parent chamber. There are several types of committees. (See Standing, and Select or Special). Most standing committees are divided into subcommittees, which study legislation, hold hearings, and report their recommendations to the full committee. Only the full committee can report legislation for action by the House or Senate.

Committee of the Whole -- The working title of what is formally "The Committee of the Whole House (of Representatives) on the State of the Union." Unlike other committees, it has no fixed membership. It is comprised of any 100 or more House members who participate -- on the floor of the chamber -- in debating or altering legislation before the body. Such measures, however, must first have passed through the regular committees and be on the calendar.

Technically, the Committee of the Whole considers only bills directly or indirectly appropriating money, authorizing appropriations, or involving taxes or charges on the public. Actually, the Committee of the Whole often considers other types of legislation. Because the Committee of the Whole need number only 100 Congressmen, a quorum is more readily attained, and business is expedited. None of the group's votes can be the time-consuming roll calls which require yeas and nays for the record.

When the full House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole, it supplants the Speaker with a "chairman." The measure is debated or amended, with non-roll-call votes as needed. When the Committee completes its action on the measure, it dissolves itself by "rising." The Speaker returns, and the full House hears the erstwhile chairman of the committee report that group's recommendations. The full House then acts upon them.

At this time Members may demand a roll-call vote on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

Concurrent Resolution -- A concurrent resolution, designated H Con Res or S Con Res, must be passed by both houses but does not require the signature of the President and does not have the force of law. Concurrent resolutions generally are used to make or amend rules applicable to both houses or to express the sentiment of the two houses. A concurrent resolution, for example, is used to fix the time for adjournment of a Congress. It might also be used to convey the congratulations of Congress to another country on the anniversary of its independence.

Conference -- A meeting between the representatives of the House and Senate to reconcile differences between the two houses over provisions of a bill. Members of the conference committee are appointed by the Speaker and the President of the Senate and are called "managers" for their respective chambers. A majority of the managers for each house must reach agreement on the provisions of the bill (often a compromise between the versions of the two chambers) before it can be sent up for floor action in the form of a "conference report." There it cannot be amended, and if not approved by both chambers, the bill goes back to conference. Elaborate rules govern the conduct of the conferences. All bills which are passed by House and Senate in slightly different form need not be sent to conference; either chamber may "concur" in the other's amendments. (See Custody of the Papers.)

Congressional Record -- The daily, printed account of proceedings in both House and Senate chambers, with debate, statements, and the like reported verbatim. Committee activities are not covered, excepting their reports to the parent body. Highlights of legislative and committee action are embodied in a Digest section of the Record, and Congressmen are entitled to have their extraneous remarks printed in its Appendix. They may edit and revise remarks made on the floor, and frequently do, so that quotations reported by the press are not always found in the Record.

Consent Calendar -- Members of the House may place on this calendar any bill on the Union or House calendar which is considered to be non-controversial. Bills on the consent calendar are normally called on the first and third Mondays of each month. On the first occasion when a bill is called in this manner, consideration may be blocked by the objection of any Member. On the second time, if there are three objections, the bill is stricken from the consent calendar; if less than three Members object, the bill is given immediate consideration.

A bill on the consent calendar may be postponed in another way. A Member may ask that the measure be passed over "without prejudice." In that case, no objection is recorded against the bill, and its status on the consent calendar remains unchanged.

A bill stricken from the consent calendar remains on the Union or House calendar.

Contract Authorizations -- Found in both authorization and appropriation bills, these authorizations are stop-gap provisions which permit the Federal Government to let contracts or obligate itself for future payments from funds not yet appropriated. The assumption is that funds will be available for payment when contracted debts come due.

Correcting the Record -- Rules prohibit Members from changing their votes after the result has been announced. But frequently, hours, days, or months after a vote has been taken, a Member announces that he was "incorrectly recorded" and requests -- and almost always receives -- unanimous consent to have the vote corrected in the permanent edition of the Congressional Record. This occurs more frequently in the House than in the Senate. Errors in the text of the Record may be corrected in the same manner.

Custody of the Papers -- To reconcile differences on a bill between the House and Senate, a conference may be arranged. The chamber in "custody of the papers" -- the engrossed bill, engrossed amendments, messages of transmittal -- is the only body empowered to request the conference. That body then has the advantage of acting last on the conference report when it is submitted.

Deficiency Appropriation -- An appropriation to cover the difference between an agency's regular appropriation and the amount deemed necessary for it to operate for the full fiscal year. Regular appropriations normally are passed in one fiscal year for the ensuing fiscal year. Deficiency appropriations are for use in the same fiscal year in which they are passed. (See Supplemental Appropriation.)

Dilatory Motion -- A motion, usually made upon a technical point, for the purpose of killing time and preventing action on a bill. The rules oulaw dilatory motions, but enforcement is largely within the discretion of the presiding officer.

Discharge a Committee-- Relieve a committee from jurisdiction over a measure before it. This is rarely a successful procedure, attempted more often in the House than in the Senate.

In the House, if a committee does not report a bill within 30 days after the bill was referred to it, any Member may file a discharge motion. This motion, treated as a petition, needs the signatures of 219 members. After the required signatures have been obtained, there is a delay of seven days. Then, on the second and fourth Monday of each month, except during the last six days of a session, any Member who has signed the petition may be recognized to move that the committee be discharged. Debate on the motion to discharge is limited to 20 minutes, and, if the motion is carried, consideration of the bill becomes a matter of high privilege.

If a resolution to consider a bill (see Rule) is held up in the Rules Committee for more than seven legislative days, any Member may enter a motion to discharge the Committee. The motion is handled like any other discharge petition in the House.

Occasionally, to expedite non-controversial legislative business, a committee is discharged upon unanimous consent of the House, and a petition is not required. (For Senate procedure, see Discharge Resolution.)

Discharge Calendar -- The House calendar to which motions to discharge committees are referred when they have the necessary 219 signatures and are awaiting action.

Discharge Petition -- In the House, a motion to discharge a committee from considering a bill. The motion, or petition, requires signatures of 219 House members. (See Discharge a Committee.)

Discharge Resolution -- In the Senate, a special motion any Senator may introduce to relieve a committee from consideration of a bill before it. The resolution can be called up on motion for approval or disapproval, in the same manner as other matters of Senate business. (For House procedure, see Discharge a Committee.)

Division vote -- Same as Standing Vote. (See below.)

Enacting Clause-- Key phrase in bills saying, "Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives . . ." A successful motion to strike it from legislation kills the measure.

Engrossed Bill -- The final copy of a bill as passed by one chamber, with the text as amended by floor action and certified to by the Clerk of the House or the Secretary of the Senate.

Enrolled Bill -- The final copy of a bill which has been passed in identical form by both chambers. It is certified to by an officer of the house of origin (House Clerk or Senate Secretary) and then sent on for signatures of the House Speaker, the Senate President, and the U.S. President. An enrolled bill is printed on parchment.

Executive Calendar -- This is an additional, non-legislative calendar, in the Senate, on which Presidential documents such as treaties and nominations are listed.

Executive Document -- A document, usually a treaty, sent to the Senate by the President for consideration or ratification. These are identified for each session of Congress as Executive A, 84th Congress, 1st Session; Executive B, etc. They are referred to committee in the same manner as other measures. Unlike legislative documents, however, treaties do not die at the end of a Congress, but remain "live" proposals until acted on by the Senate or withdrawn by the President.

Executive Resolution -- A Senate resolution dealing with executive business rather than legislative, i.e., with the handling of a treaty or nomination. A motion to discharge a committee from consideration of a nomination would be made in an Executive Resolution, instead of an ordinary Senate Resolution.

Executive Session -- Meeting of a Senate or a House committee which only the group's members are privileged to attend. Frequently witnesses appear before committees meeting in executive session, and other Congressmen may be invited, but the public and press are not allowed.

Expenditures -- The actual spending of money as distinguished from the appropriation of it. Expenditures are made by the disbursing officers of the Administration; appropriations are made only by Congress. The two are rarely identical in any fiscal year; expenditures may represent money appropriated one, two or more years previously.

Filibuster -- A time-delaying tactic used by a minority in an effort to prevent a vote on a bill which probably would pass if brought to a vote. The most common method is to take advantage of the Senate's rules permitting unlimited debate, but other forms of parliamentary maneuvering may be used. The stricter rules in the House make filibusters more difficult, but they are attempted from time to time through devices such as repeated demands for quorum calls.

Fiscal Year -- Financial operations of the Government are carried out in a 12-month fiscal year, beginning on July 1 and ending on June 30. The fiscal year carries the date of the calendar year in which it ends.

Floor Manager -- A Member, usually representing sponsors of a bill, who attempts to steer it through debate and revision to a final vote in the chamber. Floor managers are frequently chairmen or ranking members of the committee that reported the bill. Managers are responsible for apportioning the time granted supporters of the bill for debating it. The Minority Leader or the ranking minority member of the committee often apportions time for the opposition.

Frank -- A Congressman's facsimile signature on envelopes, used in lieu of stamps for his official outgoing mail, thus postage-free. Also the privilege of sending mail postage-free.

Germane -- Pertaining to the subject matter of the measure at hand. All House amendments must be germane to the bill. The Senate requires that amendments be germane only when they are to general appropriation bills, to those being considered under cloture, or often when proceeding under an agreement to limit debate.

Hearings -- Committee sessions for hearing witnesses. At hearings on legislation, witnesses usually include specialists, government officials and spokesmen for persons affected by the bills under study. Hearings related to special investigations bring forth a variety of witnesses. Committees sometimes use their subpena power to summon reluctant witnesses. The public and press may attend "open" hearings, but are barred from "closed" or "executive" hearings.

The committee announces its hearings, from one day to many weeks in advance, and may invite certain persons to testify. Persons who request time to testify may be turned down by the committee but most requests are honored.

Hopper -- Box on House Clerk's desk where bills are deposited on introduction.

House -- The House of Representatives, as distinct from the Senate, although each body is a "house" of Congress.

House Calendar -- Listing for action by the House of Representatives of public bills which do not directly or indirectly appropriate money or raise revenue.

Immunity -- Constitutional privilege of Congressmen to make verbal statements on the floor and in committee for which they cannot be sued or arrested for slander or libel. Also, freedom from arrest while traveling to or from sessions of Congress or on official business. Congressmen in this status may be arrested only for treason, felonies or a breach of the peace, as defined by Congressional manuals.

Joint Committee -- A committee composed of a specified number of members of both House and Senate. Usually a joint committee is investigative in nature. There are a few standing joint committees, such as the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy and the Joint Economic Committee.

Joint Resolution -- A joint resolution, designated H J Res or S J Res, requires the approval of both houses and the signature of the President, just as a bill does, and has the force of law if approved. There is no real difference between a bill and a joint resolution. The latter is generally used in dealing with limited matters, such as a single appropriation for a specific purpose or the granting of Congressional approval for executive actions -- for example, international executive agreements.

Joint resolutions also are used to propose amendments to the Constitution. These do not require Presidential signature, but become a part of the Constitution when three-fourths of the states have ratified them.

Journal -- The official record of the proceedings of the House and Senate. The Journal records the actions taken in each chamber, but unlike the Congressional Record, it does not include the verbatim report of speeches, debate, etc.

Law -- An Act of Congress which has been signed by the President, or passed over his veto by the Congress. Laws are listed numerically by Congress; for example, the Hawaii statehood bill (S 50) became Public Law 86-3.

Legislative Budget -- An appraisal by Congress of Federal spending and income for the year ahead. The Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 (CQ Almanac, Vol. II, 1946, pp. 362, 531) directs four committees -- House Appropriations and Ways and Means and Senate Appropriations and Finance -- to study the President's budget recommendations each year, then by Feb. 15, report their own recommendations. The law directs that the report be accompanied by a concurrent resolution adopting the budget and fixing a limit on the year's appropriations. In practice, however, Congress has not complied with this law.

Legislative Day -- The "day" extending from the time either house meets after an adjournment until the time it next adjourns. Because the House normally adjourns from day to day, legislative days and calendar days usually coincide. But in the Senate, a legislative day may, and frequently does, extend over several calendar days.

Lobby -- A group seeking to influence the passage or defeat of legislation. Originally the term referred to persons frequenting the lobbies or corridors of legislative chambers in order to speak to lawmakers.

The exact definition of a lobby and the activity of lobbying is a matter of opinion. By some definitions, lobbying is limited to attempts at direct influence by personal interview and persuasion. Under other definitions, lobbying includes attempts at indirect influence, such as stirring members of a group to write or visit Congressmen, or attempting to create a climate of opinion favorable to a desired legislative action.

The right to attempt to influence legislation is based on the First Amendment to the Constitution, which says Congress shall make no law abridging the right of the people "to petition the government for a redress of grievances."

Majority Leader -- Chief strategist and floor spokesman for the party in nominal control in either chamber. He is elected by his party colleagues and is virtually program director for his chamber, since he usually speaks for its majority.

Majority Whip -- In effect, the assistant majority leader, in House or Senate. His job is to help marshal majority forces in support of party strategy.

Manual -- The official handbook in each house prescribing its organization, procedures and operations in detail. The Senate Manual contains standing rules, orders, laws and resolutions affecting Senate business; the House Manual is the equivalent for the lower chamber. Both volumes contain previous codes under which Congress functioned and from which it continues to derive precedents. Committee powers are outlined. The rules set forth in the Manuals may be changed by elaborate chamber actions also specified by the Manuals.

Marking up a Bill -- Going through a measure, usually in committee, taking it section by section, revising language, penciling in new phrases, etc. If the bill is extensively revised, the new version may be introduced as a separate bill, with a new number. (See Clean Bill.)

Memorial -- A request for Congressional opposition or an objection from an organization or citizens' group to particular legislation or government practice under the purview of Congress. All communications, both supporting and opposing legislation, from state legislatures are embodied in memorials. They are referred to appropriate committees unless the legislation dealt with in the memorial has been reported to the Senate in which case the memorial is placed on the table. It can be called up for consideration at the time the bill is read for amendments. (See Petition)

Minority Leader -- Floor leader for minority party. (See Majority Leader.)

Minority Whip -- Performs duties of whip for minority party. (See Majority Whip.)

Morning Hour -- The time set aside at the beginning of each legislative day for the consideration of regular routine business. The "hour" is of indefinite duration in the House, where it is rarely used. In the Senate it is the first two hours of a session following an adjournment, as distinguished from a recess. The morning hour can be terminated earlier if the morning business has been completed. This business includes such matters as messages from the President, communications from the heads of departments, messages from the House, the presentation of petitions and memorials, reports of standing and select committees, and the introduction of bills and resolutions.

During the first hour of the morning hour in the Senate, no motion to proceed to the consideration of any bill on the calendar is in order except by unanimous consent. During the second hour, motions can be made but must be decided without debate.

Motion -- Request by a Congressman for any one of a wide array of parliamentary actions. He "moves" for a certain procedure, or the consideration of a measure or a vote, etc. The precedence of motions, and whether they are debatable, is set forth in the House and Senate Manuals.

Nominations -- Appointments to office by the executive branch of the government, subject to Senate confirmation. Although most nominations win quick Senate approval, some are controversial and become the topic of hearings and debate. Sometimes Senators object to appointees for patronage reasons -- for example, when a nomination to a local federal job is made without consulting the Senators of the state concerned. Then a Senator may use the stock objection that the nominee is "personally obnoxious" to him. Usually other Senators join in blocking such an appointment out of courtesy to their colleague.

One Minute Speeches -- Addresses by House Members at the beginning of a legislative day. The speeches may cover any subject, but are limited strictly to one minute's duration.

Override a Veto -- If the President disapproves a bill and sends it back to Congress with his objections, Congress may override his veto by a two-thirds vote in each chamber. The Constitution requires a yea-and-nay roll call. The question put to each house is: "Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?" (See also Pocket Veto and Veto.)

Pair -- A "gentlemen's agreement" between two lawmakers on opposite sides to withhold their votes on roll calls so their absence from Congress will not affect the outcome of record voting. If passage of the measure requires a two-thirds majority, a pair would require two Members favoring the action to one opposed to it.

Two kinds of pairs -- special and general -- are used; neither is counted in vote totals. The names of lawmakers pairing on a given vote and their stands, if known, are printed in the Congressional Record.

The special pair applies to one or a series of roll-call votes on the same subject. On special pairs lawmakers usually specify how they would have voted.

A general pair in the Senate, now rarely used in the chamber, applies to all votes on which the Members pairing are on opposite sides, and it lasts for the length of time pairing Senators agree on. It usually does not specify a Senator's stand on a given vote.

The general pair in the House differs from the other pairs. No agreement is involved and the pair does not tie up votes. A Representative expecting to be absent may notify the House Clerk he wishes to make a "general" pair. His name then is paired arbitrarily with that of another Member desiring a general pair, and the list is printed in the Congressional Record. He may or may not be paired with a Member taking the opposite position. General pairs in the House give no indication of how a Congressman would have voted. (See Record Vote and Stand.)

Petition -- A request or plea sent to one or both chambers from an organization or private-citizens group asking support of particular legislation or favorable consideration of a matter not yet receiving Congressional attention. They are referred to appropriate committees and considered or not according to committee decision. (See Memorial)

Pocket Veto -- The act of the President in withholding his approval of a bill after Congress has adjourned. When Congress is in session, a bill becomes law without the President's signature if he does not act upon it within ten days, excluding Sundays, from the time he gets it. But if Congress adjourns within that ten-day period, the bill is killed without the President's formal veto.

Point of Order -- An objection raised by a Congressman that the chamber is departing from rules governing its conduct of business. The objector cites the rule violated, the chair sustaining his objection if correctly made. Order is restored by the chair's suspending proceedings of the chamber until it conforms to the prescribed "order of business." Members sometimes raise a "point of no order" -- when there is noise and disorderly conduct in the chamber.

President of the Senate -- Presiding officer of the upper chamber, normally the Vice President of the U.S. In his absence, a President pro tempore (President for the time being) presides.

President pro tempore -- The chief officer of the Senate in the absence of the Vice President. He is elected by his fellow Senators. The recent practice has been to elect to the office the Senator of the majority party with longest continuous service.

Previous Question -- In this sense, a "question" is an "issue" before the House for a vote and the issue is "previous" when some other topic has superseded it in the attention of the chamber. A motion for the previous question, when carried, has the effect of cutting off all extraneous debate and forcing a vote on the subject originally at hand. If, however, the previous question is moved and carried before there has been any debate on the subject at hand and the subject is debatable, then 40 minutes of debate is allowed before the vote. The previous question is sometimes moved on a non-debatable question in order to prevent amendments. The motion for the previous question is a debate-limiting device and is not in order in the Senate.

Private Calendar -- Private House bills dealing with individual matters such as claims against the government, immigration and naturalization cases, land titles, etc. When it is before the chamber, two Members may block a private bill, which then is recommitted to committee.

Backers of a private bill thus recommitted have another recourse. The measure can be put into an "omnibus claims bill" -- several private bills rolled into one. As with any bill, no part of an omnibus claims bill may be deleted without a vote. When a private bill goes back to the floor in this form, it can be defeated only by a majority of those present.

Privilege -- Privilege relates to the rights of Congressmen and to the relative priority of the motions and actions they may make in their respective chambers. The two are distinct. "Privileged questions" concern legislative business. "Questions of privilege" concern legislators themselves. (See below.)

Privileged Questions -- The order in which bills, motions and other legislative measures may be considered by Congress is governed by strict priorities. A motion to table, for instance, is more privileged than a motion to recommit. Thus, a motion to recommit can be superseded by a motion to table, and a vote would be forced on the latter motion only. A motion to adjourn, however, would take precedence over this one, and is thus considered of the "highest privilege."

Pro Forma Amendment -- See Strike Out the Last Word.

Questions of Privilege -- These are matters affecting Members of Congress individually or collectively.

Questions affecting the rights, safety, dignity and integrity of proceedings of the House or Senate as a whole are questions of privilege of the House or Senate, as the case may be.

Congressmen singly involve questions of "personal privilege." A Member's rising to a question of personal privilege is given precedence over almost all other proceedings. An annotation in the House Rules points out that the privilege of the Member rests primarily on the Constitution, which gives him a conditional immunity from arrest and an unconditional freedom to speak in the House.

Quorum -- The number of Members whose presence is necessary for the transaction of business. In the Senate and House it is a majority of the membership (when there are no vacancies, this is 51 in the Senate and 219 in the House). A quorum is 100 in the Committee of the Whole House. If a point of order is made that a quorum is not present, the only business in order is either a motion to adjourn or a motion to direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to request the attendance of absentees.

Readings of Bills -- Traditional parliamentary law required bills to be read three times before they were passed. This custom is of little modern significance except in rare instances. Normally the bill is considered to have its first reading when it is introduced and printed, by title, in the Congressional Record. Its second reading comes when floor consideration begins. (This is the most likely point at which there is an actual reading of the bill, if there is any.) The third reading (usually by title) takes place when action has been completed on amendments.

Recess -- Distinguished from adjournment in that a recess does not end a legislative day and therefore does not interfere with unfinished business. The rules in each house set forth certain matters to be taken up and disposed of at the beginning of each legislative day. The House, which operates under much stricter rules than the Senate, usually adjourns from day to day. The Senate often recesses.

Recommit to Committee -- A simple motion, made on the floor after deliberation on a bill, to return it to the committee which reported it. If approved, recommittal usually is considered a death blow to the bill. In the House a motion to recommit can be made only by a Member opposed to the bill, and in recognizing a Member to make the motion, the Speaker gives the minority party preference over the majority.

A motion to recommit may include instructions to the committee to report the bill again with specific amendments or by a certain date. Or the instructions may be to make a particular study with no definite deadline for final action.

Reconsider a Vote -- A motion to reconsider the vote by which an action was taken has the effect, until it is disposed of, of suspending the action. In the Senate the motion can be made only by a Member who voted on the prevailing side of the original question, or by a Member who did not vote at all. In the House it can be made only by a Member on the prevailing side.

A common practice after close votes in the Senate is a motion to reconsider followed by a motion to table the motion to reconsider. On this motion to table, Senators vote as they voted on the original question to enable the motion to table to prevail. The matter is then finally closed and further motions to reconsider are not entertained. In the House, as a routine precaution, a motion to reconsider usually is made every time a measure is passed. Such a motion almost always is tabled immediately, thus shutting off the possibility of future reconsideration except by unanimous consent.

Motions to reconsider must be entered in the Senate within the next two days of actual session after the original vote has been taken. In the House they must be entered either on the same day or on the next succeeding day the House is in session.

Record Vote -- This is a roll call of the entire chamber membership, to which each Member on the floor must answer "yea", "nay", or, if he does not wish to vote, "present." The Constitution requires yea-and-nay votes on the question of overriding a veto. In other cases, they can be obtained by the demand of one-fifth of the Members present. In the House, the yeas and nays are required automatically whenever a Member objects to a non-record vote taken when a quorum was not present, if the question is one which requires a quorum. The yeas and nays are not taken in the Committee of the Whole.

Report -- Both a verb and a noun, as a Congressional term. A committee which has been examining a bill referred to it by the parent chamber "reports" its finding and recommendations to the chamber when the committee returns the measure. The process is called "reporting" a bill.

A "report" is the document setting forth the committee's explanation of its action. House and Senate reports are numbered separately and are designated S Rept or H Rept. Conference reports are numbered and designated in the same way as regular House reports.

Most reports favor a bill's passage. Adverse reports are occasionally submitted, but more often, when a committee disapproves a bill, it simply fails to report it at all. When a committee report is not unanimous, the dissenting committeemen may file a statement of their views, called Minority Views and referred to as a Minority Report. Sometimes a bill is reported without recommendation.

Rescission -- An item in an appropriation bill rescinding, or cancelling, funds previously appropriated but not spent.

Resolution -- A simple resolution, designated H Res or S Res, deals with matters entirely within the prerogatives of one house or the other. It requires neither passage by the other chamber nor approval by the President, and does not have the force of law. Most resolutions deal with the rules of one house. They also are used to express the sentiments of a single house, as condolences to the family of a deceased member or to give "advice" on foreign policy or other executive business. (Also see Concurrent and Joint Resolutions.)

Rider -- A provision tacked on to a bill which its sponsor hopes to get through more easily by including in other legislation. Riders become law if the bills embodying them do. Riders providing for legislation in appropriations bills are outstanding examples, though technically they are banned.

Rule -- The term has two specific Congressional meanings. A rule may be a standing order governing the conduct of House or Senate business and listed in the chamber's book of rules. The rules deal with duties of officers, order of business, admission to the floor, voting procedures, etc.

In the House, a rule also may be a decision made by its Rules Committee about the handling of a particular bill on the floor. The Committee may determine under which standing rule a bill shall be considered, or it may provide a "special rule" in the form of a resolution. If the resolution is adopted by the House, the temporary rule becomes as valid as any standing rule, and lapses only after action has been completed on the measure to which it pertains.

A special rule sets the time limit on general debate. It may also waive points of order against provisions of the bill in question or against specified amendments intended to be proposed to the bill. It may even forbid all amendments or all amendments except, in some cases, those proposed by the legislative committee which handled the bill. In this instance it is known as a "closed" or "gag" rule as opposed to an "open" rule which puts no limitation on floor action, thus leaving the bill open to alteration. (See Suspend the Rules.)

Secretary of the Senate -- Chief administrative officer of the Senate responsible for direction of duties of Senate employees, education of pages, administration of oaths, receipt of registration of lobbyists and other activities necessary for the continuing operation of the Senate.

Select or Special Committee -- A committee set up for a special purpose and a limited time by resolution of either House or Senate. Most special committees are investigative in nature.

Senatorial Courtesy -- Sometimes referred to as "the courtesy of the Senate," it is a general practice without written rule applied to consideration of executive nominations. In practice, generally, it means nominations from a state are not to be confirmed unless they have been approved by the Senators of the President's party of that state, with other Senators following their lead in the attitude they take toward such nominations.

Sine Die -- See Adjournment sine die.

Slip Laws -- The first official publication of a bill that has been enacted into law. Each is published separately in unbound single-sheet or pamphlet form. It usually takes two to three days from the date of Presidential approval to the time when slip laws become available.

Speaker -- The presiding officer of the House of Representatives, elected by its Members.

Special Session --A session of Congress after it has adjourned sine die, completing its regular session. Special sessions are convened by the President of the U.S. under his Constitutional powers.

Stand -- A lawmaker's position, for or against, on a given issue or vote. He can make known his stand on a roll-call vote by answering "yea" or "nay," by "pairing" for or against, or by "announcing" his position to the House or Senate. Members also may go on record by answering the Congressional Quarterly Poll of unrecorded Congressmen on roll calls. (See Pair, and Record Vote, above.)

Standing Committee -- A group permanently provided for by House or Senate rules. The standing committees at present are specified by the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, which broadly defines their respective jurisdictions.

Standing Vote -- A non-record vote used in both House and Senate. A standing vote, also called a division vote, is taken as follows: Members in favor of a proposal stand and are counted by the presiding officer; then Members opposed stand and are counted. There is no record of how individual Members voted. In the House, the presiding officer announces the number for and against. In the Senate, usually only the result is announced.

Statutes-at-Large -- A chronological arrangement of the laws enacted in each session of Congress. Though indexed, the laws are not arranged by subject matter nor is there an indication of how they affect previous law. (See U.S. Code.)

Strike From the Record -- Remarks made on the House floor may offend some Member, who moves that the offending words be "taken down" for the Speaker's cognizance, and then expunged from the verbatim report to be carried in the Congressional Record.

Strike Out the Last Word -- A move whereby House Members are entitled to speak for a fixed time on a measure then being debated by the chamber. A Member gains recognition from the chair by moving to strike out the last word of the amendment or section of the bill then under consideration. The motion is pro forma, and customarily requires no vote.

Strike the Enacting Clause -- Each bill before Congress starts off with the phrase: "Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That . . ." A Member wishing to kill a bill frequently will move from the floor to "strike the enacting clause" -- that first sentence -- from the bill. If the action carries and the enacting clause is stricken, the bill cannot, of course, be enacted into law.

Substitute -- A motion, an amendment, or an entire bill introduced in place of pending business. Passage of a substitute measure kills the original measure by supplanting it. A substitute may be amended.

Supplemental Appropriation -- An appropriation supplemental to the regular appropriation, but not a deficiency measure. Supplemental appropriations normally are passed after the regular appropriation, but supposedly before the fiscal year to which they apply. Deficiencies are passed in the same fiscal year to which they apply. This distinction is not always adhered to.

Suspend the Rules -- Often a time-saving procedure for passing bills in the House. The wording of the motion, which may be made by any Member recognized by the Speaker, is: "I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (HR 000)..." A favorable vote by two-thirds of those present is required for passage. Debate is limited to 40 minutes and no amendments from the floor are permitted. If a two-thirds favorable vote is not attained, the bill may be considered later under regular procedures.

Table a Bill -- The motion to "lay on the table" is not debatable in either house, and is usually a method of making a final, adverse disposition of a matter. In the Senate, however, different language is sometimes used. The motion is worded to let a bill "lie on the table," perhaps for subsequent "picking up." This motion is more flexible, merely keeping the bill pending for later action, if desired.

Teller Vote -- In the House, Members file past tellers and are counted as for or against a measure, but they are not recorded individually. The teller vote is not used in the Senate. In the House, tellers are ordered upon demand of one-fifth of a quorum. This is 44 in the House, 20 in Committee of the Whole.

Treaties -- Executive proposals which must be submitted to the Senate for approval of two-thirds of the Senators present. Before they act on such foreign policy matters, Senators may refer them to committee for scrutiny. Treaties are read three times and debated in the chamber much as are legislative proposals.

Unanimous Consent -- Synonymous with Without Objection. (See below.)

Union Calendar -- Bills which directly or indirectly appropriate money or raise revenue are placed on this House calendar according to the date reported from committee.

U.S. Code -- A consolidation and codification of the general and permanent laws of the United States arranged by subject under 50 Titles, the first six dealing with general or political subjects, and the other 44 alphabetically arranged from Agriculture to War and National Defense. The Code is now revised every six years and a supplement is published after each session of Congress.

Veto -- Disapproval by the President of a bill or joint resolution, other than one proposing an amendment to the Constitution. When Congress is in session, the President must veto a bill within 10 days, excluding Sundays, after he has received it; otherwise it becomes law with or without his signature. When the President vetoes a bill, he returns it to the house of its origin with a message stating his objections. The veto then becomes a question of high privilege. (See Override a Veto.)

When Congress has adjourned, the President may pocket veto a bill by failing to sign it. (See Pocket Veto.)

Voice Vote -- In either House or Senate, Members answer "aye" or "no" in chorus and the presiding officer decides the result. The term also is used loosely to indicate action by unanimous consent or without objection.

Whip -- See Majority Whip.

Without Objection -- Used in lieu of a vote on noncontroversial motions, amendments, or bills, which may be passed in either the House or the Senate if no Member voices an objection.

SECTION 1

86th CONGRESS.... 1st SESSION

Membership

Seniority

Committees

Resumé of the 1959 Session:

Membership Turnover, Party Leaders, Committee Posts

The first session of the 86th Congress convened at noon, Jan. 7, 1959 and adjourned at 6:22 a.m. Sept. 15. It was the longest since the first session of the 82nd Congress, which met from Jan. 3 to Oct. 20, 1951. (1951 Almanac p. 54) In 1959, 13,837 bills and resolutions were introduced. Of these, 383 eventually became public laws and 236 became private laws.

Party Ratios

When Congress convened Jan. 7, Democrats held almost two-thirds of the seats in each chamber. This made President Eisenhower the first U.S. President to serve with three Congresses controlled in both chambers by the opposition party, since Democrats had majorities in both House and Senate in the 84th and 85th Congresses as well as the 86th.

On opening day, there were 64 Democrats and 34 Republicans in the Senate. The Democrats included two Members from the newly admitted state of Alaska, E.L. (Bob) Bartlett and Ernest Gruening. By adjournment, two additional Senators were seated: Hiram L. Fong (R) and Oren E. Long (D), both from Hawaii, which became a state during the 1959 session. Their inclusion made the party ratio 65 Democrats and 35 Republicans (a total of 100 Senators) at adjournment.

In the House on opening day there were 283 Democrats and 153 Republicans. Among the Democrats was Alaska's Representative, Ralph J. Rivers. During the session, two Members (one from each party) died and were replaced by Members of their own party; an additional Democrat also died and was not replaced before adjournment; and one Member from the new state of Hawaii was seated, Daniel K. Inouye (D). This brought the party composition at adjournment to 283 Democrats, 153 Republicans and one vacancy, a total of 437 seats. (The House membership was scheduled to return to 435 after reapportionment following the 1960 census.)

The following chart compares party ratios for the 83rd, 84th, 85th and first session of the 86th Congresses:

One Vacancy*

Members Sworn In

When the Senate convened Jan. 7, 97 of its 98 Members were present. Richard L. Neuberger (D Ore.) was absent, recuperating from cancer surgery. He returned to the Senate Feb. 12. All 36 newly elected or reelected Members were sworn in Jan. 7. By a flip of a coin, E.L. (Bob) Bartlett won designation as Alaska's senior Senator. However, when Bartlett and the other Alaska Senator, Ernest Gruening, drew straws to determine their terms of office, Gruening won a four-year term ending Jan. 2, 1963, and Bartlett a two-year term expiring Jan. 2, 1961.

An unusual incident marked the Senate's swearing-in ceremony. Ohio's new, 69-year-old Sen. Stephen M. Young (D) issued a press release beforehand, announcing that he refused to be escorted by his fellow Democrat, Frank J. Lausche, a noted lone wolf in Ohio politics. Although he had "actively supported" Lausche's various candidacies over the years, Young said, "If Sen. Lausche supported me for election (over Republican Sen. John W. Bricker) it was a well-guarded secret.... Apparently I did not need Sen. Lausche's support then, nor do I now." Young went down the aisle on the arm of Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) who was also escorting his fellow-Texan Ralph W. Yarborough (D).

Hawaii's two Senators, Oren E. Long (D) and Hiram L. Fong (R), were sworn in Aug. 24. Under the same methods used by Alaska's Senators, Fong was designated senior Senator and won a six-year term, expiring January 1965; Long won a four-year term ending January 1963.

In the House, all but four of the 436 Representatives answered to their names and were sworn in immediately, with one exception -- Dr. Dale Alford (D Ark.), a segregationist who upset then Rep. Brooks Hays (D Ark.) by a write-in campaign in the 1958 election. A special House subcommittee Dec. 17, 1958 had recommended, 3-2, that Alford not be seated until after investigation of his election. When Alford came forward, Rep. John Dingell (D Mich.) objected to his being sworn in and the Speaker asked Alford to remain seated while the rest of the Members took their oaths. Majority Leader John W. McCormack

(D Mass.) then offered a resolution permitting Alford to be sworn in pending final determination of his status by the House Administration Committee. The resolution was adopted by voice vote and Alford took the oath. After investigation, the House Administration Committee Sept. 3 reported a resolution (H Res 380 -- H Rept 1172) declaring Alford validly elected by a vote of 30,247 to 28,749. The House adopted the resolution Sept. 8, by a 245-5 standing vote.

Senate Leadership

The Senate convened with Vice President Nixon, President of the Senate, in the chair. Other officers of the Senate:

President Pro Tempore -- Carl Hayden (D Ariz.)
Majority Leader -- Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas)
Majority Whip -- Mike Mansfield (D Mont.)
Minority Leader -- Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.)
Minority Whip -- Thomas H. Kuchel (R Calif.)

Agreement on the Republican floor leaders came after a bloc of 14 GOP Senators, led by George D. Aiken (Vt.), announced they would challenge the GOP "conservatives" for the Minority Leader's post left vacant by the retirement from the Senate of William F. Knowland (R Calif. 1945-59). The insurgents said they would run candidates for Minority Leader and Whip in an effort to present a more "constructive" and "progressive" view of the GOP to the Nation than was given by Sen. Dirksen. He had been GOP Whip in 1957-58 and was generally considered the leading candidate for the top post in 1959. The 14 consisted of Aiken, Kuchel, John Sherman Cooper (Ky.), Jacob K. Javits (N.Y.), Hugh Scott (Pa.), Clifford P. Case (N.J.), Prescott Bush (Conn.), Margaret Chase Smith (Maine), Frank Carlson (Kan.), Kenneth B. Keating (N.Y.), Winston L. Prouty (Vt.), Milton R. Young (N.D.), Alexander Wiley (Wis.) and Thruston B. Morton (Ky.). Morton said he would vote against Dirksen only if Cooper ran for leader.

In a caucus Jan. 7 before the Senate met, Republican Senators elected Dirksen leader over Cooper, 20-14, and chose Kuchel, the insurgents' candidate, as whip, also 20-14. Elected unanimously were Styles Bridges (N.H.) as chairman of the Republican Policy Committee, Leverett Saltonstall (Mass.) as chairman of the Republican Conference and Milton R. Young (N.D.) as secretary of the conference.

House Leadership

Sam Rayburn (D Texas) was reelected Speaker of the House Jan. 7 in a straight party-line vote, 281-148, over the new Republican Leader Charles A. Halleck (Ind.). It was the ninth time Rayburn had been elected Speaker, a post he first assumed Sept. 16, 1940 in the waning days of the 76th Congress, and had held since, except during the Republican-controlled 80th and 83rd Congresses, when he was Minority Leader. As early as Jan. 31, 1951, Rayburn set the record for the most days served as Speaker when he surpassed Henry Clay's figure of 3,056½ days. Clay also had held the record for most terms as Speaker -- five -- until Rayburn surpassed it in 1951.

Rayburn also set a new House longevity record March 4 when he began his 47th consecutive year in Congress. On that date he surpassed the record of Speaker Joseph G. Cannon (R Ill. 1873-91, 1893-1913, 1915-23), who also served 46 years but not consecutively. Only one man has served in Congress longer than Rayburn: Sen. Carl Hayden (D), who was elected as Arizona's first Representative in 1912, when it became the 48th state, and moved to the Senate in 1927. (1958 Almanac p. 24)

These were the party officers in the first session of the 86th Congress:

Majority Leader -- John W. McCormack (D Mass.)
Majority Whip -- Carl Albert (D Okla.)
Minority Leader -- Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.)
Minority Whip -- Leslie C. Arends (R Ill.)

The election of the Democratic party leaders was as expected, but Halleck's selection as GOP floor leader marked the end of a long tenure of the former leader, Joseph W. Martin Jr. (Mass.), who had served both as Minority Leader and Policy Committee chairman in previous Congresses.

Martin had served continuously as Republican floor leader since Jan. 3, 1939, except for the years 1947-48 and 1953-54 when Republicans controlled the House and Martin was Speaker, with Halleck floor leader. In the Republican caucus Jan. 6, Halleck ousted Martin by a 74-70 secret-ballot vote. John W. Byrnes (R Wis.), a Halleck backer, was later elected Policy Committee chairman by a unanimous voice vote.

The Martin-Halleck struggle was not a "liberal-conservative" fight. It reflected, in part, a belief that Halleck, at 58, could provide more vigorous leadership than the 74-year-old Martin, who had been hampered by a blood clot on his leg. Some Republicans also complained that Martin had cooperated too closely with Speaker Rayburn in the past and had not been sufficiently partisan in his leadership efforts. Martin attributed his defeat in part to GOP election reverses, saying a "fall guy" was needed. Later, Martin said Vice President Nixon's "people were against me, actively against me." He singled out Rep. Robert C. Wilson (R Calif.) as a Nixon man. He also said three Presidential Assistants -- Jack Z. Anderson (ex-Rep. R Calif. 1939-53), Gerald D. Morgan and Edward A. McCabe (both former Congressional employees) -- had met with Halleck a month before the GOP's Jan. 6 caucus. Halleck said he was "absolutely certain the White House did not intervene" in his election.

Committees

Democrats, with nearly two-thirds of the membership in each chamber, revised the committee ratios at the beginning of the 86th Congress to give themselves close to 2-1 margins on nearly all committees. In the House there were several exceptions: Appropriations remained 30 Democrats and 20 Republicans; Ways and Means 15 Democrats and 10 Republicans.

In each chamber, there was a new standing committee on space problems. The Senate had a new Aeronautical and Space Sciences Committee, with Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) as chairman. The House created a new Science and Astronautics Committee, with Rep. Overton Brooks (D La.) as chairman.

These committee chairmanships changed hands in 1959:

House Foreign Affairs -- At the beginning of the 86th Congress, Thomas E. Morgan (D Pa.) became chairman, replacing Thomas S. Gordon (D Ill. 1943-59) who did not run for reelection in 1958.

House Interior and Insular Affairs -- At the beginning of the 86th Congress, Wayne N. Aspinall (D Colo.) became chairman, replacing Clair Engle (D Calif. 1943-59), who was elected to the Senate in the 1958 election.

In accord with the Congressional policy of alternating House and Senate Members as chairman of joint committees, Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) became chairman of the Joint Atomic Energy Committee, replacing Rep. Carl T. Durham (D N.C.); Rep. Paul Brown (D Ga.) became chairman of the Joint Defense Production Committee, replacing Sen. A. Willis Robertson (D Va.); Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) became chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, replacing Rep. Wright Patman (D Texas); and Rep. Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.) became chairman of the Joint Internal Revenue Taxation Committee, replacing Sen. Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.).

Later in the session, two Senate chairmanships changed hands. Foreign Relations Chairman Theodore Francis Green (D R.I.), 91, Jan. 30 resigned the post because of failing eyesight and hearing and was replaced by J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.). Fulbright, in turn, stepped down as Banking and Currency chairman and was replaced by A. Willis Robertson (D Va.).

ASSIGNMENTS

In both chambers, every Member got at least one major committee assignment (several freshmen, in fact, were appointed to top Senate openings). The top openings went to these Members:

Senate Appropriations: Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.), A.S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.), Alan Bible (D Nev.), Robert C. Byrd (D W. Va.), Thomas J. Dodd (D Conn.), Gale McGee (D Wyo.), Thomas H. Kuchel (R Calif.), Roman L. Hruska (R Neb.), and Gordon Allott (R Colo.).

Senate Finance: Herman E. Talmadge (D Ga.), Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.), R. Vance Hartke (D Ind.), John Marshall Butler (R Md.), Norris Cotton (R N.H.) and Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.).

Senate Judiciary: Thomas J. Dodd (D Conn.), Philip A. Hart (D Mich.), Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.).

Senate Foreign Relations: Albert Gore (D Tenn.), Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio), Frank Church (D Idaho) and Frank Carlson (R Kan).

House Appropriations: Joseph M. Montoya (D N.M.), John J. Rhodes (R Ariz.), John R. Pillion (R N.Y.), Phil Weaver (R Neb.), William E. Minshall (R Ohio), Keith Thomson (R Wyo.), Robert H. Michel (R Ill.) and Silvio O. Conte (R Mass.).

House Rules: B. Carroll Reece (R Tenn.) and Hamer H. Budge (R Idaho).

House Ways and Means: William J. Green Jr. (D Pa.), John C. Watts (D Ky.), Lee Metcalf (D Mont.), Victor A. Knox (R Mich.), James B. Utt (R Calif.), Jackson E. Betts (R Ohio), Bruce Alger (R Texas).

The Hawaii-Alaska delegations got these assignments:

Sen. Bartlett (D Alaska) -- Armed Services and Interstate and Foreign Commerce; Sen. Gruening (D Alaska) -- Government Operations, Interior and Insular Affairs, Public Works; Hawaii's Sens. Long (D) and Fong (R) -- Interior and Insular Affairs and Public Works (for each man); Rep. Rivers (D Alaska) -- Interior and Insular Affairs; Rep. Inouye (D Hawaii) -- Banking and Currency.

First Session Turnover

Seven Members of the 86th Congress died in 1959.

In addition to the Hawaii delegation, two Members took the oath of office in mid-session. Both replaced House Members who died. The new Representatives and their committee assignments:

Rep. William J. Randall (D Mo.), 4th District, elected March 3 to fill the vacancy left by the Jan. 23 death of George H. Christopher (D Mo.), was sworn in March 9; Interior and Insular Affairs and Veterans' Affairs Committees.

Rep. Charles E. Goodell Jr. (R N.Y.), 43rd District, elected May 26 to fill the vacancy left by the Feb. 19 death of Daniel A. Reed (R N.Y.), was sworn in June 2; House Administration Committee.

One Representative who died during the session was not replaced:

James G. Polk (D Ohio), 6th District, died April 28.

Three Representatives and one Senator died after Congress had adjourned. Reps. Charles A. Boyle (D Ill.) and Steven V. Carter (D Iowa) died Nov. 4 and Rep. Alvin R. Bush (R Pa.) Nov. 5.

A special election to replace Carter was held in Iowa's 4th District Dec. 15. John H. Kyl (R), whom Carter had beaten in 1958 by over 3,200 votes, was elected by an unofficial margin of 28,336 to 25,804 over state Sen. C. Edwin Gilmour (D). Kyl, 40, was a clothier in Bloomfield.

Sen. William Langer (R N.D.), 73, died Nov. 8 of heart failure. He had been in the Senate since 1941.

He was a high-ranking member of the Judiciary, Post Office and Civil Service, and Foreign Relations Committees.

Gov. John E. Davis (R) Nov. 19 appointed ex-Gov. C. Norman Brunsdale (R 1951-57), 68, to fill Langer's seat until June 28, 1960, when a successor would be elected for the remaining five years of Langer's term.

Seniority

Senate rank generally is determined according to the official date of the beginning of a Member's service, which is Jan. 3 except in the case of new Members sworn in after Congress is in session. For those appointed or elected to fill unexpired terms, the date of appointment, certification or swearing in determines the Senator's rank.

When Members are sworn in on the same day, custom decrees that those with prior political experience take precedence. Counted as political experience, in order of importance, are Senatorial, House and Gubernatorial service. Information on prior experience is given below. The dates following Senators' names refer to the beginning of their present service.

Seniority

House rank generally is determined according to the official date of the beginning of a Member's service, which is Jan. 3 except in the case of Members elected to fill vacancies, when the date of election determines the rank.

When Members enter the House on the same day, those with prior House experience take precedence, starting with those with the greatest consecutive service. Experience as Senator or Governor is disregarded. Information on prior experience is given below. The dates following Members' names refer to the beginning of their present service.

BASIC FACTS ON CONGRESS

Membership -- 100 Senators, two from each state; 437 Representatives, ranging from 43 from New York to one each from Alaska, Delaware, Hawaii, Nevada, Vermont and Wyoming. The House total is due to revert to 435 after 1960. The latter figure has been constant since 1913 but apportionment of House seats among the various states is revised every 10 years, based on what the national census shows.

Elections -- A Senator's term runs for six years, a Representative's for two years. One-third of the Senatorial seats are up for election every two years. If a Senator dies or resigns, the governor of his state may appoint a successor to serve until an election is held for the Senate seat. A vacancy in the House can be filled only through an election.

Senators and Representatives are elected on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in even years. Maine voted in 1957 to give up its unique September elections and will vote with the rest of the country in November, starting in 1960.

Qualifications -- A Senator, when sworn into office, must be at least 30 years old, a U.S. citizen for nine years, and live in the state from which he is elected. A Representative must be at least 25, a U.S. citizen for seven years, and live in the state from which he is elected.

Under the Constitution, each chamber is the judge of the qualifications of its Members. If the election of a Senator or Representative is challenged and the issue brought to the floor of the chamber concerned before the individual is sworn in, his right to take office is determined by a majority vote of the chamber. Once a Member of Congress is sworn in, he may be expelled only by a two-thirds vote of the Members of the house in which he is serving.

Salaries -- A Senator or Representative receives an annual salary of $22,500, plus specific allowances for office help, stationery, telephones and telegrams, travel, and office rent in his home District or state, if space in a Federal building is not furnished.

Officers -- The presiding officer of the Senate is the Vice President of the United States, called the President of the Senate. The House is presided over by a Speaker who is elected by his fellow Members of the House at the start of each Congress.

CQ Fact Sheet On 86th Congress Membership

AGES, PROFESSIONS, SENIORITY IN 86th CONGRESS

As the 86th Congress convened, Congressional Quarterly issued its annual statistical picture of the "average lawmaker," summing up ages, professions and unofficial seniority ranking of the Representatives and Senators. Individual Members' ages, professions and seniority rankings are on the following three pages. (For a comparison with the 85th Congress, see 1958 Almanac p. 32.)

Ages

The "average lawmaker" in the 86th Congress is 52.7 years old -- more than a year younger than the average Member of the 85th Congress.

The average Senator is 57.1 years old, while the age of the average Representative is 51.7 years. The average age of the 18 freshman Senators is 50.2 years; average for the 82 newcomers to the House is only 44 years. The table below shows how the average ages compare with those of previous Congresses:

Congress	Senate	House	Both Chambers
86th (1959-60)	57.1	51.7	52.7
85th (1957-58)	57.9	52.96	53.8
84th (1955-56)	57.2	51.4	52.2
83rd (1953-54)	56.6	52	53
82nd (1951-52)	56.6	52	53

The oldest and youngest Senators in the 86th Congress are Democrats Theodore Francis Green (R I.), who is 91, and Frank Church (Idaho), who is 34. Oldest Republican Senator is Alexander Wiley (Wis.), 74; the youngest, Thomas H. Kuchel (Calif.), 48.

In the House, the youngest Representative is Daniel D. Rostenkowski (D Ill.), 30. Rep. George E. Shipley (D Ill.) is 31. The youngest Republican is Edward J. Derwinski (R Ill.), 32. Also 32 years old are Reps. Donald J. Irwin (D Conn.), John Brademas (D Ind.), Leonard G. Wolf (D Iowa), Harold B. McSween (D La.), James G. O'Hara (D Mich.) and John D. Dingell (D Mich.).

The oldest House Member is Brent Spence (D Ky.), 84. The oldest Republicans, both 83, are Clare E. Hoffman (Mich.) and Daniel A. Reed (N.Y.). (Reed died Feb. 19.)

Professions

Attorneys again predominate in the 86th Congress, accounting for more than one-half the membership. Nearly one-third of the Members have backgrounds in business or banking.

Almost 98 percent of the Senators and 86.5 percent of the Representatives have had prior experience in politics or civic service. Sixty-two percent of the Senate and 59 percent of the House are veterans of the armed forces.

Some Members have engaged in more than one profession which explains why the percentages in the following breakdown total more than 100. A few, such as housewives, fit into no professional category. Three Representatives are ministers.

	85th Congress		86th Congress
	Senate	House	Senate	House
Agriculture	21%	11%	17%	10%
Business or Banking	29	30	29	29
Journalism	9	7	13	8
Law	61	54	62	56
Medicine, Engineering	4	2	3	1
Teaching	18	11	16	9

Seniority

Congressional Quarterly's seniority rankings are unofficial and represent a Member's standing within his own party. There are no written rules in Congress for determining seniority, but each party computes the status of its Members for the purpose of making committee assignments, allotting office space, etc. CQ's rankings are based on the methods used by the two parties.

A Member's rank is determined according to the date he takes the oath of office or, in the case of Members appointed or elected to fill a vacancy, by the date of the appointment or election. When two or more Members were sworn in on the same day, those with prior political experience take precedence. In the Senate, prior political experience consists of earlier service in the Senate, service in the House and service as a state governor, in that order. In the House, prior experience consists of previous House service only; ex-Senators and ex-governors are accorded no precedence.

In the 86th Congress nine of the 15 Democratic freshman Senators benefit in seniority because of prior political experience. E. L. (Bob) Bartlett (Alaska), despite seven terms in the House as a non-voting territorial delegate, ranks below five Senators who served a shorter time than he in the House but who were full-fledged Representatives. Similarly, Edmund S. Muskie, who served four years as Maine's Governor, outranks Ernest Gruening (Alaska), who put in 14 years as the appointed Governor of the territory of Alaska. Each of the three new Republicans has prior House experience.

The top ranking Democrat in the House is still Speaker Sam Rayburn (Texas) who has been elected to 23 consecutive terms, beginning in 1913. John Taber (R N.Y.), who has served since 1923, succeeds Reed as senior Republican. Leading the Democrats in the Senate is Carl Hayden (Ariz.) who has served continuously since 1927. Styles Bridges (R N.H.), who has been a Senator since 1937, tops Republican Senators.

86th Congress - House: Tabulation of Ages . . .

The chart on this and the following page lists the membership of the House for the 86th Congress.

Column 1 shows the age of each Representative as of Jan. 1, 1959; Column 10 shows the Representative's unofficial seniority within his party based both on years served and prior political experience.

Check marks (✓) in Columns 2 through 9 indicate prior profession(s) of each Representative, and whether he is a veteran. See Summary and Key on the next page for description of each numbered column and the number of persons with experience in an indicated profession, with a breakdown by party.

Congress - 1959

Partisan Debate Over Spending Reduced Major Achievements to Two: Hawaii and Labor Reform

After the longest session since 1951, the 86th Congress adjourned at 6:22 a.m. on Sept. 15, 1959 with two major accomplishments to its credit -- an act admitting Hawaii to statehood, and a "tough" labor reform law embodying the first major changes in the Taft-Hartley Act since it was enacted in 1947.

For the rest, the session was distinguished by one remarkable fact. Despite their 2-to-1 majorities in the Senate and the House, Democrats made only token progress toward achieving their legislative objectives. Conversely, however, they granted only 40 percent of President Eisenhower's requests.

As the 1959 session opened Jan. 7, there was no question that a partisan battle of panoramic scope was in store. The Democratic majority, reinforced and refreshed by the mid-term elections of 1958, seemed bent on stepping up the pace of a wide range of domestic programs. And the President was just as clearly determined to insist on holding the line wherever possible.

What was not then apparent -- but rapidly became so -- was that in the "spending" issue the President had found a two-edged sword of phenomenal strength. Not only did it serve to galvanize the Republican minority and to invigorate the GOP-Southern Democratic coalition, enabling the President to make all but one of his vetoes stick. Equally important, it put Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson and Speaker Sam Rayburn on the defensive, leaving their more zealous cohorts with a weakened command.

In the end, it was the President's view that prevailed more often than not on legislation processed through to enactment. Many issues, however, were left in abeyance until 1960, when the pressures of a Presidential election year promised to produce an even more partisan session than that of 1959. Following are the highlights of major legislative developments in the first session.

Fiscal Policy: To meet an impending crisis in highway finances, Congress agreed reluctantly to raise the gas tax from 3 to 4 cents per gallon. The legislators also agreed to postpone scheduled tax reductions and to add $200 million a year to the life insurance industry's tax bill. TVA was given authority to issue revenue bonds, and the ceiling on the public debt was raised, to $295 million. But Democrats, always prepared to do battle with the Eisenhower Administration over interest rates, refused to remove the limit on the Treasury's long-term bond rate.

Civil Benefits: The President vetoed two omnibus housing bills before Congress produced one he was willing to sign; the final measure represented a definite setback for both sides, however. Only limited action was taken on health and education programs; neither the Democratic nor Administration proposals to aid school construction made much headway. Democratic plans to enlarge aid programs for airports and sewage construction, and to inaugurate a massive area redevelopment program all came to naught. But a costly measure revising veterans' pensions made the grade. No new farm legislation emerged.

Foreign Affairs: Democrats lost their effort to put foreign development loans on a long-term basis; funds voted for the Mutual Security Program came to $3.2 billion, or $1.2 billion less than requested. Congress did agree, however, to increase U.S. subscriptions to the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, and to approve U.S. participation in the new Inter-American Development Bank.

National Security: After long debate over the "missile gap" and the general adequacy of the defense effort, Congress approved a defense budget just about as large as requested. The legislators also voted to extend the draft for another four years, and to provide another $500 million for the space program.

Federal Regulation: Laboring under intense pressure from union and business lobbyists, Congress ended its two-year effort to curb labor corruption by writing a stringent reform law that also tightened restrictions on union organizing tactics. But the anticipated battle over a civil rights bill never came off; by general agreement, it was deferred until 1960.

General Government: By quick and decisive votes, Congress opened the door to statehood for Hawaii, in time for the new state's Congressional delegation to participate in the closing days of the session. By contrast, the Senate, after long and bitter debate, rejected the President's nomination of Lewis L. Strauss to be Secretary of Commerce.

Fiscal Policy

Dispute Over Finances Dominated First Session

Heated and repeated conflict over fiscal policy dominated the first session of the 86th Congress, President Eisenhower's plans for achieving "fiscal integrity" and a balanced budget clashed head-on with Democratic plans for lifting the "intolerable burden of laggard government" (as Sen. Johnson put it on opening day). The battle raged right down to adjournment, with heavy losses in both camps.

The President's budget for fiscal 1960, transmitted to Congress Jan. 19, called for a precarious balance between estimated receipts of $77.1 billion and expenditures of $77 billion. Both projections were contingent on Democratic cooperation in raising revenues and cutting expenditures. Neither objective was fully achieved, but by dint of an extraordinary campaign against the "spenders" and "budget-busters," buttressed by a series of stinging vetoes, the Administration succeeded in blunting the Democratic drive to enlarge a host of Federal programs.

The final tally on appropriations showed a substantial reduction in budget requests (see box, next page). But the effect of these cuts on actual expenditures in fiscal 1960 would almost certainly be less than that of increases enacted in housing and health programs, coupled with the failure of Congress to raise postage rates by $350 million as requested.

By adjournment, Budget Bureau officials were estimating that fiscal 1960 expenditures would be closer to $79 billion, and that outlays in fiscal 1961 might reach $81 billion. Whether revenues would rise sufficiently to keep the budget in balance depended, to a large extent, on the rate at which the economy continued to expand.

All in all, the "spending" debate of 1959 produced rather meagre results. The basic fiscal questions facing the nation, respecting the Federal role in the economy, remained unanswered.

Highway Finances

President Eisenhower's request for a 50 percent increase in the Federal excise tax on gasoline -- from 3 to 4½ cents per gallon -- set off the loudest and longest tax row of 1959. Democrats especially were incensed by the proposal because it was a key factor in enabling the President to draw a paper balance in his 1960 budget. State governments, with a big stake in their own gas taxes, also set up a howl. In the end, however, Congress bowed to necessity and approved a 1-cent increase, effective Oct. 1, 1959.

Back of the President's request was an incipient crisis in the Highway Trust Fund, created in 1956 to finance Federal grants to the states for building highways, including the projected 41,000-mile Interstate Highway System scheduled to be completed in 1972. In 1958, Congress, as an anti-recession measure, suspended for two years the Trust Fund's pay-as-you-go provision, at a time when the Fund's receipts from the gas tax and other highway-user levies were falling off. As a result, a sizable deficit loomed in 1960 and following years. According to Federal Highway Administrator Bertram D. Tallamy, the short-fall would amount to $13 billion by 1972 unless Trust Fund revenues were increased.

For months Congress ignored the President's request. On June 25 he again called for action, warning that otherwise the highway program would grind to a halt. "The only serious alternatives now being considered by the Congress -- waiving the Byrd 'pay-as-you-go' amendment or diversion of other taxes -- would solve nothing," he said. Either step, he added, would be "unacceptable to me."

Two House Committees with overlapping jurisdiction promptly became deadlocked over the issue. On July 29 the Ways and Means Committee voted 15-10 to stretch out the highway program for another six years, cut expenditures through 1968, and issue $1 billion in bonds to offset the impending deficit. This proposal was rejected Aug. 6 by the Public Works Committee. On Aug. 13 Ways and Means reversed itself and voted 16-9 for a 1 cent increase in the gas tax until June 30, 1961 and the diversion of certain other taxes to the Trust Fund for three subsequent years. Again Public Works balked, then finally capitulated and reported a bill Sept. 1 embodying the Ways and Means formula.

The House passed HR 8678 Sept. 3, by a 243-162 vote. (See House Roll Call No. 11, p. 88.) The Senate, which in June had rejected attempts to attach either the President's proposal or an alternative formula to another bill (see below), then passed a slightly different version of HR 8678 on Sept. 5, by a 70-11 vote, after rejecting several efforts to amend the bill. The House accepted the Senate's changes Sept. 9 without debate. As sent to the President, the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1959 provided as follows:

- Raised the Federal tax on gasoline, diesel and special motor fuels from 3 cents to 4 cents per gallon, for 21 months starting Oct. 1, 1959.
- Provided for diverting from the general fund to the Highway Trust Fund, for three years beginning July 1, 1961, five percentage points of the 10 percent tax on new automobiles and of the 8 percent tax on auto parts.
- Decreased from $2.5 billion to $2 billion the fiscal 1961 authorization for the Interstate Highway System.
- Exempted portions of the System located within commercial or industrial areas of cities from the billboard-regulation provisions of the 1958 law.

The temporary boost in the gas tax was expected to yield about $1 billion; another $2.5 billion would accrue from the diverted auto taxes. Although the President had expressed opposition to the diversion plan, he was forced to accept the measure as the strongest that Congress was willing to provide.

Tax Measures

To help balance the 1960 budget, President Eisenhower, in addition to asking for an increase in the gas tax, called on Congress to take five other steps: postpone (for the sixth year in a row) a scheduled reduction in the corporate income and certain excise taxes, enact a new formula for taxing the income of life insurance companies, revise the rules for computing depletion allowances, write a new law for taxing cooperatives, and raise the tax on aviation gasoline to 4½ cents. Congress complied with the first two requests, took no action on the other three.

● Tax Extension: Faced with a revenue loss estimated at $3.1 billion for a full year if reductions in the 52-percent corporate income and certain excise tax rates were allowed to take effect on July 1, the President asked Congress to extend the rates without change for another year.

The House went along without fuss, passing the extension bill (HR 7523) June 8. But the Senate Finance Committee voted for immediate repeal of the 10 percent tax on passenger travel and for repeal of the tax on communications a year hence. In floor debate June 25, the Senate confirmed the first of these changes, by a 52-26 vote, and also agreed, by a 47-31 vote, to repeal the 4 percent tax credit allowed on income from dividends. Four other amendments aimed at closing tax "loopholes" were rejected, however. The Senate also turned down two proposals for dealing with the crisis in highway finances -- one to divert certain receipts from the general fund to the Highway Trust Fund, by a 32-47 vote, and one to comply with the President's request to raise the gas tax, by a 33-46 vote. (See Senate Roll Call No. 13, p. 92.)

House conferees refused to go along with the Senate's changes in HR 7523. Their only concession was to agree to provisions repealing the 10 percent tax on local telephone service and cutting the tax on passenger travel from 10 to 5 percent, both effective July 1, 1960 -- by which time Congress would have had to act on the entire tax package once again. The House accepted the conference report June 29 without dissent; the Senate followed suit, by a 57-35 vote, with a majority of Democrats opposed. The President signed the bill June 30.

● Life Insurance: Tax experts in Congress and the Treasury began in 1958 to search for a permanent formula for taxing the profits of the life insurance industry, much of whose income from investments and other sources must be set aside in reserves to meet the contracts of policyholders. The President asked only that the new law produce about $200 million more in revenue than the old law.

Under a complex bill (HR 4245) passed by the House Feb. 18 and by the Senate May 19 after extensive revision, a three-phase formula was established for taxing both a portion of net investment income and, for the first time, all so-called underwriting profits. As finally approved and sent to the President June 10, the bill was expected to yield revenues of about $500 million on the industry's 1958 income and higher amounts in later years -- a substantial increase over amounts previously paid under various temporary formulas.

● Interstate Taxation: Another major tax problem was laid in Congress' lap when the Supreme Court, in separate rulings Feb. 24 and March 2, upheld the right of states to tax the income of out-of-state corporations on the basis of earnings within those states. After extended debate over the economic impact of the rulings and the propriety of Federal intervention, Congress Sept. 3 sent the President a stop-gap measure (S 2524) that --

● Prohibited a state from levying a tax on the net income of any business whose sole activity within the state was (1) the solicitation of orders for tangible personal property, to be approved and filled from outside the state, or (2) the solicitation of orders for a client or customer, if approved and filled from outside the state.

● Ordered the House Judiciary and Senate Finance Committees to study the problem of interstate taxation and recommend uniform standards, by July 1, 1962.

● Self-Employed Retirement: As in 1958, the House March 16 passed a bill (HR 10) to permit self-employed persons to defer payment of income tax on money put into retirement funds up to $2,500 a year or a total of $50,000. The Treasury opposed the measure, saying it would cost $365 million a year, with 80 percent of the tax relief going to persons earning more than $10,000 a year. The Senate Finance Committee, after holding hearings on the bill, took no further action before adjournment.

Debt Management

The $12.5 billion deficit incurred by the Treasury in fiscal 1959 -- the result of increased spending and lowered receipts in the wake of the 1957-58 recession -- focused attention on the problems of managing the public debt, which by adjournment had passed the $290-billion mark for the first time. Three aspects of the debt problem came before Congress.

● Debt Ceiling: For the third time in less than two years, President Eisenhower was obliged to ask the legislators to raise the legal limit on the public debt. In 1958 Congress had first raised it from $275 billion to $280 billion, then to $283 billion with a temporary addition of $5 billion to lapse on June 30, 1959. This proved sufficient to permit the Treasury to borrow enough funds to cover the fiscal 1959 deficit. But it was not sufficient to carry the Treasury through the first half of fiscal 1960 -- a period in the year when lagging receipts force the Government to run $5 billion or more in the red.

The President proposed raising the permanent debt ceiling to $288 billion, to be increased for one year to $295 billion. The House Ways and Means Committee voted instead to make $285 billion the permanent limit, adding another $10 billion to expire June 30, 1960. These were the terms of a bill passed by the House June 19, by a 256-117 vote, and by the Senate June 25, by voice vote. Even should no deficit develop by the end of fiscal 1960, the new debt limit was such that Congress would have to take further action at the 1960 session.

● FNMA Exchange: As part of his budget-balancing plan, the President proposed exchanging $335 million worth of mortgages held by the Federal National Mortgage Association for an equal amount of long-term Treasury bonds held by the public. The complex transaction was designed to permit the Treasury to retire the bonds, reducing the public debt by an equivalent amount, and to allow FNMA to operate without additional budgetary expenditure in 1960.

Although the President had ample authority to go ahead with the exchange, he held off when Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) and other Democrats on the Banking and Currency Committee objected. They complained that the deal would cost the Government at least $13 million a year, representing the difference between the interest received by FNMA on its 4 percent mortgages and the interest paid by the Treasury on its 2.75 percent bonds, part of a non-marketable series maturing in 1980. The exchange, Clark said, would give the bondholders a "windfall" and have a "severely depressing effect" on the mortgage market.

After extended debate, the Senate Aug. 20 voted 56-29 in favor of a resolution (S Res 130) expressing the sense of the Senate that the proposed exchange should not be carried out. No Democrats voted against the resolution, while only three Republicans voted for it. Whether the President would be guided by it was open to question at adjournment.

● Interest Ceiling: Neither of the foregoing matters produced half the storm caused by the President's request that Congress remove the statutory limit of 4.25 percent on the interest the Treasury may offer on its long-term bonds (five years or more). Democrats greeted the proposal as irrefutable proof of their charge that the Administration was committed to a policy of high interest rates.

Whatever the cause, both short- and long-term interest rates did rise in 1959, with costly results for the Treasury. Its estimate of the cost of carrying the debt in 1960 was raised by $500 million, to $8.5 billion. At the same time, long-term Government bonds were selling below par; with little hope of being able to float new long-term issues at 4.25 percent or less, the Treasury faced the prospect of having to rely increasingly on the highly volatile short-term market for its financing needs.

The House Ways and Means Committee first agreed to give the President authority for two years to raise the ceiling when necessary. But it added a rider which (in effect) told the Federal Reserve Board to help peg the price of Government bonds. In the face of adamant Administration opposition, this provision was toned down, but on Aug. 18 the Committee reversed itself and voted to shelve the entire bill.

No great objection was voiced, however, to the President's concurrent request for an increase in the interest ceiling on Series E and H savings bonds. The House passed the required legislation (HR 9035) on Sept. 4, by a 378-7 vote, after rejecting a move to attach a provision removing the ceiling on long-term bonds, by a 134-255 vote. (See House Roll Call No. 12, p. 88.) The Senate passed a somewhat different version Sept. 8. The compromise measure, sent to the President Sept. 12, raised the interest limit on Series E and H bonds from 3.26 to 4.25 percent.

TVA Revenue Bonds

Both Democrats and the President favored giving the Tennessee Valley Authority the right to finance the expansion and improvement of its power facilities by selling up to $750 million worth of revenue bonds. But the Administration insisted that the Budget Bureau have the power to pass on TVA power projects.

A bill (HR 3460) reported to the House April 14 provided, instead, that Congress have the right to approve or veto the projects. An effort to substitute the Administration's control provisions was rejected by the House, 182-231, and the bill was passed May 7, by a 245-170 vote. (See House Roll Call No. 2, p. 86.) The Senate's version of HR 3460, passed July 9, differed in several respects, but retained a degree of Congressional control which the President said conflicted with "his constitutional role in the legislative process" and was "wholly unacceptable."

The impasse was broken when the President signed the bill Aug. 6 on the understanding that the offending provision would be repealed. A bill doing just that was promptly sent to the White House, Aug. 11.

Inflation vs. Growth

Underlying the entire fiscal debate of 1959 was this question: was it more important to fight inflation or to encourage a faster rate of economic growth? The President made no bones about his conviction that the danger of inflation exceeded all others; balancing the Federal budget, he said in his Economic Report of Jan. 20, was the "most important single step" the Government could take to stabilize prices. A growing number of Democrats, on the other hand, saw a greater threat in the high rate of growth of the Soviet economy; the Government's principal concern, they argued, should be to stimulate a higher rate of growth in the U.S. economy.

This was the view endorsed by the Democratic majority of the Joint Economic Committee, in its March 9 appraisal of the President's Economic Report. They called in particular for relaxation of the Administration's restraints on the growth of the money supply. Republican members, denouncing the "partisan political tone" of the majority report, argued that "stabilizing the price level...is a basic requisite for continuing growth."

Both sides to the dispute took steps to carry their views to the public at large. On Jan. 31 the President named Vice President Richard M. Nixon as chairman of a new Cabinet Committee on Price Stability for Economic Growth. In an interim report June 29, the Committee said the economy was "now at a critical juncture urgently requiring action to forestall inflation." The required action, it said, included balancing the budget, raising the interest ceiling on Treasury bonds, and amending the Employment Act of 1946, adding to its goals of "maximum production, employment, and purchasing power" that of "reasonable price stability."

Democrats countered by pushing through a resolution March 23 giving the Joint Economic Committee $200,000 to conduct a "Study of Employment, Growth, and Price Levels." Chaired by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), an inveterate critic of Administration fiscal policies, the Committee was expected to complete its study early in 1960.

Meanwhile, neither Congress nor the Administration produced any concrete antidote to rising prices. Confronted with a steel strike beginning July 15, the President repeated his earlier appeals to labor and management to write a non-inflationary contract. By adjournment, however, the strike was still underway, and the President had made no move to intervene.

The House Government Operations Committee June 12 reported a bill (HR 6263) empowering the President to hold public hearings when price or wage increases threatened to have an inflationary impact. No further action was taken; it seemed doubtful that a majority in Congress would support it. But the debate over inflation and growth -- and what to do about both -- was certain to wax hotter in 1960, as the Presidential election approached.

Housing Law Became Focus of "Spending" Debate

A session-long deadlock over housing legislation was broken Sept. 10 when Congress, after having failed to override vetoes of two earlier versions, finally sent the President a bill he was willing to sign. Such were its terms that both parties to the long, angry "spending" debate could claim at least partial victory. But the bill was a far cry from what either the President or the Democratic majority had wanted.

At the heart of the controversy was the 10-year-old urban renewal program. A bill extending the program for six years, at the rate of $300 million a year, had cleared the Senate in 1958 only to die in the House for lack of six votes. As the 86th Congress convened, big-city Democrats began a drive for an even larger program. The Administration's bill, on the other hand, called for a six-year extension, at the rate of $250 million a year for the first three years and $200 million a year for the last three. The Administration also wanted to cut the Federal share of any community's loss on slum clearance projects from two-thirds to one-half by fiscal 1963.

Round One: As reported by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, the first housing bill of 1959 (S 57) carried a six-year extension of the urban renewal program at $350 million a year, as well as an Administration-opposed authorization for another 35,000 units of public housing. After rejecting several moves to water down these provisions, the Senate passed S 57 on Feb. 5, by a 60-28 vote.

On Feb. 27 the House Banking and Currency Committee reported its version of S 57, allotting $500 million a year to urban renewal for three years. Almost three months passed, however, before the bill was dislodged from the Rules Committee, and the House, after rejecting an Administration-backed substitute by a 189-234 vote, passed S 57 May 21 by a 261-160 vote.

Anxious to forestall a veto if possible, Senate and House conferees cut the urban renewal extension to two years and a total of $900 million. But the Administration still took strong exception to this and 14 other provisions of the compromise bill. With most Republicans voting "nay", the Senate approved the conference report June 22, 56-31, and the House followed suit June 23, 241-177.

In a strongly-worded message July 7, President Eisenhower vetoed S 57 as being "so excessive in the spending it proposes, and so defective in other respects, that it would do far more damage than good." He urged Congress to enact his original proposals.

Round Two: After mulling over the bill for another month, Senate Democrats decided to try overriding the veto. But the 55-40 vote Aug. 12 was nine votes short of the required two-thirds majority. (See Senate Roll Call No. 11, p. 91.) The Banking Committee promptly reported a revised measure (S 2539) containing a few concessions to the Administration but a number of objectionable features as well. After rejecting several attempts to eliminate these, the Senate passed the bill Aug. 18, by a 71-24 vote. The House then passed the bill Aug. 27 without change, by a 283-105 vote. (See House Roll Call No.10, p. 88.)

On Sept. 3 the President vetoed S 2539; like S 57, he said, it "goes too far." He criticized in particular its provisions for two new direct loan programs -- $50 million for college classrooms and $50 million for housing for the elderly; for 37,000 new units of public housing; for a one-year authorization of $650 million in urban renewal grants; and for limiting an $8-billion increase in the Federal Housing Administration's mortgage-insurance authority to one year.

Again the Senate attempted and failed to override the President's veto. The vote Sept. 4 was 58-36, five short of the necessary two-thirds. (See Senate Roll Call No. 12, p. 91.)

Round Three: In quick order the Banking Committee reported a new measure (S 2654) making three concessions to the President: FHA authority to insure mortgages was extended indefinitely; the $50-million loan fund for college classrooms was dropped; and the $650-million authorization for urban renewal grants was spread over two years. Chairman A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) said he had "positive assurance" that the President would sign the bill, although it still contained the provisions for elderly and public housing to which he had objected.

The Senate passed S 2654 Sept. 9 without change, by an 86-7 vote. Next day the House, by voice vote, sent it to the President. Entitled the Housing Act of 1959, it included these major provisions:

- Increased the total amount of mortgages FHA can insure by $8 billion; increased the maximum FHA mortgage on a one-family home from $20,000 to $22,500; and reduced the down-payment required on homes valued at $13,500-$18,000 to 10 percent.
- Authorized urban renewal grants, under contract authority, amounting to $350 million in fiscal 1960 and $300 million in fiscal 1961, and liberalized important features of the slum clearance program.
- Established a $50 million fund for direct loans to non-profit corporations providing rental housing for the elderly.
- Increased the college housing loan fund by $250 million, to a total of $1,175,000,000.
- Authorized Federal subsidization of an additional 37,000 units of public housing.

Aid to Education

Congress voted $431 million to the Office of Education in 1959, including $225 million for grants to so-called "impacted areas" and $150 million for loans and grants under the National Defense Education Act of 1958. For the fifth year running, however, the legislators failed to enact a general school construction bill. Enthusiasm for a generous program of Federal grants, once fairly widespread, appeared to have slackened.

After recommending various grant formulas in 1955, 1956, and 1957, the Administration in 1959 switched to a new approach designed to produce the minimum impact on the 1960 budget. Unveiled Feb. 9 by Arthur S. Flemming, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, it provided for joint Federal-state assistance to communities in paying off bonds issued to finance school construction. Cost to the Federal Government was estimated at $2 billion over the next 25 to 30 years.

Congress ignored the Administration's proposals and turned instead to the so-called Murray-Metcalf bill (S 2, HR 22), which provided $4.7 billion a year in outright grants to the states, to be used either for building schools or raising teachers' salaries. On June 8 the House Education and Labor Committee reported a scaled-down version of HR 22, authorizing grants equivalent to $25 a year for each school-age child, at a total cost of $4.4 billion over four years.

When this bill was pigeonholed by the House Rules Committee, Democrats on the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee cooked up a bill, modeled on the President's 1957 proposals, providing for a two-year program of matching grants for school construction only, at the rate of $500 million a year. Reported Sept. 12, this bill (S 8) failed to reach the Senate floor before adjournment.

On other matters of interest to educators, Congress performed as follows:

● Impacted Areas: Secretary Flemming asked Congress May 12 to revise sharply two grant programs, first authorized in 1950, designed to help build and operate schools in areas overburdened by an influx of Federal or defense workers and their families. But the proposed changes (which would have reduced Federal outlays by $61 million the first year) were rejected Aug. 26 by the House General Education Subcommittee.

● Loyalty Oaths: In establishing a program of Federal loans to college students, Congress in 1958 stipulated that all applicants must swear allegiance to the United States and file affidavits stating they do not support any organization intent on overthrowing the U.S. Government. When several colleges withdrew from the loan program in protest against this requirement, the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee June 29 reported a bill to eliminate the loyalty oath. After two days of heated debate, however, the Senate July 23 voted 49-42 to recommit the bill (S 819) to committee, effectively killing it for the 1959 session.

● Scientific Equipment: When an American importer found a ready market among U.S. schools for low-priced Soviet laboratory equipment, Congress reacted promptly to the challenge. On the initiative of Sen. Styles Bridges (R N.H.), the legislators added a rider to the Office of Education appropriation, prohibiting the use of funds authorized by the Defense Education Act for purchasing any equipment from a Communist country, unless unavailable elsewhere.

● Educational Television: As it had in 1958, the Senate April 13 passed a bill (S 12) authorizing up to $1 million in Federal grants to each state to assist non-profit groups and school systems in purchasing equipment for broadcasting educational TV programs. But a House Commerce Subcommittee voted June 3 to defer action on the bill until 1960.

● Youth Corps: By a 47-45 vote, the Senate Aug. 13 passed a bill (S 812) to create a Federal Youth Conservation Corps of 150,000 men between the ages of 16 and 21, to work on Federal and state conservation projects. Sponsored by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), the measure was opposed by the Administration chiefly because of its cost, estimated at a minimum of $375 million a year. The House took no action on the bill, however.

Health Measures

The only appropriation bill enacted in 1959 to provide a larger sum than requested was the Labor-HEW measure. As sent to the President July 30, it carried $3,951,000,000 for the two Departments, or $259 million more than budgeted. Most of these extra funds were earmarked for health programs. Appropriations for the National Institutes of Health were increased by $106 million, to $400 million; funds to finance Federal grants for hospital construction were raised by $85 million, to $186 million.

President Eisenhower signed the bill Aug. 14 but took strong exception to the additions made by Congress, indicating that the Administration might simply refuse to spend the extra money.

● Forand Bill: A highly controversial proposal to incorporate a program of health insurance for the aged in the social security system was the subject of five days of testimony before the House Ways and Means Committee in mid-July. Sponsored by Rep. Aime J. Forand (D R.I.), the bill (HR 4700) received no further action in 1959. Its chances in 1960 -- an election year -- were another matter.

● Health for Peace: By a 63-17 vote, the Senate May 20 passed a bill (S J Res 41) to establish a "Health for Peace" program of international medical research, at a cost of $50 million a year. Sponsored by Sen. Lister Hill (D Ala.), the bill drew only a highly qualified endorsement from the Administration, which objected to most of the terms of the measure. The House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee Aug. 28 announced its decision to postpone action on the bill until 1960.

Airport Grants

Neither Congress nor the President won any new ground in their dispute over extending the Federal Airport Act of 1946, authorizing matching grants to cities for building airports. He proposed that the Federal Government "begin an orderly withdrawal" from the program by cutting annual grants (established at $63 million in 1955) back to $35 million over a four-year period. But the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee Feb. 5 reported a bill (S 1) even larger than one the President had refused to sign in 1958. It called for a five-year extension of the program, at $100 million a year, plus a $65 million emergency fund.

The Senate voted to hold the extension to four years, but rejected, 35-53, a substitute proposal for continuing the program without change, before passing S 1 on Feb. 6, by a 63-22 vote. The House Commerce Committee, however, cut S 1 from $465 million to $297 million, allowing only $62 million a year for regular grants and $45 million for the emergency fund. On the House floor, a move to trim another $97 million from the bill was barely defeated, on a 194-214 vote March 19. The House then passed the bill, 272-134.

Weeks passed before conferees were named, as Democratic leaders pondered what course to follow. Rather than risk a veto that couldn't be overridden, they finally compromised on a simple two-year extension of the existing program, at the rate of $63 million a year. In this form, S 1 was approved by the Senate June 15, by a 71-11 vote, and by the House June 17, by a standing vote. President Eisenhower signed the measure June 29.

Area Redevelopment

Congress made even less progress in 1959 than in 1958 toward enacting a Federal program to help redevelop areas of the country suffering from chronic unemployment. As a result, President Eisenhower, who had vetoed a $280-million measure the previous year, was spared the trouble in 1959.

The Senate Banking and Currency Committee March 18 reported a bill (S 722) sponsored by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) calling for $390 million in loans and grants to industrial areas with high and sustained levels of unemployment and to low-income rural areas. In the Senate, a move to substitute the Administration's $50-million loans-only proposal was rejected, 43-52. The Douglas bill was passed, March 23, by a 49-46 vote.

When the House Banking and Currency Committee reported S 722 May 14, its total cost had been trimmed to $251 million. But the bill never got to the House floor; the Rules Committee, which had cleared the measure in 1958, refused to do so in 1959. The ultimate fate of S 722 would thus be determined in 1960.

Pollution Control

Both the House and the Senate agreed in 1959 to enlarge a program enacted in 1956 to encourage cities to build sewage treatment plants, in an effort to increase the amount of usable water in the nation. At the last moment, however, the bill was put on ice by its sponsors, who feared a pocket veto.

Under the Water Pollution Control Act of 1956, the Federal Government was authorized to grant up to $50 million a year for 10 years to help cities build sewage plants. (Actual appropriations for the program have been $45 million a year.) In 1959 the President asked Congress to cut the payments to $20 million, and to turn the entire program back to the states in fiscal 1961. (See p. 82)

Ignoring his request, the House June 9 voted 255-143 to pass a bill (HR 3610) doubling the authorization for grants, to $100 million a year. An amended version of the bill, raising the program to $80 million a year, was passed by the Senate Sept. 9, by a vote of 61-27. Then, although they were prepared to compromise, Democratic sponsors of the measure decided to put off final action until 1960, when their chances of overriding a veto might be somewhat improved.

Air Pollution: Congress completed action Sept. 14 on a bill extending for four years the Air Pollution Control Act of 1955, authorizing $5 million a year for research studies by the U.S. Public Health Service into the causes and control of air pollution.

Business Aids

Merchant Marine: President Eisenhower, in his budget message, suggested that it was high time to overhaul the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, but Congress took no action pending receipt of a Commerce Department transportation study, still incomplete at adjournment. The House and Senate passed substantially different versions of a bill (HR 5421) to subsidize the construction of fishing vessels, but were unable to reach a compromise. A Senate-passed bill (S 107) to make floating drydocks eligible for Federal mortgage insurance never reached the House floor.

Railroads: Senate and House Commerce Committees both approved bills designed to permit higher rental charges on box cars as an inducement to railroads to build more freight cars. Further action was postponed until 1960. So, also, was action on bills to revise the Transportation Act of 1958, to make it harder for railroads to abandon commuter service when found to be unprofitable.

Small Business: On Sept. 11 Congress completed action on a bill (HR 8599) raising the Small Business Administration's revolving business loan fund from $500 million to $550 million. (SBA had wanted an increase to $700 million.) Another bill requested by SBA, to liberalize the Small Business Investment Act of 1958, passed the Senate Sept. 10 but was not considered by the House.

Veterans' Benefits

The Veterans Pension Act of 1959, sent to the President Aug. 18, provided for a major revision in the benefits to which needy veterans with non-service-connected disabilities or their widows and children are entitled. For the present system of flat monthly payments to all eligible persons, it substituted a sliding-scale of benefits related to other income, with the proviso that no one presently on the rolls would be forced to take a cut. About 70 percent of the 1,250,000 veterans, widows and orphans eligible for payments were expected to receive larger benefits effective July 1, 1960.

Costs of the measure were a matter of some dispute. As first drafted by the Veterans Administration, it would have added $100 million to the $1.1 billion cost of the pension program in its first year, but would have reduced the Government's cumulative outlay over the next 40 years from an estimated $105 billion to $57 billion. But as passed by the House June 15, the bill (HR 7650) raised the first-year cost by $300 million and the total cost by the year 2000 to $115 billion. The chief reason for this was that the House bill added 206,000 widows of World War II and Korean war veterans to the rolls, at a 40-year cost of $22 billion.

The Senate Finance Committee proceeded to trim the bill in several respects, cutting its 40-year cost by an estimated $21 billion. But the Senate, by a vote of 75-20, accepted an amendment by Sen. Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.) restoring all of the more generous provisions in the House version. (See Senate Roll Call No. 10, p. 91.) Passage came Aug. 13, by a vote of 86-6. As finally enacted, HR 7650 --

- Provided a sliding-scale of pensions for veterans of World War I and II and the Korean war, ranging from $85 a month for single veterans with incomes of $600 or less, to $45 a month for veterans with dependents and incomes between $2,000 and $3,000.
- Provided pensions for widows of veterans ranging from $25 a month for those without children and incomes between $1,200 and $1,800, to $75 a month for those with one child and incomes of $1,000 or less, plus $15 for each additional child.
- Provided that no person on the pension rolls would have his pension revoked or reduced when the law went into effect on July 1, 1960.

Readjustment Benefits: In separate action, the Senate July 21 voted 57-31 to pass a bill (S 1138) extending readjustment benefits such as guaranteed home loans to veterans who entered the armed services after Jan. 31, 1955, the cut-off date for the Korean GI bill. But the House Veterans' Affairs Committee postponed action on the bill until 1960.

Veterans' Housing: When the omnibus housing bill ran into trouble, Congress sent the President a separate bill June 17 raising the interest ceiling on VA-guaranteed mortgages from 4.75 to 5.25 percent, and authorizing another $100 million for direct housing loans to veterans. It was signed June 30.

Labor Aids

Much of the steam generated in 1958 over unemployment and jobless benefits evaporated in 1959, as the recession gave way to recovery. By adjournment, Congress had taken only limited action on the following related matters:

- Temporary Benefits: The Temporary Unemployment Compensation Act of 1958, providing Federal loans to the states to extend jobless benefits for a limited period, was due to expire April 1, 1959. The House March 16 passed a bill (HR 5640) to permit persons who had exhausted regular benefits and applied for the special additional benefits before April 1 to continue receiving payments through June 30.

In the Senate efforts were made to broaden the bill: an amendment to extend the terminal date to June 30, 1960 was rejected, 38-49, but another amendment to extend all provisions of the 1958 law until June 30, 1959 was adopted, 52-32. House conferees refused to accept the change, however, and it was the House version that went to the President March 25.

- Regular Benefits: The House Ways and Means Committee opened hearings April 7 on various proposals for establishing minimum Federal standards and enlarging the coverage provided by state unemployment compensation programs. The Administration favored the latter objective but opposed setting minimum standards as to the duration and amount of benefits that should be paid, preferring to leave improvements in this area to the states. Labor spokesmen argued for high minimum standards. But the Committee took no further action.
- Minimum Wage: Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell March 12 asked Congress to delay raising the minimum wage above $1 an hour, but to extend coverage to "several million additional workers." After extensive hearings, Sen. John F. Kennedy's (D Mass.) Labor Subcommittee approved a bill (S 1046) to raise the minimum wage to $1.25 an hour and to extend coverage to an additional 10 million workers. But the full Labor and Public Welfare Committee never acted on the measure.
- Unemployment Study: At the behest of Sen. Johnson, the Senate April 10 passed a bill to set up an 11-member Commission on Unemployment Problems, with orders to report to Congress within 60 days. But the proposal met with vast indifference in the House, and the bill never left the Speaker's desk. On the eve of adjournment, however, Johnson persuaded the Senate to adopt a resolution creating a special Committee on Unemployment Problems, to be composed of nine Senators. The group was given $100,000 and directed to report its findings by Jan. 31, 1960.
- Railroad Retirement: President Eisenhower May 19 signed a bill it had been feared he might veto. The measure (HR 5610) raised by 10 percent pensions, annuities and survivor benefits of railroad workers. To pay for the increase, the bill raised employer and employee taxes from 6.25 percent to 7.25 percent by 1962.

Agriculture

Congress failed in 1959 to make any perceptible progress toward solving the farm surplus problem -- epitomized for the average taxpayer by the Federal Government's $9 billion (and growing) investment in wheat, corn, cotton and other commodities. When the President vetoed two bills revising price supports for wheat and tobacco, the legislators gave up any hope of coming to terms with the Administration.

In a special message to Congress Jan. 29, the President proposed that price supports for all 12 subsidized commodities be related to a percentage of their average market prices for the immediately preceding years, rather than to parity -- the standard which reflects cost-price relationships of a base period, usually 1910-14. If Congress didn't care for this, he said, it should give Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson authority to fix price supports at any level, from 0 to 90 percent of parity.

Wheat was the immediate problem. Under existing conditions Government stocks of wheat were expected to reach 1.5 billion bushels by mid-1960 -- more than twice the amount consumed as food by the nation in one year. Benson urged Congress to give him the flexibility asked by the President; strict production controls, he said, were the only alternative. But the legislators refused to go along.

Wheat Program: The Senate May 22 passed instead a bill giving wheat growers a choice of three courses: (1) planting their full acreage allotment and receiving a support price of 65 percent of parity, (2) reducing their allotment by 10 percent and receiving 75 percent of parity (the current support level), or (3) reducing their allotment 20 percent and receiving 80 percent of parity.

The House version, passed June 12 by a 189-177 vote, provided two quite different alternatives; a choice between receiving price supports at 90 percent of parity in return for reducing acreage allotments by 25 percent, or accepting 50 percent of parity with unlimited production.

Both versions were dropped in conference in favor of a single formula, offering 80-percent supports for a 20 percent cut in acreage. The Senate promptly endorsed the compromise, but the House voted 202-214 to reject it, insisting on its own version. On June 22 the Senate agreed, 44-40, to accept the House bill. Three days later the President vetoed it, saying it "prescribes for a sick patient another dose of what caused his illness." The bill would do nothing to limit wheat production, he said, since farmers would simply grow more on a smaller acreage.

Tobacco Supports: The Senate May 21 passed a bill to stabilize price supports for tobacco at the 1958 level until 90 percent of parity, computed by the old method of determining parity, exceeded the 1958 level, at which time the support level would rise to 90 percent. The House passed the bill June 10, by a 250-149 vote, but the President vetoed it June 25, along with the wheat bill. It would take a "long step backward," he said, "by resurrecting 90 percent of 'old parity'" as a support formula. As with wheat, Congress took no further action.

Surplus Disposal: The Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954, a major instrument in helping to move several billion dollars worth of U.S. farm commodities abroad, was due to expire on Dec. 30, 1959. The President asked Congress to extend the law (familiarly known as PL 480) for one year and to authorize $1.5 billion to finance sales for foreign currencies under Title I, plus $300 million for relief donations under Title II.

A bill along these lines was passed by the House Aug. 20, after Members had voted 232-127 to attach a provision authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to establish a $1-billion food stamp system for distributing surplus food to needy persons. The Senate Sept. 7 voted 68-14 for a three-year extension of PL 480 with a modest food-stamp demonstration plan. The conference report, approved Sept. 11 by both chambers, provided for a two-year extension of the surplus disposal program, with $1.5 billion a year for foreign-currency sales and $300 million a year for donations. The bill also contained a permissive food-stamp provision for which Secretary Benson said he saw "no need."

REA Veto: In a slap at Benson, the Senate April 8 passed a bill, 60-27, giving the Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration, rather than the Secretary of Agriculture, final authority to approve or disapprove REA loan applications. A similar bill passed the House April 15, by a 254-131 vote. But on April 27 President Eisenhower vetoed the measure as marking "a major retreat from sound administrative policy and practice."

Although the bill was of minor significance, Democratic leaders determined to override the veto. The Senate succeeded April 28, by a 64-29 vote -- two more than needed. But the 280-146 vote in the House April 30 was four votes shy of the required two-thirds majority. (See House Roll Call No. 7, p. 88.) This setback on the first attempt of the session to put the President in his place persuaded Democratic leaders to lower their sights on other controversial legislation.

School Milk: In separate bills sent to the President March 25 and Aug. 6, Congress raised the $75-million ceiling on expenditures by the Commodity Credit Corporation for the special school milk program to $78 million for fiscal 1959, $81 million for fiscal 1960, and $84 million for fiscal 1961. The increase of $3 million each year was needed, sponsors said, to keep pace with the expanding school population.

Hog Subsidies: The House Agriculture Committee Aug. 27 reported a bill (HR 8394) to establish a direct payment plan for hogs, designed to assure producers a return of $14 per hundred pounds. Opposed by the Administration, the bill received no further action. But the Agriculture Department promptly embarked upon a substantial pork-purchase program to help bolster sagging hog prices.

Natural Resources

The "spending" issue served to dampen somewhat the interest of Congress in developing the nation's natural resources -- but not entirely. In what proved to be the session's most dramatic display of legislative independence, Congress overrode the President's veto of a public works bill -- the first and only time it had successfully defied Mr. Eisenhower since he entered the White House.

With Federal expenditures for natural resources estimated at a record level of $1.7 billion in 1960, the President insisted that no funds be provided for starting construction of new water resources projects. But Congress was in no mood to go along. In reporting a bill June 2 appropriating almost $1.2 billion for various public works, the House Appropriations Committee included funds for a flock of new flood control, navigation, and reclamation projects. There had been "overwhelming bipartisan rejection of the Administration's 'no new starts' policy," the Committee said. The House passed the bill June 9, by a vote of 380-20.

The Senate Appropriations Committee then added another batch of new projects to the bill, boosting the total appropriation by $80 million. On the Senate floor, a motion to recommit the bill with instructions to trim it was rejected, 17-72. On July 9, the Senate passed the bill, 82-7. The compromise version, which reached the President Aug. 17, came to $30 million more than the budget request and provided for starts on 67 projects he opposed.

Vetoing the measure Aug. 28, the President said "overspending in respect to water resources is hurtful to the United States." He asked that Congress eliminate the unbudgeted projects, which he said would cost $800 million to complete. In a hectic scene Sept. 2, accompanied by a number of vote switches, the House voted 274-138 to override the veto -- one short of the required two-thirds majority. (See House Roll Call No. 8, p. 88.)

The narrow defeat spurred the House Appropriations Committee to report back a new bill (HR 9105) changed in only one respect. By a 2.5 percent across-the-board cut, the Committee came within earshot of the total budget request. But the bill still contained the 67 unwanted projects. Both chambers endorsed the measure Sept. 8, the House by a 304-93 vote, the Senate by a 73-15 vote. Again the President refused to sign, returning HR 9105 Sept. 9.

Next day, on the vote to override the second veto, the House finally succeeded. The 280-121 ballot turned up 12 votes more than were needed -- 10 of them being Republicans who had voted to sustain the first veto. (See House Roll Call No. 9, p. 88.) The Senate immediately followed suit, voting 72-23 to override -- eight more than required. (See Senate Roll Call No. 14, p. 92.) Democrats were elated by the victory, but its value remained to be determined. The President had the power to freeze the unbudgeted funds if he so desired.

In separate action, the House July 16 passed a bill (HR 7634) authorizing $637 million for navigation and flood control projects, but the Senate took no action. Congress traditionally passes the so-called rivers and harbors bill, authorizing projects for which funds are later voted in the public works appropriation bill, in even-numbered years.

Mineral Policy: In 1958 the Senate approved but the House rejected an Administration-sponsored price-support program for lead, zinc, and other minerals, designed to meet the complaints of domestic producers against cheaper imports. The President subsequently placed a quota on lead and zinc imports, but the domestic industry continued to press for more relief. Finally, on Sept. 10, Congress adopted a resolution (H Con Res 177) calling on the President to look into the problem and recommend legislation. A stronger Senate-passed measure (S 1537) failed to obtain House action.

Alaska Leases: President Eisenhower Aug. 17 vetoed a bill increasing from 300,000 to 600,000 acres the limitation on oil and gas leases or options that can be held by a producer in Alaska. The bill, he said, "would tend to produce an excessive concentration of control" over potential resources.

Coal Research: Congress Aug. 31 completed action on a bill (HR 6596) establishing a three-member Coal Research and Development Commission, with the task of finding new and more effective uses for coal. But the President vetoed the bill Sept. 16, saying it would lead to duplication of effort.

Wilderness Bill: Hearings were held by the Senate Interior Committee on a bill (S 1123, HR 1960) to set aside permanently as wilderness a portion of Federally owned lands amounting to about 2 percent of the land area of the nation. But on Aug. 28 the Committee decided to postpone further action on the measure until 1960.

Water Resources. : The Senate April 20 adopted a resolution establishing a Select National Water Resources Committee, to be composed of 16 Senators. The Committee was given $175,000 and ordered to file a report by Jan. 31, 1961 recommending legislation on water projects that would be needed by 1980. The Committee chose Sen. Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.) as its Chairman.

Lake Michigan: Possibly the windiest debate of the 1959 session was prompted by HR 1, a bill to permit Chicago to divert an additional 1,000 cubic feet of water per second from Lake Michigan into its sanitary canal system. Similar bills had been passed in 1954 and 1956 only to be vetoed by the President, largely because they were offensive to Canada, which claimed the water-diversion proposal would adversely affect navigation on the Great Lakes.

The House passed HR 1 March 13, by a 238-142 vote. Senate debate began Aug. 26 and droned on until Sept. 2, when after six roll calls on various motions, the Senate voted 54-34 to send the bill to the Foreign Relations Committee -- effectively killing the measure for 1959.

Foreign Policy

Mutual Security Request Slashed By $1.2 Billion

The foreign aid debate of 1959 revealed a growing concern in Congress over the rationale, no less than the cost, of the semi-permanent, hydra-headed Mutual Security Program. But a serious effort to re-orient the program fell afoul of the "spending" issue. Stung by the Administration's opposition to their domestic welfare proposals, Democrats led the way in slashing the President's foreign aid request by $1.2 billion.

In a special message March 13, he asked Congress to authorize and appropriate $3,930,000,000 to continue MSP without substantial change. Included was $1.6 billion for military aid, $835 million for defense support (economic aid to 12 military allies), $272 million for special assistance, $180 million for technical cooperation, $700 million for the Development Loan Fund, and $200 million for contingencies.

Authorization: After lengthy hearings, the House Foreign Affairs Committee reported an authorization measure June 5 providing $267 million less than requested. The Committee had cut the military aid, defense support, and special assistance estimates by about 10 percent each, but had voted $800 million for the DLF. This was reduced to $700 million by the House, but 24 other amendments, most of which proposed further restrictions or cuts in the program, were rejected. As passed June 18, by a 271-142 vote, the measure authorized $3,542,600,000 for MSP. (See House Roll Call No. 3, p. 86.)

The version reported June 22 by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, however, authorized $255 million more than the President's request. While approving most of the Administration's proposals, the Committee, in a sharp break with precedent, inserted a provision sponsored by Chairman J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) authorizing the Development Loan Fund to borrow $1 billion a year from the Treasury for five years. The Committee said its action, taken "in the absence of Administration initiative," was designed to help "induce a rate of growth which promises to become self-sustaining" in the underdeveloped countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America.

This provision met overwhelming opposition in the Senate. Critics called it a "backdoor spending" permit, allowing money to be taken from the Treasury without appropriation. When a point of order was made against the provision, and was overruled by the Presiding Officer, a motion to table an appeal from the ruling was rejected, by a 42-48 vote. (See Senate Roll Call No. 7, p. 91.)

Faced with the prospect that the Senate would vote to sustain the point of order, and thus bring into question the legality of other large Government programs financed by borrowing authority, Democratic and Republican leaders skirted the issue by offering a compromise provision, quickly accepted, which authorized appropriations of $750 million for the DLF for fiscal 1960 and another $1.25 billion for fiscal 1961.

The Senate then agreed to an amendment cutting military assistance from $1.6 billion to $1.3 billion, by a 52-41 vote (see Senate Roll Call No. 8, p. 91), and to one reducing defense support by 10 percent. As passed July 8, after six days of debate, the bill's total authorization was cut close to the figure approved by the House. As sent to the President July 22, the measure authorized $700 million for the DLF in fiscal 1960, plus $1.1 billion in 1961, and $1.4 billion for military aid.

More important, perhaps, than the money provisions were the policy directives added to the bill. These provided for shifting military aid to the defense budget, beginning in fiscal 1961; directing the President to submit a detailed plan for the progressive reduction of all bilateral grant assistance; and establishing in the State Department an Inspector General and Controller to audit the aid program.

Appropriation: As usual, Congress appropriated less money than it had authorized. Less than $3.2 billion was provided in the money bill reported to the House July 24 -- $390 million less than had been authorized, and $743 million less than the President had first requested. (The same day he asked Congress to give the Development Loan Fund another $500 million as a down payment for fiscal 1961, but neither chamber moved to grant the request.)

As passed by the House July 29, by a 279-136 vote, the appropriation measure carried $1.3 billion for military assistance, $700 million for defense support, and $550 million for the DLF. When the Senate Appropriations Committee finally reported its version Sept. 8, only $95 million had been added, in sharp contrast to action taken in previous years.

Final action was delayed until the last hours of the session by the civil rights dispute. (See p. 80) Further cuts were rejected by the Senate before passing the bill Sept. 14, by a 64-25 vote. As sent to the President, the final version provided a little more than $3.2 billion for mutual security -- $700 million less than his original request and $1.2 billion under the final request.

Aid to Satellites: Under the 1951 Mutual Defense Assistance Control Act, any form of aid to countries in the Communist bloc was all but prohibited. An Administration-endorsed effort to ease the provision, as it applied to Poland and other satellites, was defeated by one vote in the Senate in 1958. But on Sept. 12, 1959, the Senate voted 49-40 to pass S 1697 amending the 1951 law. (See Senate Roll Call No. 15, p. 92.) Passage came too late for House action.

President Assumes Personal Direction of Foreign Policy

The President embarked in 1959 on the final great mission of his service, assuming leadership of U.S. foreign policy direction. Following the death May 24 of Secretary of State John Foster Dulles, a new approach was seen in the management of foreign affairs. President Eisenhower assumed an attitude of moderation in the cold war, accompanied by diligent consultation with this Nation's Allies. Initiating an exchange of visits between the leaders of the U.S. and U.S.S.R., the President at the same time indicated great caution against a serious danger: the breakdown of the NATO defense alliance.

Dulles: On Feb. 14 the President announced that Secretary Dulles was suffering from a recurrence of the cancer for which he was operated on in 1956. He had entered Walter Reed Hospital for a hernia operation Feb. 11, the day after he returned from a week of Allied consultations in London, Paris and Bonn. Radiation treatment began Feb. 20, just five days before Dulles' 71st birthday. On April 15, the President announced Dulles' resignation.

Dulles was sworn in as a special consultant to the President on April 23, two days after Christian A. Herter, who had been Acting Secretary of State since Feb. 15, was confirmed by a 93-0 roll-call vote in the Senate as Secretary of State. Herter took the oath of office April 22 and departed April 27 for the Paris meeting of the Western foreign ministers in preparation for the May 11 Geneva foreign ministers conference on the Berlin crisis.

Dulles died in his sleep May 24 of cancer complicated by pneumonia. President Eisenhower called him "one of the truly great men of our time." Statesmen from around the world, including West German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer and Russian Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko, attended the May 27 funeral.

Berlin: Tension leading to the events in which President Eisenhower became personally involved was created Nov. 10, 1958 when Khrushchev in a speech demanded an end of the four-power occupation of Berlin and threatened to turn control of Allied supply lines to West Berlin over to the East Germans, make West Berlin into a demilitarized "free city" and conclude a separate peace treaty with East Germany. This was followed up on Nov. 27, 1958 with a Soviet note to the Western nations setting May 27 as the deadline for the end of occupation of Berlin. The Western Big Three Dec. 14, 1958, rejected this ultimatum, stressing the right of free access to the city.

The crisis heightened in the months following: Dulles and Herter met with Allied leaders; Soviet Deputy Premiers Frol R. Kozlov and Anastas I. Mikoyan visited the U.S. and the latter suggested that the Soviet deadline might be extended if talks were underway; President Eisenhower and British Prime Minister Harold Macmillan met in Washington March 21-23; the Allies gradually moved to a position indicating greater willingness to negotiate with Russia on the Berlin situation.

Finally, the foreign ministers of the Big Four met in Geneva May 11 to May 20 and July 13 to Aug. 5 and recessed without agreement except to meet again at a date and place to be decided.

Test Ban: Another Geneva conference, one that began Oct. 31, 1958, held greater promise than the Foreign Ministers meeting. Russian, British and U.S. representatives agreed on 17 articles of a 24-article treaty dealing with a ban on nuclear tests. They were still far apart on policing methods. The State Department Aug. 26 announced that President Eisenhower had ordered a two-month extension of the one-year moratorium on testing which began on Oct. 31, 1958. Britain and Russia agreed to the extension. The conferees agreed Aug. 20 to recess their talks until after the Eisenhower-Khrushchev meetings.

Nixon Trip: A dramatic example of top-level contacts across the Iron Curtain began when Vice President Richard M. Nixon left July 22 for a 13-day tour of Russia. President Eisenhower April 16 had announced the Nixon visit to open the U.S. exhibition in Moscow "on behalf of the American people."

Nixon's trip held not only the diplomatic stage-center but the political. It was considered very useful to his Presidential chances in 1960. Although his reception at Moscow's airport was described as cool, the Russian crowds in the American exhibit, in Novosibirsk and Sverdlovsk greeted him in large and friendly numbers.

Highlight of the trip was the running discussion -- part of it being the "kitchen debate" -- with Soviet Premier Khrushchev during a tour of the U.S. exhibition. Among the Russian leader's complaints was the July 17 proclamation by President Eisenhower designating the week beginning July 19 as Captive Nations Week. Khrushchev called it a "rude" interference in "our internal affairs."

Exchange of Visits: Most international events were overshadowed by the exchange of visits between the heads of government of the United States and Soviet Russia, proposed by President Eisenhower.

Preceding the visit of Khrushchev to the U.S., the President made an extensive tour from Aug. 26 to Sept. 7 to talk with Macmillan in London, French President Charles DeGaulle in Paris and Adenauer in Bonn. His trip was marked with a spirit of unity with leaders and acclaim from the people of Europe.

Khrushchev arrived in Washington Sept. 15. The Berlin situation, the crisis in Laos, and trade between the U.S. and U.S.S.R. were the principal subjects for discussion.

Other Aid Measures

In addition to the Mutual Security Act, action was taken to expand two existing economic aid institutions, create another and explore the need for two more.

World Bank, Monetary Fund: After a long wrangle, Congress authorized increases in the United States subscriptions to the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. The Monetary Fund received $1,375,000,000 and the World Bank, $3,175,000,000; the entire $4.5 billion was charged as a public debt transaction. The President asked that the Monetary Fund authorization be charged against the badly-unbalanced fiscal 1959 budget. The House agreed but the Senate insisted that it go into the precariously-balanced fiscal 1960 budget. In June, however, the Senate relented and the bill went through as the President had requested.

Inter-American Bank: Congress approved U.S. membership in a new Inter-American Development Bank, created to underwrite accelerated economic development in the Western Hemisphere. The President described the action as "a most significant step in the history of our economic relations with Latin America." Congress authorized a $450 million contribution to the billion-dollar bank and later appropriated $280 million of it.

International Development Assn.: After greeting the proposal with skepticism in 1958, the Administration in 1959 gave its blessing to the formation of an International Development Assn. (IDA) as an affiliate of the World Bank. Treasury Secretary Robert B. Anderson told Congress in August there appeared to be sufficient favorable reaction among World Bank member nations to warrant drafting a resolution for consideration by the World Bank board of governors at their meeting Sept. 28. The Senate in 1958 had called for a study of the IDA proposal introduced by Sen. A.S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.). If established, IDA would be financed by several countries and would make long-term, low-interest loans repayable, either entirely or in part, in local currencies.

South Asia Mission: The Senate directed the Administration's attention to another possible area of international assistance in a resolution asking the President to explore with other free nations the advisability of establishing a mission to consult with South Asian governments on their economic problems.

In its original form, the resolution was concerned only with supporting India's five-year development plan, but on the recommendation of the State Department it was broadened to include Pakistan, Burma, Afghanistan, Nepal and Ceylon, as well.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee said the South Asian area "clearly merits a review of its economic requirements, because developments there in the next decade are likely to have a profound effect on the concept of individual freedom and will be of vital concern to the United States."

Trade Policy

A bill to encourage private overseas investment by American firms was hammered out, but not reported, by the House Ways and Means Committee in 1959.

The measure, introduced by Rep. Hale Boggs (D La.), would offer United States companies an incentive to increase their foreign investments, and to reinvest their profits abroad, by permitting them to defer payment of U.S. taxes on their foreign earnings until they are returned to this country for distribution.

Another proposal would have reduced the maximum corporate tax rate on all foreign earnings from 52 to 38 percent -- as is now the case for companies doing business in the Western Hemisphere. But this was opposed by the Administration and dropped from the bill during committee deliberations.

Separate studies conducted for the Commerce and State Departments endorsed the principle of expanded private overseas investment. The reports stressed the belief that Government grants and loans were incapable of meeting the demand for capital in the underdeveloped countries abroad.

But a basic conflict developed between the backers of the Boggs bill and the Administration over the revenue and policy considerations of the overseas investment incentive program.

The Boggs bill would make the tax deferral advantages available to American firms doing business anywhere in the world -- even in highly developed countries. The Treasury claimed that the revenue loss from a world-wide tax deferral program would be excessive, and the State Department said it would not meet the policy goal of channeling new private investment into the underdeveloped countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America.

Backers of the bill contended that the Treasury's estimates of tax revenue loss were exaggerated and said it was impractical to limit the incentives only to the underdeveloped countries. The underdeveloped lands, they said, would benefit from the world-wide tax deferral because the total supply of investment funds would be increased significantly by this program. Conflict over this issue kept the bill in committee throughout 1959.

Immigration

While it took no action in 1959 on the President's often-repeated requests for overhaul of the basic provisions of the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act, Congress did deal with three special immigration problems and cleared the way for a special $10 million U.S. contribution to the World Refugee Year program. The Government's discretionary authority to admit tubercular aliens was extended through June 30, 1961, and a program for non-quota admission of certain alien orphans adopted by American citizens was continued through June 30, 1960. The inspection requirements for aliens seeking admission to the mainland from Hawaii were eliminated.

National Security

Defense Budget Provoked Inconclusive Debate

President Eisenhower's decision to hold defense spending in fiscal 1960 to about $41 billion provoked a wide-ranging debate in Congress over the adequacy of the nation's preparedness program. As usual, disagreements among the armed services provided much of the ammunition leveled by Democratic critics at the defense budget.

For weeks Secretary of Defense Neil H. McElroy and Gen. Nathan F. Twining, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, shuttled between Senate and House Armed Services and Appropriations Committees to defend the pace and scope of the defense effort. As proof, McElroy cited a statement signed by the Joint Chiefs to the effect that the 1960 budget was "adequate" and contained "no serious gaps." Called to testify, the Chiefs affirmed this position, but also revealed that they had asked for a lot more money.

- Admiral Arleigh A. Burke, Chief of Naval Operations, had cut Navy requests of $17 to $18 billion to $14 billion, was allowed $11.5 billion.
- Gen. Thomas D. White, Air Force Chief of Staff, had asked for $21.6 billion, was allowed $18.7 billion.
- Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor, Army Chief of Staff, had cut Army requests from $13.6 billion to $12.5 billion, was allowed only $9.9 billion.

Questioning of the Chiefs and subordinate commanders revealed three major areas of dispute in the field of defense policy, as follows:

- Missile Gap: Included in the 1960 budget were substantial funds for developing intercontinental ballistic missiles -- the nearly-operational ATLAS, the second-generation TITAN, and the ultimate MINUTEMAN, all Air Force projects. But according to Sen. Stuart Symington (D Mo.), one-time Air Force Secretary, Soviet capacity for producing ICBMs would give them a 3-to-1 lead over the U.S. within a year or two, enabling them to "wipe out our entire manned and unmanned retaliatory force" at one blow.

McElroy at first disputed the existence of any missile gap, saying that by December the number of combat-ready ICBMs in the U.S. would be "within a few missiles of what we would expect the Russians to have about that time." Later, however, he acknowledged that "if the Russians use their capability to produce, they will have more ICBM weapons on launching pads than we do." Throughout the debate, however, he insisted that the U.S. would continue to maintain its superiority in over-all striking power without attempting to match the Soviets "missile for missile."

- Air Defense: The 1960 budget provided for continuing development of two competing air-defense systems, the Air Force's BOMARC and the Army's NIKE-HERCULES, both designed for protection against enemy bombers rather than ICBMs. Contrary to Army wishes, however, no funds were requested for production of the NIKE-ZEUS, the only missile on the horizon designed to cope with ICBMs.

This situation produced such a strong reaction from Congress that the Defense Department hastily drew up a new "master plan" for continental air defense, which was put before the Senate Armed Services Committee June 12. Details of the plan were withheld from the public; in deference to Congressional criticism, however, it provided for cutbacks in both the NIKE-HERCULES and BOMARC programs, and an increase for the ZEUS program.

- Limited War: In their never-ending competition for funds, the armed services continued to make the most of their differences over strategic doctrine. Faced with an Air Force budget almost as large as those of the Army and Navy combined, Gen. Taylor and Adm. Burke argued that the nation's atomic retaliatory power was already "excessive to requirements." Both stressed the need for building up Army and Navy capabilities for fighting limited wars. Gen. White of the Air Force, on the other hand, emphasized the threat of total war and the need for "a capability, in being, of destroying a significant part of the Soviet strategic nuclear delivery forces."

In the end, Congress agreed to give the Army some additional funds for modernizing its equipment (most of which was designed during World War II), but nothing approaching the $3 billion a year sought by Gen. Taylor, who was retired for his troubles. Having failed in 1958 to dissuade the Administration from cutting the Army to 870,000 men and the Marine Corps to 175,000, the legislators made no further effort to restore the Army to its former strength of 900,000 but did provide funds to maintain 200,000 Marines.

The frustrations encountered by Congress in attempting to reconcile the conflicting views of the Administration and the individual services regarding the nation's defense needs produced new demands for reorganization of the Defense Department.

- Sen. Clair Engle (D Calif.), in a Senate speech Aug. 28, declared that reorganization "on the basis of mission and function is an absolute prerequisite to meeting the challenge of modern warfare." He proposed that the Senate Armed Services Committee study the possibility of eliminating the services, as such, and regrouping them into a retaliatory striking force, a limited war force, a continental defense command and a logistic command.
- The House Government Operations Committee, in a report filed Sept. 2, called for an Army-Air Force merger to eliminate duplication and waste in the missile field, short of which "the Nation will be exposed to the vitiating effects of interservice jealousies, rivalries and wars for many years to come."

Defense Funds

As usual, the House and Senate took markedly different views toward the President's request for $39,248,200,000 to run the Defense Department in fiscal 1960. (Military construction funds were considered separately.) When the appropriation bill finally emerged, however, it was a bare $20 million below the budget estimate.

The House Appropriations Committee started off by cutting $1.2 billion from certain programs, then adding $800 million to others, for a net reduction of $400 million. Among the cuts in the measure reported May 28: the entire $260 million requested for a conventionally powered aircraft carrier, and nearly $500 million for various Air Force programs, including the controversial BOMARC missile. Major additions made by the Committee included $200 million for Army procurement, $255 million for anti-submarine warfare programs, and $172 million for the ATLAS and MINUTEMAN ballistic missiles. The House passed the bill June 3 without change, by a 392-3 vote.

The Senate Appropriations Committee proceeded to add $746 million to the bill, including another $200 million for Army procurement and $380 million for a second nuclear-powered carrier sought by the Navy (rather than the conventionally powered unit approved by the Defense Department). As reported July 7, the bill also restored one-half of the cut ordered by the House in BOMARC funds.

When the bill reached the Senate July 13, Sen. Symington offered an amendment to increase Army procurement funds by still another $234 million, to a total just under $1.7 billion. But the move was rejected by a 43-48 vote. (See Senate Roll Call No. 9, p. 91.) The Senate then passed the bill July 14, with no change in its money provisions.

Senate and House conferees compromised their differences over the Navy's carrier by allowing $35 million for advance planning and procurement for a nuclear-powered unit. As approved Aug. 4 by both chambers, the bill provided $39,228,239,000 to finance the Defense Department in fiscal 1960, or about $20 million less than requested.

The Department fared less well on its separate request for $1,563,200,000 for military construction projects. As finally approved Sept. 4 by Senate and House, this money bill carried $200 million less than requested. Of greater significance, however, was a new provision inserted earlier in the annual authorization measure, sent to the President on July 30. This proviso, originally added by the Senate Armed Services Committee, stipulated that after Dec. 31, 1960 all appropriations for the procurement of aircraft, missiles, or naval vessels must be authorized specifically by legislation enacted after that date. This meant that, beginning in 1961, more than one-fourth of the Defense Department's budget would be subjected to annual scrutiny by the Senate and House Armed Services Committees, as well as by the two Appropriations Committees.

Military Manpower

At Administration request, Congress extended the draft law, due to expire June 30, for another four years. Defense Department officials argued that the authority to draft men, although used only by the Army, was needed by all of the services as a prod to voluntary enlistment. Without the draft, they said, the services would fall 700,000 short of the 2.5 million men needed.

The House disposed of the bill Feb. 5 with little debate, rejecting motions to recommit the bill and to limit the extension to two years. The measure was passed by a 381-20 vote. The Senate likewise rejected, by a 24-67 vote, an effort by Sen. Wayne Morse (D Ore.) to limit the extension to two years. An amendment by Sen. Francis Case (R S.D.) to set up a Commission on Military Manpower, with orders to report in two years, was also rejected, 24-68. The Senate then passed the bill March 11, 90-1, with Sen. William Langer (R N.D.) alone voting "nay."

As sent to the President March 12, the measure extended until July 1, 1963 the induction provision of the Universal Military Training and Service Act and the Dependents Assistance Act of 1950; authority to draft physicians, dentists and allied specialists; and authority to grant special pay to physicians, dentists and veterinarians entering active duty.

In separate action, Congress completed action July 6 on a bill extending for four years the program under which men between 17 and 18½ may enlist for six months of active military service, to be followed by seven and one-half years in the active reserve program.

Atomic Exchange

Equally little protest was voiced in Congress to the President's proposals for exchanging atomic weapons data with seven NATO allies. Authority for the exchange was embodied in amendments to the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, approved by Congress in 1958 after considerable debate and with the proviso that all exchange agreements be subject to disapproval by resolution of Congress.

Rep. William H. Meyer (D Vt.) and six other Democrats introduced resolutions of disapproval on grounds that the agreements would lead to the "proliferation" of nuclear weapons. But the powerful Joint Atomic Energy Committee rejected this view and July 15 filed a report approving the agreements. These provided for transferring to Britain certain non-nuclear parts for nuclear weapons, and for exchanging uranium 235 for plutonium; for selling to France uranium fuel to power a submarine reactor; and for giving Canada, the Netherlands, Turkey, Greece and West Germany certain information for the development of defense plans and for training personnel in the handling of atomic weapons and weapons systems.

Space Agency

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration, created in 1958 in response to the shock administered by the first Soviet "sputnik" on Oct. 4, 1957, continued to enjoy a relatively untroubled honeymoon with Congress in 1959. The House Science and Astronautics Committee and the Senate Aeronautical and Space Sciences Committee, set up to keep tabs on NASA, insisted on retaining their right to authorize annual appropriations for the agency, but made no trouble over funds for fiscal 1960. NASA was voted $500 million in a supplemental bill approved Aug. 19 by both chambers.

There were signs of darker days ahead, however. The legislators, concerned over relations between civilian and military space programs, were unable to draw any information from NASA Administrator T. Keith Glennan on policy decisions of the National Space Council, chaired by the President. In a report issued July 18, a Senate Space subcommittee said the U.S. space effort was being handicapped by the Administration's failure to develop a comprehensive, long-range civilian-military space program and by inadequate coordination of NASA's work with that of the Defense Department's Advanced Research Projects Agency.

Glennan, in a speech Aug. 24, acknowledged that "we are not nearly as far advanced in space technology as we had thought or hoped." And he added: "We should admit, quite frankly, that with distressingly few exceptions, we have not achieved complete success in any mission to date."

The harshness of Glennan's appraisal took on added meaning when, on the eve of Soviet Premier Khrushchev's visit to the United States, the Soviets Sept. 12 launched a missile which 34 hours later hit the moon. "An impressive feat," said Glennan.

Radiation Hazards

Continuation of the suspension of nuclear weapons tests by the U.S., U.K., and U.S.S.R., pending the outcome of negotiations for a permanent ban, helped to minimize Congressional concern over radiation hazards, present and future. Hearings before the Joint Atomic Energy Committee underscored the continuing controversy among scientists concerning the precise nature and scope of the fallout problem; on the whole, however, they tended to down-grade earlier conceptions of the hazards to health flowing from weapons tests to date.

One by-product of the scientific controversy was a proposal to transfer responsibility for setting and enforcing minimum radiation safety standards from the Atomic Energy Commission to the U.S. Public Health Service. A bill to this effect received hearings in the Senate, but got no further action. A partial step in this direction was taken, however, when President Eisenhower Aug. 14 established a Federal Radiation Council by executive order, and in the process gave the Public Health Service an enlarged role in the field.

Even more remote from the mainstream of Congressional concern in 1959 was the question of nuclear war and its potential effects on the United States. On the basis of a careful analysis of the biological and environmental effects of a hypothetical all-out attack on the U.S., the Joint Atomic Energy Radiation Subcommittee concluded Aug. 31 that approximately 50 million Americans would die immediately or soon thereafter. The report then stated:

"Probably the most significant finding presented to the subcommittee was that civil defense preparedness could reduce the casualties of the assumed attack on the United States from approximately 30 percent of the population to about 3 percent." The cost of adequate shelter protection for the nation was estimated at between $5 billion and $20 billion.

The Governors' Conference earlier had endorsed a sharp step-up in state efforts to deal with the civil defense problem, but in Washington the House cut from $25 million to $10 million a fund for providing assistance to the states on civil defense matters. Congress, long dissatisfied with the Federal civil defense program, was not yet ready to undertake any massive effort to meet what most Members regarded as a remote contingency.

Munitions Lobby

The sharp fight over defense funds in 1959 not only confirmed Congress in its suspicion that interservice rivalry remained as prevalent as ever. It also served to spotlight the promotional activities of defense contractors in behalf of their products, and to raise questions regarding the role of retired military personnel on their payrolls.

On July 7 a House Armed Services subcommittee headed by Rep. F. Edward Hébert (D La.) opened hearings on possible conflicts of interest involved in the employment of retired officers by firms competing for defense contracts. A parade of retired generals and admirals appeared before the committee to deny that retired officers could exert any influence over procurement policies. Several, however, endorsed the idea of a two or three-year "cooling-off" period during which ex-officers would be barred from contract negotiations with the armed services.

The Hébert probe got on livelier ground when it turned up the fact that full-page newspaper advertisements extolling the virtues of the Army's NIKE-HERCULES missile, published during Congressional debate over funds for the program, had been inserted by the missile's builder, Western Electric Co., at the suggestion of Army officials. The committee also learned that the Martin Aircraft Co. had often flown high-ranking military officers to the Bahamas for weekend parties. Further sidelights on the ins and outs of service-contractor relationships were in store as the committee continued its investigation.

Federal Regulation

President Scored on "Strong" Labor Reform Bill

Working under some of the most intense pressures felt on Capitol Hill in years, Congress, in the waning days of the 1959 session, passed a "strong" labor reform bill containing major Taft-Hartley Act amendments favored by business and opposed by organized labor.

The final version of the bill represented a personal triumph for President Eisenhower and testified to the legislative skill of House Minority Leader Charles A. Halleck of Indiana. It was Halleck who had been largely responsible for constructing the coalition of Republicans and Southern Democrats which overcame the powerful influence of Speaker Sam Rayburn and the clear preference of Senate Democrats for a milder bill.

The continuing exposure of union corruption and labor-management collusion by the Senate Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor or Management Field had produced a deluge of letters, telegrams and editorials calling for action. The build-up was capped Aug. 6, on the eve of House debate on the labor measure, when the Committee issued a report summarizing its three years of investigations under the leadership of Sen. John L. McClellan (D Ark.).

Kennedy Bill: The initial version of the reform bill came to the Senate floor April 15 bearing the imprint of a "moderate" approach favored by its sponsor, Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.), and most Northern Democrats. It even had the endorsement of the AFL-CIO. The Kennedy bill depended mainly on exposure to fight corruption; it intended only a minimal interference in union internal affairs. The measure differed little from the bill passed by the Senate in 1958 after long and bitter debate, only to be killed by the House.

Sen. Kennedy's bill required unions and union officials to furnish annual reports to the Secretary of Labor on a wide variety of financial matters and employers to report annually on money spent to influence unions, either directly or through management middlemen. It also set minimum standards for union trusteeships over locals and for democratic union elections; sought to bar hoodlum elements from union office; and outlawed labor-management bribes and payoffs.

In addition, the bill contained three so-called "sweeteners" aimed at making it more acceptable to the unions: one, permitting workers fired while on strike to vote in NLRB representation elections at the struck firm even though not entitled to reinstatement; two, allowing firms and unions in the building trades to sign collective bargaining agreements before beginning a job; and three, removing telephone switchboard supervisors from the category of "supervisors" under Taft-Hartley, thus making them subject to union-shop contract negotiations. The first two provisions were favored by President Eisenhower and became part of the final bill. The third did not survive.

However, the President had also asked for Taft-Hartley amendments involving secondary boycotts, the "no man's land" gap, organizational and recognition picketing and hot cargo contracts. These were omitted from the Kennedy bill and became the focus of dispute in both House and Senate.

Senate Action: The Senate passed the Kennedy bill (S 1555) April 25 on a 90-1 roll-call vote, with Sen. Barry Goldwater (R Ariz.) the lone dissenter. But this one-sided vote followed the longest debate of the session, requiring votes on 55 separate amendments, 16 by roll call. Although none of the President's Taft-Hartley requests was inserted, the bill was toughened enough to make the AFL-CIO withdraw its endorsement.

Sen. McClellan offered a key amendment designed to cure the "no man's land" problem by allowing state courts and labor relations agencies to assume control of labor disputes technically under Federal law but considered too minor by the NLRB to warrant the time and expense of adjudication. Labor feared this solution would bring a spate of anti-labor injunctions in state courts. The proposal was defeated, 39-52. (See Senate Roll Call No. 4, p. 90.)

So was McClellan's amendment to extend secondary boycott prohibitions to include airline, railroad, farm, domestic and government workers, and to bar unions from threatening an employer to make him quit doing business with a primary firm. This was defeated, 41-50. (See Senate Roll Call No. 5, p. 90.)

McClellan scored a victory, however, when the Senate voted, 47-46, to attach his "Bill of Rights" for labor to the Kennedy measure. (See Senate Roll Call No. 3, p. 90.) Among the rights guaranteed to union members: to vote in union elections, nominate candidates, speak at union meetings, and participate in union business. There were also guarantees against arbitrary fines and punishments and against reprisals for opposition to union officers or testimony about them in court. Violation of any of these rights was made a criminal offense.

Subsequently, the "Bill of Rights" was itself amended to delete an enforcement provision giving the Secretary of Labor power to enjoin violation of a member's rights. This power paralleled an element in one of the civil rights bills opposed by Southerners. Similarly, the "Bill of Rights" was clarified to indicate that there was no intention of forcing social integration on the unions.

House Action: When S 1555 reached the House, the Education and Labor Committee appeared to be closely divided between Northern Democrats who thought it "punitive" and Southern Democrats and Republicans who thought it too weak. There was some question whether the committee would report any bill. However, public pressure, catalyzed by business lobbying and the President's repeated calls for action, proved irresistible.

The Committee's clean bill, reported July 30, closely paralleled the Senate version. However, it was clear that it did not have a majority and had been reported out only for the sake of getting some sort of measure on to the floor. Ten separate groupings of opinion were to be found in the committee's report. The six Republicans who voted for the committee bill along with 10 Democrats all said they hoped to see it strengthened on the floor. Ten Democrats and four Republicans opposed the bill altogether. In fact, of the 30 members, only five gave the bill wholehearted endorsement.

Coincidentally with the reporting of the committee measure, two substitute bills were introduced. Reps. Phil M. Landrum (D Ga.) and Robert P. Griffin (R Mich.) offered a "tough" bill (HR 8400), while Rep. John F. Shelley (D Calif.), former president of the California Federation of Labor, proposed a measure (HR 8490) similar to the original Kennedy bill before its amendment by the Senate. In its handling of the anti-corruption issue, the Landrum-Griffin bill closely paralleled the committee measure. In addition, it incorporated all of the Taft-Hartley changes sought by the President. This substitute was promptly endorsed by the President, Sen. McClellan and House GOP leaders. The Shelley bill won the backing of 43 House Democrats and the AFL-CIO.

In the power struggle which followed, most of the major labor organizations, business groups like the National Assn. of Manufacturers and the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S., and such key Administration leaders as Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield and Attorney General William P. Rogers were all immensely active. Some unions, notably the Teamsters and John L. Lewis' United Mine Workers, were opposed to any bill.

The attempt to substitute the Shelley bill for the Committee bill was quickly beaten on a 132-245 teller vote, as was a civil rights amendment offered by Rep. Adam Clayton Powell Jr. (D N.Y.) The key roll call came late Aug. 13 on the Landrum-Griffin substitute. It won, 229-201, in the largest total vote ever recorded in the House. (See House Roll Call No. 5, p. 86.) The rejection the following day of a recommittal motion, 148-280, was purely a formality and the bill was sped to conference, 303-125. (See House Roll Call No. 6, p. 86.)

After 12 days of protracted bargaining, the conference committee came up with a compromise which was essentially the House bill with exemptions from the bans on picketing and hot cargo contracts. The Senate agreed to the conference version, 95-2, with Sens. Wayne Morse (D Ore.) and William Langer (R N.D.) the two dissenters. The House gave its approval Sept. 4, 352-52, sending the bill to the President.

Provisions: The final version included the McClellan "Bill of Rights," the original anti-corruption, fair election and trusteeship guarantees of the Kennedy bill and these major Taft-Hartley changes:

- State labor relations agencies and courts were given the power to handle "no man's land" cases, applying state labor law.

- Threatening an employer to make him quit doing business with a struck firm was made an unfair labor practice for unions, as was inducing a supervisor, or a worker acting alone, to refuse to handle struck goods for the same purpose, It was specified, however, that union inducement of workers to refuse to handle work "farmed out" from a struck firm was not considered a secondary boycott.

- Hot cargo contracts, in which employers agree not to do business with firms labeled "unfair" by the union, were made illegal. But garment industry contracts barring jobbers from subcontracting single garments to non-union shops and construction industry contracts barring job-site subcontracting to non-union firms were both exempted.

- Organizational and recognition picketing were forbidden where the picketing union or any other union had lost an NLRB certification election within the previous year (provided the defeat was not attributable to an unfair labor practice by the employer) and also where another union had already been recognized (provided again that no unfair labor practice was involved).

- Organizational and recognition picketing in excess of 30 days without calling a representation election was barred, except that "informational" picketing could be continued for another 30 days if it did not lead to work stoppages or interfere with normal pickup and delivery service.

- Airline, railroad, farm and government workers were brought under the Taft-Hartley ban against secondary boycotts and recognition and organizational picketing.

- Strikers fired during a strike and not entitled to reinstatement were allowed to vote in representation elections conducted by the NLRB within a year after the strike's start.

- Unions were forbidden to picket retail stores to advertise that goods from a struck firm were being sold there.

Civil Rights

Civil rights proponents worked unavailingly in 1959 to bring substantive legislation to the House or Senate floor. In the end, all that was achieved was a two-year extension of the life of the Civil Rights Commission. Even that measure, offered at the last minute as a rider to the foreign aid bill, produced a flurry of Southern opposition before being approved by the Senate, by a vote of 71-18. (See Senate Roll Call No. 16, p. 92.)

Three groups were involved in the 1959 maneuvering over civil rights: a bipartisan group of Northern liberals, the moderate forces drawn to the proposals of the Eisenhower Administration and of Senate Majority Leader Johnson, and Southern Democrats opposed to any and all forms of civil rights laws.

On Jan. 20 Johnson introduced his bill (S 499) to extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission, strengthen penalties against bombings, give the Justice Department subpena powers in its investigations of voting right cases, and establish a new Federal Community Relations Service to assist in the conciliation of disputes over segregation.

The President submitted his seven-point program Feb. 5. Like the Johnson proposal, it included provisions to continue the Civil Rights Commission, strengthen anti-bombing sanctions, and empower the Justice Department to inspect voting records. In place of Johnson's conciliation service, it offered limited technical and financial aid to areas facing school-desegregation problems.

The President also asked Congress to make mob interference with school integration orders a Federal crime, to provide emergency schooling for children of armed forces personnel whose schools were closed by integration disputes, and to grant statutory authority to his Committee on Government Contracts, which seeks to eliminate discrimination in private employment.

The measures offered by the liberal bloc (S 810, HR 3147) went beyond the other proposals in one major respect -- empowering the Attorney General to file civil suits on his own initiative to end segregation in schools and to secure other rights outside the voting field. The Administration had sought this so-called Section 3 authority in 1957, when it was rejected by the Senate, but it opposed inclusion of the provision in any 1959 bill.

The liberals, led by Rep. Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), pushed their bill through a House Judiciary subcommittee June 17. But before reporting it Aug. 6, the full Judiciary Committee stripped it of its Section 3 provision and its provisions for giving technical aid to school districts and statutory authority to the Government Contracts Committee. This pared-down measure was then pigeonholed by the Rules Committee.

Across the Capitol, a "skeleton" bill was approved July 15 by a Senate Judiciary subcommittee, after lengthy hearings. Its sole provisions extended the life of the Civil Rights Commission and required the preservation of voting records. Even this was too much for the full Judiciary Committee, chaired by Sen. James O. Eastland (D Miss.), and remained on ice until adjournment.

All of these measures carry over to 1960, along with some new proposals -- notably that made by the Civil Rights Commission, in its report of Sept. 8, that Federal registrars be appointed to serve temporarily in areas where state officials refuse to permit Negroes to vote. An early debate was assured when Senate leaders agreed to schedule consideration of a civil rights bill around Feb. 15, 1960.

"Court Bills"

Critics of a series of Supreme Court decisions involving civil liberties renewed their drive in 1959 to enact overruling legislation, but met with no greater success than in 1958. As before, the House passed a number of "court bills" but the Senate failed to act. Enthusiasm for putting the Court in its place had slackened noticeably.

Granddaddy of all the measures was HR 3, introduced by Rep. Howard W. Smith (D Va.). Widely described as a "states rights" measure, it provided that Federal courts could not construe acts of Congress as being intended to preempt the field to the exclusion of state laws on the same subjects, unless Congress had so specified or there was a direct conflict between the Federal and state laws.

Proponents of the bill, reported June 2 by the House Judiciary Committee, argued that it was not meant to permit states to nullify Federal law but only to permit them to protect their citizens in certain twilight areas of Federal-state law. The bill's opponents countered that it would unsettle a century of established precedents and invite endless litigation.

All efforts to amend HR 3 on the House floor were defeated, and the measure was passed June 24 by a 225-192 margin, with most Republicans in favor and most Democrats opposed. (See House Roll Call No. 4, p. 86.) But the bill never emerged from the Senate Judiciary Committee, possibly because its backers achieved their principal objective in the "no man's land" provision of the labor reform bill (see p. 78).

Passports: In 1958 the Supreme Court held, in the Kent case, that Congress had never given the State Department authority to deny passports to Americans solely because of their "beliefs or associations," including membership in the Communist Party. The House passed a remedial bill, but the Senate didn't. In 1959, the Administration was itself less insistent on getting new legislation. The House, nevertheless, passed a measure (HR 9069) Sept. 8, giving the Secretary of State power to deny passports to Communists or Communist-sympathizers whose presence abroad might endanger U.S. security. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee, however, decided to postpone action on a passport bill until 1960.

Mallory Rule: In the 1957 Mallory case, the Court ruled that a confession obtained between arrest and arraignment was invalid if there had been delay in arraignment. The House July 7 voted 262-138 to pass a bill (HR 4957) providing that a confession obtained from a criminal suspect could not be barred as Federal court evidence solely because of delay in arraigning the suspect. The Senate took no action.

Yates Case: In this 1957 decision the Court, holding to a narrow construction of the term "organize" as used in the Smith Act, struck down convictions of several Communist Party leaders. As in 1958, the House March 2 passed a bill (HR 2369) making it clear that the Smith Act's prohibitions against organizing a group advocating the forcible overthrow of the U.S. Government extended to such continuing activities as the recruitment of members, as well as the initial act of organization. The Senate took no action.

Industrial Security: On June 29, 1959, in the Greene case, the Supreme Court voided the Government's industrial security program, used to screen out "security risks" in private defense plants, on grounds that neither the President nor Congress had authorized a program in which an employee could be denied access to classified information when he "was not afforded the safeguards of confrontation and cross-examination." The House Un-American Activities Committee Sept. 2 reported a bill to remedy the situation, but it never reached the floor.

Antitrust

An antitrust measure sought by the President for four years was finally sent to him July 13 when Congress completed action on S 726, amending the Clayton Act. It made cease-and-desist orders of the Federal Trade Commission final, without court enforcement orders, unless appealed to the courts within 60 days. But Congress took no action on the Administration's major antitrust request -- a pre-merger notification law giving the Justice Department power to review proposed mergers involving companies with $10 million or more in capital.

Two other antitrust measures were passed by the Senate but not the House. S 716, also requested by the President, would authorize the Attorney General to compel any business to produce documentary evidence for examination in a civil antitrust investigation. S 1062, passed May 14, was designed to strengthen Federal regulation of bank mergers; it was opposed by the Justice Department, however, as being inadequate.

The House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee June 9 reported a "fair trade" bill (HR 1253) that would permit manufacturers to sue in Federal court to enforce stipulated prices. And in the Senate the Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee Sept. 3 approved a bill (S 2545) to exempt some of the practices of professional football, basketball, and hockey teams from the antitrust laws. Neither of these measures reached the floor.

Miscellany

Renegotiation: The Renegotiation Act of 1951, enacted during the Korean war to enable the Defense Department to recapture excessive profits on defense contracts, was extended for only six months in 1958, until June 30, 1959, to permit a broad study of the law. None was made, however, and on May 27 the House passed a bill (HR 7086) extending the Act for four years. The Senate voted June 23 for a three-year extension, which was the term provided in the bill sent to the President July 1.

Reorganization: Congress administered two rebuffs to the President in connection with the Reorganization Act of 1949, authorizing him to reorganize executive agencies, subject to the veto of either Senate or House. First, the House, by a 266-124 vote July 7, adopted a resolution disapproving Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1959, shifting certain functions from the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of Agriculture. Second, the Senate failed to act on a bill (HR 5140), passed by the House June 2, extending the basic Act for another two years. So the legislation lapsed on June 1.

Equal Time: In a 4-3 ruling Feb. 19, the Federal Communications Commission held that Section 315 of the Federal Communications Act, requiring broadcasters to give "equal time" to all political candidates, extended to regular newscasts. The ruling brought a storm of protest; President Eisenhower called it "ridiculous" and Congress set about rewriting Section 315. As sent to the President Sept. 3, the bill (S 2424) exempted from the "equal time" requirement appearances by legally qualified candidates on a bona fide newscast, interview or documentary, or on-the-spot coverage of bona fide news events, including political conventions.

Obscene Mail: At the request of the Post Office Department, the House Sept. 1 passed a bill (HR 7379) to extend from 20 days to 45 days the time during which the Department may impound mail received by persons who send obscene or fraudulent matter through the mails. The Senate took no action.

Federal Reserve: Congress July 15 completed work on a bill (S 1120) authorizing the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System to permit member banks to "count all or part of their currency and coin as reserves." The effect of adding this so-called vault cash, amounting to an estimated $2 billion, to member bank reserves was to permit a substantial expansion of the banks' lending power.

Bank Powers: In separate action, Congress also sent the President, Aug. 26, a bill (HR 8160) increasing the ceiling on a national bank's borrowing authority from 100 percent of capital to 100 percent of capital plus 50 percent of surplus. The bill contained several other provisions, most of which were drawn from the Financial Institutions Act of 1957, an omnibus measure that passed the Senate but died in the House.

General Government

The United States of America – Now 50 Strong

Nothing accomplished by the 86th Congress in 1959 was likely to prove so enduring as its decision to confer statehood on a volcanic group of 20 Pacific Ocean islands lying more than 2,000 miles west of San Francisco. After 59 years of tutelage, the territory of Hawaii was finally joined to the Union as the 50th state.

Statehood for the one-time kingdom had proved an elusive goal for a decade, until the 85th Congress voted in 1958 to admit the territory of Alaska as the 49th state. Aspirations of the two non-contiguous territories had become interdependent, as Congressmen opposed to the claims of one or the other made common cause in their efforts to bottle up the necessary enabling legislation.

Opposition to statehood focused on the power wielded in the islands by Harry Bridges' International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, expelled from the CIO in 1950 for alleged Communist domination. (The union has 25,000 members in Hawaii, 90 percent of whom work on sugar and pineapple plantations.) Hawaii's great distance from the mainland, together with the fact that only 23 percent of its 1950 population was of Caucasian origin, also served to buttress opposition to statehood. Perhaps the most effective argument against statehood, both for Hawaii and for Alaska, came from Southern Democrats who feared that their strength on key civil rights issues would be diluted with the advent of four additional Senators from the West.

With the backing of Democratic and Republican leaders, proponents of statehood finally overcame the Southerners in 1958, to admit Alaska. Nearly identical bills to admit Hawaii were reported by the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee Feb. 11, 1959, and by its Senate counterpart March 5. The Senate took only a few hours to dispose of its bill, S 50, on March 11. A motion by Sen. Strom Thurmond (D S.C.) to recommit the bill, with instructions to report back a commonwealth measure, was rejected by voice vote. The Senate then passed S 50, by a 76-15 vote. (See Senate Roll Call No. 2, p. 90.) Next day the House acted with equal dispatch, first rejecting a motion to recommit, then passing S 50 by a 323-89 vote. (See House Roll Call No. 1, p. 86.) President Eisenhower signed the bill into law (P.L. 86-3) on March 18.

In accordance with the enabling act, Hawaii held both a primary election and a referendum on June 27, at which statehood was endorsed by a 17-to-1 margin. In the general election held July 28 the voters elected Republican William F. Quinn as Governor of the new state. To represent them in Congress, they chose Oren E. Long (D) and Hiram L. Fong (R) as Senators, and Daniel K. Inouye (D) as Representative.

On Aug. 21 the President signed the proclamation formally admitting Hawaii to the Union, and on Aug. 24 the new state's Congressional delegation was sworn in. Underscoring the historic nature of the ceremony was the fact that Sen. Fong, of Chinese origin, and Rep. Inouye, of Japanese origin, became the first persons of Oriental ancestry to take seats as Members of the Congress of the United States of America.

Government Relations

Congress showed no greater interest in 1959 than it had in 1958 in the President's proposal that the Federal Government make a start on transferring responsibility to the states for certain grant programs, beginning with water pollution control. Indeed, Democrats very nearly succeeded in doubling the size of that program. (See p. 68) In other respects, however, the legislators demonstrated awareness of the need for resolving some of the complexities of intergovernmental relations.

The House Aug. 17 and the Senate Sept. 10 passed different versions of a bill (HR 6904) to establish an Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations. As finally approved Sept. 12, the measure provided for a permanent, bipartisan body to be composed of 26 members, to include six Members of Congress, four Governors, four mayors, three state legislators, three county officials, three Federal officials, and three private citizens. The Commission was directed to file an annual report on its activities.

Behind this action was the fact that mayors and other local officials resented their lack of representation on the Joint Federal-State Action Committee, established at the President's suggestion in 1957 and composed exclusively of Governors and Federal officials.

To deal specifically with a demand from the U.S. Council of Mayors for attention to the growing problems of metropolitan areas, the Senate Sept. 10 passed a bill (S 1431) to establish a 21-member Commission on Metropolitan Problems to study Federal policies and programs "relating to the needs" of metropolitan areas. A similar bill was reported in the House; neither measure received final action before adjournment, however.

Congress did complete action Sept. 11 on a bill (S 2568) requested by the President, authorizing the Atomic Energy Commission to enter into agreements with the states to turn over certain responsibilities for regulating the handling of such materials as radioisotopes. AEC was authorized to train state health and safety officials for the purpose.

Nominations

In a session overrun with partisan issues, none was so long or bitterly debated as President Eisenhower's choice of Lewis L. Strauss to be Secretary of Commerce. Given an interim appointment Nov. 13, 1958 after completing a five-year term as Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, Strauss came under heavy and mounting criticism from Democrats from the moment his nomination came before the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

In the course of hearings stretching from March 17 to May 14, Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) and other Democrats accused the nominee of having withheld vital information on several occasions from the Joint Atomic Energy Committee, having distorted his own role in the fabled Dixon-Yates affair and other policy disputes, and having evaded the questions of his Congressional inquisitors.

When the nomination was finally put to a vote, the Commerce Committee divided 9-to-8 in favor of confirmation. The majority extolled Strauss, the minority condemned him for conduct "lacking in the degree of integrity and competence essential to proper performance" of his duties as Secretary of Commerce. With pro- and anti-Strauss forces exerting unprecedented pressures on uncommitted Senators, the nomination moved to the floor for a showdown.

When it came June 19, with only three of the 98 Senators not voting, the nomination was rejected, 46-49. (See Senate Roll Call No. 6, p. 90.) With the help of two Republicans -- William Langer (N.D.) and Margaret Chase Smith (Maine) -- Majority Leader Johnson and 46 other Democrats had administered the first veto of a major Eisenhower appointment in six years -- and the first rejection of a Cabinet nomination since 1925. Strauss resigned June 30; Under Secretary Frederick H. Mueller was promptly confirmed as Secretary of Commerce.

Three other Eisenhower appointees won Senate confirmation over minority opposition:

- Potter Stewart, given a recess appointment Oct. 7, 1958 as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, provoked Southern Democrats by endorsing the Court's 1954 desegregation ruling, but on May 5 the Senate voted 70-17 to confirm his nomination.
- Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce, named Feb. 26 to be Ambassador to Brazil, won confirmation April 28 by a 79-11 vote, but promptly booted it by telling an interviewer: "My difficulties, of course, go back some years when Sen. Wayne Morse (D Ore.) was kicked in the head by a horse." This affront to Senatorial dignity was not to be appeased; having let the cat out of the bag, so to speak, Mrs. Luce resigned May 1.
- Ogden R. Reid, nominated March 10 as Ambassador to Israel, ran into stiff opposition from Chairman J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, who challenged the 33-year-old editor's qualifications for the job. But Reid's appointment was confirmed June 4 by voice vote.

President vs. Congress

Highlighting the policy clash between the Chief Executive and the Legislative Branch in 1959 were a series of Presidential vetoes and attempts by Congress to override. By adjournment, the President had vetoed 10 bills, including two housing measures, three farm bills, and two public works bills (see p. 66, 70, 71). Congress tried to override five vetoes but succeeded in both houses just once. Passage of the second public works bill over the President's veto was the first overriding accomplished in the Eisenhower era. Later, the President pocket vetoed 10 more bills.

Less dramatic, but no less important, were two other disputes involving the knotty issue of the separation of powers. One concerned fiscal controls, the other the question of executive privilege.

In passing a TVA self-financing measure, Congress attached a provision giving itself the power to alter TVA's power construction program by concurrent resolution, not subject to veto. (See p. 65) The President said this would allow Congress to "modify the Authority's program without regard to the views of the President and without opportunity for the President to exercise his constitutional role in the legislative process." He insisted that the provision be deleted; Congress quickly complied.

The second dispute was provoked by provisions inserted by Congress in mutual security legislation requiring the President to make certain information public. In signing the authorization bill July 24, he noted that it was "on the express premise that the three amendments relating to disclosure are not intended to alter and cannot alter the recognized constitutional duty and power of the Executive with respect to the disclosure of information, documents and other materials." Any other construction, he said, "would raise grave constitutional questions under the historic separation of powers doctrine."

Five days later, the House added to the foreign aid appropriation bill a provision to prohibit expenditures if the International Cooperation Administration failed to furnish Congress information within 20 days of its request. This was watered down by the Senate, and the final provision, giving ICA 35 days to comply, included a large loophole. If he didn't wish to comply, the President could certify that he had forbidden the disclosure, giving his reason for doing so.

Secrecy in the Executive Branch continued to draw Congressional fire, however. In a Sept. 3 report covering 35 investigations of complaints against secrecy, the House Government Operations Committee said that claims of executive privilege were being raised "by subordinate Federal officials more and more frequently" to avoid disclosing information. Of the Defense Department, the report said: "To an alarming degree, the Pentagon's information organization has assumed characteristics of a propaganda ministry, and confusion has replaced candor in areas of vital importance" to the Nation.

Miscellany

Government Employees: The only measure of wide interest to Federal employees to be sent to the President in 1959 was a bill (S 2162) cleared Sept. 14 establishing a prepaid, voluntary health insurance program for Federal workers and their families, with the Government paying one-half of the annual cost.

Home Rule: The long struggle to gain home rule for the District of Columbia continued in 1959. The Senate July 15 passed a bill (S 1681) giving the District the right to elect a mayor, city council, and non-voting delegate to the House -- the fifth such measure to clear the Senate since 1949. But Southern opponents in the House successfully bottled it up.

Third Term: A proposal to repeal the 22nd Amendment, limiting U.S. Presidents to two terms in office, brought comments from the incumbent and his predecessor. Former President Truman said he had "never thought well" of the Amendment, while President Eisenhower initially called it "unwise" but later opposed repeal efforts, saying Congress should "see how it works" for a few years. No action was taken beyond Senate Subcommittee approval Sept. 1.

Poll Tax: Sen. Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) and 66 co-sponsors introduced a proposed Constitutional amendment Aug. 6 (S J Res 126) to ban the poll tax -- levied in five Southern states -- as a requirement in elections for Federal office. Endorsed five times by the House but never by the Senate, the proposal received no further notice.

Judgeships: The Senate Judiciary Committee Sept. 10 reported a bill to create 25 new Federal judgeships, but the bill never reached the floor.

Senate Rules

Northern liberals were defeated in the opening days of the 1959 session in their efforts to substantially overhaul the filibuster rule of the Senate. The 10-year-old Rule 22 required the vote of two-thirds of the entire Senate membership to shut off debate. It also said debate could not be shut off on proposals to consider changes in Senate rules.

Majority Leader Lyndon Johnson seized the initiative from the liberal bloc in the first minutes of the session by offering a resolution (S Res 5) revising Rule 22 to enable a two-thirds majority of Senators present and voting to shut off debate on any measure, including proposed rule changes.

Liberals countered with a motion -- defeated in 1953 and 1957 -- that the Senate proceed to consider the adoption of new rules. Acceptance of the motion would then have permitted a simple majority of the Senate to change Rule 22. Johnson blocked consideration of the motion, made by Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.), until Jan. 9, when he moved to table it. The Senate, knowing that Democratic and Republican leaders had agreed to the modest change embodied in S Res 5, voted to table the Anderson motion, 60-36. (See Senate Roll Call No. 1, p. 90.)

Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) then offered a substitute for S Res 5, to enable a majority of the Senate membership to shut off debate 15 days after 16 Senators filed a cloture motion. The Douglas amendment was rejected, 28-67, and the Senate on Jan. 12 voted 72-22 to adopt S Res 5. Chief lesson of the debate and its outcome seemed to be that Sen. Johnson was indeed a skilled leader and parliamentarian.

Summary of 28 Key Votes In Senate and House

Legislation is passed or defeated by Congress in several ways -- by unanimous consent, voice vote, teller vote, division or standing vote, and roll-call vote. Only by the roll-call vote is it possible to establish beyond question the public record of a Member on the issues. The first session of the 86th Congress put an unusually high number of questions to the test of a roll-call vote: 215 in the Senate, 87 in the House. From this number Congressional Quarterly selected 28 as Key Votes -- 12 in the House and 16 in the Senate. The stand taken by each Member on these votes is recorded in the charts beginning on page 86. Below are brief summaries of the issues at stake in the 28 Key Votes.

House

1. The territory of Hawaii surmounted the last obstacle to statehood when the House, with unaccustomed dispatch, approved within 24 hours a Senate-passed bill to admit the island paradise as the 50th state, by a 323-89 margin. (See story, p. 82)

2. A hoary dispute between public- and private-power advocates began to approach resolution when the House, by a 245-170 vote, passed a bill authorizing the Tennessee Valley Authority to issue bonds to finance new power facilities. (See story, p. 65)

3. The annual struggle over the Mutual Security Program reached its first climax when the House, by a vote of 271-142, passed a $3.5 billion authorization measure after cutting the President's request by almost 10 percent. (See story, p. 72)

4. Over Justice Department opposition, Southern Democrats and most Republicans combined forces to pass, 225-192, a far-reaching bill to nullify the doctrine of Federal preemption in fields of concurrent Federal-state jurisdiction. (See story, p. 80)

5. In many eyes, the single most important vote of the 1959 session came when the House, given the choice of two labor reform measures, picked the tougher one by a close but comfortable margin, 229-201. (See story, p. 78)

6. Having voted to substitute the stiff Landrum-Griffin bill for a weaker committee measure, the House proceeded to pass the former by a top-heavy majority, 303-125, despite the overwhelming opposition of organized labor. (See story, p. 78)

7. A minor bill aimed at Secretary Benson assumed new significance when the President vetoed it and the House, in its first attempt of the session to override, fell four votes shy of a two-thirds majority on a 280-146 ballot. (See story, p. 70)

8. Four months later, the House again failed to override a veto, this time of a catch-all public works bill. The 274-138 vote was only one "yea" short of the required margin -- a result made possible by several switches. (See story, p. 71)

9. When a second version of the public works bill was also vetoed, insult was added to injury. With a dozen votes to spare, the House, for the first time in the Eisenhower Administration, passed the measure over the veto, 280-121. (See story, p. 71)

10. After President Eisenhower vetoed the first housing bill, the Senate drafted another measure that met some, but not all, of his objections. This bill, also fated to be vetoed, was passed by the House, 283-105. (See story, p. 66)

11. A long wrangle between Democrats and the President over a crisis in highway finances was ended when the House, by a 243-162 vote, passed the bill raising the Federal tax on gasoline from 3 cents to 4 cents per gallon. (See story, p. 62)

12. An equally partisan and heated dispute over interest rates was extended into 1960 when the House refused, 134-255, to give the President authority to lift the interest ceiling on long-term Treasury bonds. (See story, p. 65)

Senate

1. A renewed effort by Senate liberals to revise the filibuster rule was effectively thwarted when Sen. Johnson, displaying his usual parliamentary skill, persuaded the Senate to vote 60-36 to table the key liberal motion. (See story, p. 84)

2. One of the few policy objectives on which Democratic and Republican leaders were prepared to agree in 1959 -- statehood for Hawaii -- won overwhelming approval when the Senate, by a 76-15 vote, passed the enabling act. (See story, p. 82)

3. In a reenactment of the 1958 debate over a labor reform bill, the Senate acted on 55 amendments to the Kennedy bill. The only major change to win approval was an amendment by Sen. McClellan, embodying a "Bill of Rights" for union members, agreed to by a one-vote margin, 47-46. (See story, p. 78)

4. In a second key vote on the Kennedy bill, the Senate refused, 39-52, to add a provision putting an end to "no man's land" cases by turning over to the states jurisdiction in cases the NLRB refuses to handle. (See story, p. 78)

5. By a slightly closer margin the Senate also rejected, 41-50, a McClellan amendment to tighten the Taft-Hartley Act's ban on secondary boycotts -- a key objective of the President later achieved in the final labor bill. (See story, p. 78)

6. President Eisenhower's nomination of Lewis L. Strauss to be Secretary of Commerce, bitterly debated for several months by his Democratic detractors and Republican supporters, was finally rejected on a party-line vote, 46-49. (See story, p. 83)

7. A bold effort to grant the Development Loan Fund long-term borrowing authority was frustrated when the Senate refused, 42-48, to table a motion challenging the legality of the proposed financing arrangement. (See story, p. 72)

8. Rising Congressional criticism of the military assistance portion of the Mutual Security Program culminated in the Senate's decision, by a 52-41 vote, to cut $300 million from the President's $1.6 billion military aid request. (See story, p. 72)

9. Worried over the Army's capacity to fight a limited war, House and Senate Committees added $400 million to the defense budget for modernizing Army equipment. But the Senate refused, 43-48, to add another $234 million. (See story, p. 76)

10. The Senate Finance Committee cut by a substantial amount the benefits provided in a House bill revising veterans' pensions. But the Senate voted 75-20 to restore the more generous provisions of the House measure. (See story, p. 69)

11. For a month after the President vetoed the first housing bill, Democrats pondered the next step. When they finally decided to attempt to override, the effort fell nine votes short of a two-thirds majority -- 55-40. (See story, p. 66)

12. When the President vetoed a second housing bill not much different from the first, the Senate immediately put the issue to a vote. This time the 58-36 ballot to override fell five votes shy of the required number. (See story, p. 66)

13. Delay by the House in acting on the President's request to increase the Federal tax on gasoline by 1½ cents prompted Senate efforts to add the provision to another revenue bill. But the move was rejected by a 33-46 vote. (See story, p. 62)

14. When the House finally voted to override the President's second veto of the public works bill, the Senate quickly voted likewise, 72-23, handing the President his first such defeat during his seven years in office. (See story, p. 71)

15. A move to ease restrictions on granting aid to Poland and other Soviet-bloc satellites had been defeated in 1958 by one vote. But in 1959 the Senate voted 49-40 to pass a bill effecting the Administration-backed change. (See story, p. 72)

16. Southern Democrats precipitated the final debate of the session, over a measure to extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission for two years. When put to a vote, the Senate endorsed the extension by a resounding majority, 71-18. (See story p. 80)

House Key Votes on Hawaii Statehood, TVA Bonds, Foreign Aid, States Rights, Labor Regulation

1. S 50. Passage of the Senate version of the Hawaii statehood bill. Passed 323-89 (D 203-65; R 120-24), March 12, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position.

2. HR 3460. Authorize the Tennessee Valley Authority to issue up to $750 million worth of revenue bonds to finance new power facilities. Passage of the bill. Passed 245-170 (D 238-31; R 7-139), May 7, 1959. The President did not take a position on passage of the bill.

3. HR 7500. Mutual Security Act of 1959 authorizing $3,542,-600,000 in fiscal 1960 funds. Passed 271-142 (D 182-83; R 89-59), June 18, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position.

4. HR 3. A bill to permit Federal courts to strike down state laws under the Federal preemption doctrine only if Congress had specified its intention to preempt the field of legislation involved or if a state and a Federal law were in irreconcilable conflict, and to permit state enforcement of laws barring subversive activities against the Federal Government. Passage of the bill. Passed 225-192 (D 111-162; R 114-30), June 24, 1959. A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position.

5. HR 8342. Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959. Landrum (D Ga.) and Griffin (R Mich.) amendment to substitute for the committee bill the language of their bill, containing curbs on secondary boycotts and organizational and recognition picketing, and giving the states power to handle "no man's land" labor disputes. Agreed to 229-201 (D 95-184; R 134-17), Aug. 13, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position.

6. HR 8342. Passage of the bill. Passed 303-125 (D 156-122; R 147-3), Aug. 14, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position.

House Key Votes on REA and Public Works Vetoes, Housing Bill, Gas Tax, Interest Ceiling on Bonds

7. S 144. A bill to give the Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration final authority to approve or disapprove REA loans and to vest the Administrator with all REA functions, which were transferred to the Secretary of Agriculture under Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1939 and Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1953. Passage of the bill over the President's veto (two-thirds majority required). Failed to pass 280-146 (D 274-4; R 6-142), April 30, 1959 (284 "yeas" were required for passage). A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position.

8. HR 7509. Fiscal 1960 Public Works appropriation bill, appropriating funds for 67 projects that were not in the President's budget. Passage of the bill over the President's veto (two-thirds majority required). Failed to pass 274-138 (D 263-6; R 11-132), Sept. 2, 1959 (275 "yeas" were required to override the veto). A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position.

9. HR 9105. Revised fiscal 1960 Public Works appropriation bill, making an across-the-board cut of 2½ percent in the funds provided in a vetoed bill (HR 7509), but retaining 67 projects that were not in the President's budget. Passage of the bill over the President's veto (two-thirds majority required). Passed 280-121 (D 260-5; R 20-116), Sept. 10, 1959 (268 "yeas" were required to override the veto). A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position.

10. S 2539. Housing Act of 1959 (revised bill). Passage of the bill. Passed 283-106 (D 229-29; R 54-77), Aug. 27, 1959. A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position.

11. HR 8678. Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1959, raising the Federal tax on gasoline from 3 cents to 4 cents per gallon through June 30, 1961. Passed 243-162 (D 138-127; R 105-35), Sept. 3, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position.

12. HR 9035. Permit an increase in the interest rate on Series E and H Government savings bonds. Simpson (R Pa.) motion to recommit the bill with instructions that it be amended to permit the issuance of long-term U.S. securities at rates of interest over 4.25 percent when the President determines it to be in the national interest. Rejected 134-255 (D 3-252; R 131-3), Sept. 4, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position.

Senate Key Votes on Rules, Statehood for Hawaii, Labor Regulation, Confirmation of Lewis Strauss

1. Senate rules. Johnson motion to table Anderson motion to consider adoption of rules for the Senate of the 86th Congress. The Anderson motion also provided for adoption of all 85th Congress rules except Rule 22 (on cloture) and called for immediate consideration of a revised Rule 22. Tabling motion agreed to 60-36 (D 40-22; R 20-14), Jan. 9, 1959. The President did not take a position on the motion.

2. S 50. Statehood for Hawaii. Passage of the bill. Passed 76-15 (D 46-14; R 30-1), March 11, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position.

3. S 1555. Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959. McClellan (D Ark.) amendment to add to the bill a new section providing a "Bill of Rights," with criminal penalties, to protect union members against unfair actions by their unions. Agreed to 47-46 (D 15-44; R 32-2), April 22, 1959. The President did not take a position on the amendment.

4. S 1555. McClellan (D Ark.) amendment to permit state labor relations agencies or state courts to handle labor disputes the National Labor Relations Board declines to handle. Rejected 39-52 (D 16-43; R 23-9), April 23, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position.

5. S 1555. McClellan (D Ark.) amendment to revise the Taft-Hartley Act ban on secondary boycotts to prohibit unions from inducing or coercing an employer or employee, by any means, to stop doing business with another firm or handling its goods, and to extend the secondary boycott prohibitions to all unions. Rejected 41-50 (D 16-43; R 25-7), April 24, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position.

6. Nomination of Lewis L. Strauss as Secretary of Commerce. Rejected 46-49 (D15-47; R 31-2), June 19, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position.

CQ Fact Sheet On Eisenhower Boxscore

CONGRESS APPROVES 40.8% OF PRESIDENT'S PROGRAM

A Democratic-controlled 86th Congress gave its approval to 40.8 percent of President Eisenhower's specific legislative requests in 1959. Mr. Eisenhower's score with Congress was higher by 4 percent than in his last try with a first session of a Democratic-dominated Congress. In 1957, the President hit a new low with only 37 percent of his requests receiving approval.

The first session of the 86th Congress, with about two-thirds of its membership in both houses Democrats, approved 93 of the President's 228 requests. It rejected 48 of them, but that unfavorable action could be reversed in the second session.

Mr. Eisenhower's best years with Congress were his first two. The Republican-controlled 83rd Congress gave him a batting average of 72.7 percent in 1953 and 64.7 percent in 1954. Since then, his program has not done so well with Democratic majorities in Congress.

In 1959, major victories for the President were passage of a "strong" labor reform bill, an increase in the Federal tax on gasoline, passage of a bill permitting Hawaii to enter the Union and extension of existing tax rates. Several of Mr. Eisenhower's major requests to Congress were only partially granted. He asked for a full civil rights enforcement program; Congress merely extended the life of the Civil Rights Commission. The President asked Congress to lift interest rate ceilings on long-term Treasury bonds and on savings bonds but Congress complied only with the latter request.

Action on 1959 Requests

Here is the breakdown of Congressional action on President Eisenhower's 228 specific legislative requests in the first session of the 86th Congress:

- 93 requests were approved by both the House and Senate and were signed into law by the President -- 40.8 percent.
- 9 requests were passed by either the House or the Senate but not both -- 3.9 percent.
- 6 requests had been reported from committee to the floor of either house but had not come up for a vote -- 2.6 percent.
- 18 requests received committee hearings but were not reported to the floor -- 7.9 percent.
- 54 requests received no action at all -- 23.7 percent.
- 48 requests received unfavorable action, either through rejection in committee or on the floor -- 21.1 percent.

The Eisenhower legislative scores in the 83rd Congress (1953-54 - Republican), 84th Congress (1955-56 - Democratic), 85th Congress (1957-58 - Democratic) and the first session in 1959 (Democratic):

Year	Proposals Submitted	Approved By Congress	Approval Score
1953	44	32	72.7%
1954	232	150	64.7
1955	207	96	46.3
1956	225	103	45.7
1957	206	76	36.9
1958	234	110	47.0
1959	228	93	40.8

Boxscore Ground Rules

Only specific requests for legislative action submitted to Congress by the President were tabulated for the Boxscore. Excluded from the list of legislative requests were proposals advocated by officials of the Executive Branch, but not specifically by the President; measures that the President endorsed but did not request; suggestions that Congress consider or study particular topics, if no legislative action was requested; nominations.

Almost all appropriation requests were excluded because they are a yearly occurrence and provide the funds necessary to carry out regular functions of the Government. But CQ included several appropriation requests the President designated at key points of certain programs, and which were submitted in special messages (rather than in the budget).

Because requests for approval of treaties carry over from one Congress to the next, CQ listed all unratified treaties sent to the Senate by Mr. Eisenhower from 1956 on.

The number of requests is a fair, but necessarily somewhat arbitrary, count of the Presidential proposals. Requests can be totaled in many ways. Though not all the President's proposals were equally important, CQ makes no attempt to weigh them. But a rough, automatic weighting results from major requests usually having several points.

Congress does not always vote "yes" or "no" on a Presidential proposal. CQ evaluates compromises to determine if the request is closer to approval or to rejection of the President's request.

CONGRESSIONAL QUARTERLY'S EISENHOWER BOXSCORE FOR 1959

Following is a list of President Eisenhower's 1959 legislative requests to Congress and action taken on them in the first session of the 86th Congress. A letter in parentheses following each request indicates the principal and most definitive source of the request. A key to the letters is given in the box on p. 93. Treaty and atomic agreements requests are followed by the date they were sent to Congress.

SECTION 3

86th CONGRESS... 1st SESSION INDIVIDUAL PERFORMANCES

Eisenhower Support

Voting Participation

Party Unity

Conservative Coalition

HOW CQ MEASURES CONGRESS' PERFORMANCE

The legislative record of the individual Senator or Representative is composed of actions -- or inactions -- many of which are not a matter of public record. As a member of one or more standing committees and their several subcommittees, where the shape of legislation generally is determined, the legislator participates in the making of important decisions, often behind closed doors. As bills move to the floor, he may be busy rounding up supporters -- again out of public view -- for an amendment that will be offered. On the floor he may or may not participate in the recorded debate. The only official record by which the actions of any legislator may be compared with those of his colleagues is the roll-call vote.

The great bulk of proposed legislation that reaches the floor is disposed of by voice vote -- without a record of each legislator's position. For example, Congress in 1958 passed 2,718 bills, yet recorded only 293 roll calls. Some of the legislation accepted or rejected by voice vote is important. Conversely, some of the matters disposed of by roll-call vote are relatively unimportant. Nevertheless, most roll calls involve substantial issues, and they provide, in the final analysis, the only indisputable record of each legislator's actions.

For these reasons, Congressional Quarterly publishes the results of all roll calls in specially designed voting charts. These show summaries of the proposals put to a vote and the positions recorded by the Members. CQ's roll-call charts present the individual Member's complete voting record, in so far as it is available.

This voting record, covering a wide span of legislative issues during any session, is inevitably open to partisan analysis and interpretation by the two major parties and other interested groups. In an attempt to provide students of Congress with a meaningful yet nonpartisan analysis of record voting, Congressional Quarterly conducts six separate and distinct studies, each under a specific system of ground rules, as follows:

• PRESIDENTIAL SUPPORT and OPPOSITION: This study is designed to show the extent to which each Member of Congress supports or opposes the specific legislative requests or stands of the President. Key step is the choice of roll calls for inclusion in the tabulation. Only those votes are included on which it is possible to say that the President, were he a Member of Congress, would have voted "yea" or "nay" on the basis of his personal messages and statements issued before the vote was taken. This method results in the inclusion of some non-controversial votes as well as the exclusion of certain important roll calls on which the President's own position was not publicly clear at the time the vote was taken. Any departure from the method used, however, would lead to a subjective weighting of issues, the results of which would be open to serious challenge.

• ECONOMY VOTING: This study is designed to show the extent to which each Member of Congress has supported or opposed economy efforts on roll-call votes directly affecting Federal Government spending. Key step is the choice of the roll calls for inclusion in the tabulation. Only roll calls with a direct effect on Federal spending are included; important roll calls with an indirect effect on Federal spending are excluded. No attempt is made to weight the votes according to the amount of money involved in each. And no judgment is implied as to whether the vote involved "wise" or "foolish" economy, a "real" or a "paper" saving.

• PARTY UNITY: This study is designed to show the extent to which each Member votes with the majority of his party when that majority is opposed by a majority of the other party. Thus, by definition, roll calls included in the tabulation of Party Unity scores are selected automatically according to the numerical outcome of the vote. While this is an inherently arbitrary division, since the majority in question may range from unanimity to one more than the minority, it is the only method available that is free of bias. Any approach based on a yardstick determined by the votes of the respective party leaders runs into the fact that these leaders occasionally are to be found voting with a distinct party minority. In the absence of any more reliable method of determining party positions when they are in opposition, the system used by CQ provides the best index to a Member's support of his party relative to that of his party colleagues.

• BIPARTISAN SUPPORT: This study, in contrast to Party Unity, is designed to show the extent to which each Member votes with his party's majority when both party majorities are in agreement. All roll calls thus are classified automatically either as Party Unity or Bipartisan Support votes, according to the mathematical outcome. As in the case of the former, the size of the majorities may vary widely on Bipartisan Support votes, although they tend to be large in the case of votes on relatively non-controversial issues.

• VOTING PARTICIPATION: This study is designed to show the extent to which each Member actually casts "yea" or "nay" votes -- the only kind that can determine the legislative outcome -- on roll calls for which he is eligible. Relatively few Members score 100 percent since absences due to illness, committee sessions and travel are common. Voting Participation is not, however, a record of absenteeism as such. It is a measure of the relative extent to which Members make effective use of their voting privilege.

• ON THE RECORD: Members who, for one reason or another, do not cast "yea" or "nay" votes on roll calls are generally recorded as being for or against the measure voted upon. These recorded positions are added to the "yea" and "nay" votes in tabulating On The Record, which is a measure of the extent to which each Member makes his position on all roll-call votes a matter of public record.

Each of the foregoing studies is subject to the qualifications set forth in the Ground Rules for each study. Full understanding of these qualifications is essential to any interpretation placed upon the group and individual scores derived from the methods employed.

CQ Fact Sheet On Voting Participation

CONGRESSMEN VOTED ON 89% OF 1959 ROLL CALLS

The average Member of the 86th Congress voted "yea" or "nay" on 89 percent of the roll calls in 1959, and went "on the record" on 97 percent of the votes -- slightly more often, in both cases, than in the 85th Congress. Congressional Quarterly's tabulation was based on all 215 roll calls in the Senate and all 87 in the House in 1959. CQ's scores measure two things:

- Voting Participation -- The percentage of total roll calls on which a Member cast "yea" or "nay" votes.
- On the Record -- The percentage of total roll calls on which a Member made his position known by casting "yea" or "nay" votes, entering live pairs, announcing his stands, or answering CQ polls. (For full definitions see box on next page.)

Failures to cast "yea" or "nay" votes usually may be traced to valid causes, including illness and conflicting official duties. For names of Members absent for a day or more in 1959 because of their illness or illness or death in their families, see p. 108.

Definitions

● VOTING PARTICIPATION -- Percentage of roll-call votes on which Congressman votes "yea" or "nay." Failures to vote "yea" or "nay" lower scores -- even if the Congressman votes "present," enters a pair, announces his stand in the Congressional Record, or answers the CQ Poll. Only votes of "yea" or "nay" directly affect the outcome of a roll call. Voting Participation is the closest approach to an attendance record, but it is only an approximation. A Congressman may be present and nevertheless decline to vote "yea" or "nay" -- usually because he has entered a pair with an absent Member.

● ON THE RECORD -- Percentage of roll-call votes on which Congressman makes his position known by voting "yea" or "nay," entering a live pair, announcing his stand, or answering the CQ Poll. Scores are lowered by votes of "present" and by general pairs -- as well as by complete silence on the issue. Votes of "present" and general pairs are not expressions of opinion. On the Record does not measure the effectiveness of a Congressman in determining the outcome of roll calls, but it does show how frequently he tells his constituents and the general public where he stands on specific issues. Even if he must be absent, a Congressman can go On the Record.

Pairs are used to cancel out the effect of absences. A Congressman who expects to be absent for a roll call pairs off with another Congressman, both of them agreeing not to vote. A live pair concerns one or several specific issues. A Congressman who would vote "yea" pairs with a Congressman who would vote "nay." Thus, both announce their stands. A general pair is a more arbitrary matching of absent Congressmen, not involving announcement of their stands.

The CQ Poll gives absent Congressmen the opportunity to announce their stands on roll calls. On all roll calls, CQ sends out ballots asking Congressmen how they would have voted if they had been present.

CQ Fact Sheet On Eisenhower Support-Opposition

CONGRESS BACKS PRESIDENT ON 52% OF 1959 TESTS

The 1959 session of the Democratic-controlled 86th Congress backed President Eisenhower on 91 of 175 roll-call votes that presented clear-cut tests of support for his views. This margin of victory -- 52 percent -- was the lowest since the President entered office in 1953, and represented a sharp decline from 1958 when his views prevailed on 76 percent of 148 test roll calls.

Behind the dramatic drop in the President's test-vote fortunes in 1959 was the fact that Democrats held nearly 2-to-1 majorities in both Senate and House. Thus, of his 84 test-vote defeats, 70 found a majority of Republicans supporting him, a majority of Democrats opposing him. Equally important was the fact that more than one-half of the Presidential defeats recorded in this study were later reversed or substantially modified through subsequent Congressional action or inaction, or Presidential vetoes.

The 175 test votes of 1959 (for list, see p. 119) were selected on the basis of a clear indication, as revealed in the President's own messages and public statements prior to the vote, that the President would have supported or opposed the proposal put to a vote. (For detailed Ground Rules, see p. 125.) The votes chosen numbered well over one-half of all 1959 roll calls -- 121 of 215 in the Senate, and 54 of 87 in the House.

Details of this study show that:

- The Senate backed the President's stand on 61 of 121 test roll calls, or 50 percent of the time (down from 76 percent in 1958).
- The House backed the President's stand on 30 of 54 test roll calls or 55 percent of the time (down from 74 percent in 1958).
- On Domestic Policy matters, Congress backed the President's stand on 60 of 137 test roll calls, or 44 percent of the time (down from 73 percent in 1958).
- On Foreign Policy matters, Congress backed the President's stand on 29 of 38 test roll calls, or 76 percent of the time (down from 85 percent in 1958).

Patterns of Support

The pattern of voting on the Eisenhower-issue roll calls in 1959 shows:

BIPARTISAN -- 72 of the 175 roll calls found Democratic and Republican majorities in agreement. The President won 61 of these votes, lost 11. Five of the losses came on the public works bill. (See Senate RC 120, 121, 143, 154, 157, 181, 204, 88, and 189; House RC 34 and 61.)

REPUBLICAN -- 95 of the 175 roll calls found the Republican majority supporting the President's stand while the Democratic majority opposed it. The President won 25 of these tests, lost 70. (By contrast, in 1958 the two party majorities were opposed on only 42 of the 148 test votes, and the President won more than he lost -- 22 to 20 -- reflecting the narrower division of strength in the 85th Congress.)

DEMOCRATIC -- Only eight of the 175 roll calls found a majority of Democrats supporting the President's stand while a majority of Republicans opposed it. The President won five of these (Senate RC 26, 210, House RC 25, 31, 84) and lost three (Senate RC 191, House RC 46, 47).

For the first time in the Eisenhower Administration, Democrats opposed the President, collectively, more often than they supported him. Their composite Support score for 1959 was 39 percent, their Opposition score 51 percent. By contrast, Republicans as a group scored 70 percent in Support, 20 percent in Opposition. (See next page.)

As in past years, Democrats collectively gave the President greater support on foreign policy issues than on domestic matters -- 62 percent compared to 34 percent. Republicans, on the other hand, gave him greater support on domestic matters (71 percent) than on foreign policy questions (63 percent).

In regional terms, the President got most support from Eastern Republicans (73 percent) and least support from Western Democrats (36 percent) in 1959. This contrast was sharpest in the Senate, where on domestic issues Eastern Republicans led with 77 percent Support, while Western Democrats scored only 26 percent.

Absences

Eisenhower-Support scores for each Member of Congress are shown in the charts on the following pages. Failures to vote -- which lower scores -- usually may be traced to valid causes, including conflicting official duties and illnesses. Among those absent for a day or more in 1959 because of their illness or illness or death in their families were the following Members:

Democratic Sens. Bartlett and Gruening (Alaska), McClellan (Ark.), Dodd (Conn.), Frear (Del.), Hartke (Ind.), Hart (Mich.), Hennings (Mo.), Mansfield (Mont.), Bible (Nev.), Neuberger (Ore.), Green (R.I.), Magnuson (Wash.), and O'Mahoney (Wyo.); Republican Sens. Hickenlooper and Martin (Iowa), Beall (Md.), Bridges (N.H.), Langer (N.D.), and Case (S.D.).

Democratic Reps. Elliott (Ala.), Holifield (Calif.), Aspinall (Colo.), Carter and Coad (Iowa), Stubblefield (Ky.), Brooks (La.), Diggs and Rabaut (Mich.), Rodino (N.J.), Farbstein, Multer and Powell (N.Y.), Hall and Whitener (N.C.), and Holland and Walter (Pa.); Republican Reps. Jensen (Iowa), Martin (Mass.), Broomfield (Mich.), Andersen (Minn.), Auchincloss and Canfield (N.J.), Robison and Taylor (N.Y.), Bush (Pa.), Reece (Tenn.), and Withrow (Wis.).

Eisenhower Support-Opposition Scores

House All Issues -- 1959 & 85th Congress

1. OVER-ALL SUPPORT Score, 1959. Percentage of 54 Eisenhower-issue roll calls in 1959 -- both foreign and domestic -- on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the President's position. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

2. OVER-ALL OPPOSITION Score, 1959. Percentage of 54 Eisenhower-issue roll calls in 1959 -- both foreign and domestic -- on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with the President's position. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

3. OVER-ALL SUPPORT Score, 85th Congress. Percentage of 110 Eisenhower-issue roll calls in 1957 and 1958 -- both foreign and domestic -- on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the President's position. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

4. OVER-ALL OPPOSITION Score, 85th Congress. Percentage of 110 Eisenhower-issue roll calls in 1957 and 1958 -- both foreign and domestic -- on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with the President's position. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

Headnotes

* Not eligible for all 54 Eisenhower-issue roll calls in 1959; percentage score is based on number of votes for which Representative was eligible.
--Not a Representative in 1958.

Eisenhower Support-Opposition Scores

House Domestic Policy -- 1959 & 85th Congress

1. DOMESTIC POLICY SUPPORT Score, 1959. Percentage of 45 Eisenhower-issue roll calls on domestic matters in 1959 on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the President's position. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

2. DOMESTIC POLICY OPPOSITION Score, 1959. Percentage of 45 Eisenhower-issue roll calls on domestic matters in 1959 on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with the President's position. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

3. DOMESTIC POLICY SUPPORT Score, 85th Congress. Percentage of 86 Eisenhower-issue roll calls on domestic matters in 1957 and 1958 on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the President's position. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

4. DOMESTIC POLICY OPPOSITION Score, 85th Congress. Percentage of 86 Eisenhower-issue roll calls on domestic matters in 1957 and 1958 on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with the President's position. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

Headnotes

* Not eligible for all 45 Eisenhower-issue domestic policy roll calls in 1959; percentage score is based on number of votes for which Representative was eligible.
--Not a Representative in 1958.

Eisenhower Support-Opposition Scores

House Foreign Policy -- 1959 & 85th Congress

1. FOREIGN POLICY SUPPORT Score, 1959. Percentage of 9 Eisenhower-issue roll calls in the field of foreign policy in 1959 on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the President's position. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

2. FOREIGN POLICY OPPOSITION Score, 1959. Percentage of 9 Eisenhower-issue roll calls in the field of foreign policy in 1959 on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with the President's position. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

3. FOREIGN POLICY SUPPORT Score, 85th Congress. Percentage of 24 Eisenhower-issue roll calls in the field of foreign policy in 1957 and 1958 on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the President's position. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

4. FOREIGN POLICY OPPOSITION Score, 85th Congress. Percentage of 24 Eisenhower-issue roll calls in the field of foreign policy in 1957 and 1958 on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with the President's position. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

Headnotes

* Not eligible for all 9 Eisenhower-issue foreign policy roll calls in 1959; percentage score is based on number of votes for which Representative was eligible.
-- Not a Representative in 1958.

Passed 381-20 (D 258-1; R 123-19), June 9. A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position; p. 366.

RC 36. S 1901. A bill designed to stabilize tobacco support prices. Passed 250-149 (D 218-39; R 32-110), June 10. A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position; p. 366.

RC 38. HR 7246. A bill to provide a new wheat program for the 1960 and 1961 crops. Passed 189-177 (D 177-63; R 12-114), June 12. A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position; p. 368.

RC 45. S 57. Housing Act of 1959, authorizing $1.4 billion for various programs. Adoption of the conference report. Adopted 241-177 (D 222-51; R 19-126), June 23. A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position; p. 372.

RC 46. HR 3. A bill to revise the doctrine of Federal preemption in fields of concurrent Federal-state jurisdiction. Lindsay (R N.Y.) motion to recommit the bill. Rejected 191-227 (D 161-112; R 30-115), June 24. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position; p. 372.

RC 47. HR 3. Passage of the bill. Passed 225-192 (D 111-162; R 114-30), June 24. A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position; p. 372.

RC 50. H Res 295. A resolution disapproving Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1959, which proposed the transfer from the Secretary of Interior to the Secretary of Agriculture of authority to make sales and exchanges of public national forest lands and to sell certain minerals from the lands. Adopted 266-124 (D 251-1; R 15-123), July 7. (Adoption of the resolution killed the Reorganization Plan.) A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position; p. 376.

RC 54. H Res 326. Resolution providing for House concurrence in Senate amendments to HR 3460, giving TVA authority to issue revenue bonds. Motion to order the previous question on adoption of the resolution. Agreed to 244-166 (D 239-26; R 5-140), July 23. (Approval of the motion brought the resolution to an immediate vote. Had the motion been rejected, Republican Members would have tried to amend the Senate bill to give the President greater budgetary control.) A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position; p. 378.

RC 61. HR 7040. Independent Offices appropriations for fiscal 1960. Thomas (D Texas) motion that the House disagree, for the second time, to a Senate amendment providing $25 million, instead of the $10 million approved by the House, for Federal contributions to the states for the civil defense program. Motion agreed to 241-167 (D 138-125; R 103-42), Aug. 14. A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position; p. 382.

RC 68. S 2539. Housing Act of 1959 (revised bill). Hiestand (R Calif.) motion to recommit the bill with instructions that it be reported back with amendments spreading the $550 million urban renewal program over two years instead of one, and deleting the entire $50 million loan program for construction of college classrooms. Rejected 156-231 (D 41-215; R 115-16), Aug. 27. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position; p. 386.

RC 69. S 2539. Passage of the bill. Passed 283-106 (D 229-29; R 54-77), Aug. 27. A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position; p. 386.

RC 79. HR 9035. Permit an increase in the interest rate on Series E and H Government savings bonds. Simpson (R Pa.) motion to recommit the bill with instructions that it be amended to permit the issuance of long-term Treasury bonds at interest rates of more than 4.25 percent. Rejected 134-255 (D 3-252; R 131-3), Sept. 4. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position; p. 392.

RC 82. HR 9105. Revised fiscal 1960 Public Works appropriation bill, making an across-the-board cut of 2.5 percent in the funds provided in a vetoed bill (HR 7509), but retaining 67 projects that were not in the President's budget. Passed 304-93 (D 258-4; R 46-89), Sept. 8. A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position; p. 392.

RC 85. HR 9105. Passage of the bill over the President's veto (two-thirds majority required). Passed 280-121 (D 260-5; R 20-116), Sept. 10. (268 "yeas" were required to override.) A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position; p. 394.

GROUND RULES FOR CQ PRESIDENTIAL SUPPORT-OPPOSITION

PRESIDENTIAL ISSUES -- CQ analyzes all messages, press conference remarks and other public statements of the President to determine what he personally, as distinct from other Administration spokesmen, does or does not want in the way of legislative action.

BORDERLINE CASES -- By the time an issue reaches a vote, it may differ from the original form on which the President expressed himself. In such cases, CQ analyzes the measure to determine whether, on balance, the features favored by the President outweigh those he opposes or vice versa. Only then is the vote classified. For example, Senate passage (RC 24) March 19, 1959 of a bill (S 1094) to increase U.S. subscriptions to the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank was classed as an Eisenhower victory even though the bill had been amended to provide that the outlay would be charged to the fiscal 1960 budget instead of the 1959 budget, as the President had requested. The earlier vote (RC 23) to add the 1960 proviso, however, was classed as an Eisenhower defeat.

Another borderline case in 1959 involved House passage of a measure (HR 2256) authorizing $300 million for direct housing loans to veterans and raising from 4.75 to 5.25 percent the interest ceiling on direct loans and VA-guaranteed mortgages. The President had asked Congress to raise the interest ceiling but to authorize no more funds for direct loans. Passage of the bill (RC 3) was classed as an Eisenhower defeat, as was failure of a move (RC 2) to delete the direct loan provision. (As finally signed by the President June 30, HR 2256 provided for $100 million for direct loans.)

IMPORTANT VOTES EXCLUDED -- Occasionally, important measures are so extensively amended on the floor that it is impossible to characterize final passage as a victory or defeat for the President. This was the case with Senate action on the Kennedy Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959 (S 1555). CQ included in its tabulation five roll-call votes on amendments to the bill -- one as a victory (RC 44), four as defeats (RC 35, 38, 39, 43) -- all clearly related to the President's own labor law proposals. But it was not clear from the public record how the President himself might have voted when the Senate passed S 1555 April 25, by a vote of 90-1, so this roll call was excluded. The President's views were abundantly clear, however, when the House acted, and all four House votes (RC 58, 59, 60, and 78) were classed as Eisenhower victories.

Again, the President clearly favored inclusion of certain control provisions in a bill (HR 3460) giving TVA authority to issue revenue bonds, and an unsuccessful attempt to revise the bill accordingly (House RC 17) was classed as a defeat for the President. But House passage of the bill, by a 245-170 vote, was excluded from the tabulation since it was not clear how he might have voted.

MOTIONS -- Roll calls on motions to recommit, to reconsider or to table often are key tests that govern the legislative outcome. Such votes are necessarily included in the Eisenhower support tabulations. For example, the President suffered a defeat in 1959 when the Senate voted (RC 97) to table a move to reconsider its earlier vote to repeal the 10 percent tax on passenger travel. Two Senate roll calls (RC 172 and 173) on motions concerning a resolution disapproving an Administration fiscal maneuver were also classed as Eisenhower defeats.

RULES -- In the House, debate on most significant bills is governed by rules that restrict time and may bar floor amendments. These rules must be adopted by the House before the bills in question may be considered. Members may vote for the rule, in order to permit debate, although they intend to vote against the bill. Generally, however, a vote against a rule is a vote against the bill, and vice versa, since rejection of the rule prevents consideration of the bill. CQ assumes that if the President favored a bill, he favored the rule, unless it was a closed rule that would prevent amendments he wanted. For example, in 1958 the House effectively killed an omnibus farm bill (HR 12954) opposed by the President when the Members voted 171-214 (D 150-52; R 21-162) to reject the rule (H Res 609) governing debate. This vote was classed as an Eisenhower victory.

APPROPRIATIONS -- Generally, roll calls on passage of appropriation bills are not included in this tabulation, since it is rarely possible to determine the President's position on the over-all revisions Congress almost invariably makes in the sums allowed. An exception to this rule is the foreign aid appropriation, since the program, although recurring, is not permanent. Votes to cut or increase specific funds requested in the President's budget also are included. For example, the President was credited with a victory in 1959 when the Senate rejected (RC 122) an amendment adding $234 million to the Defense Department appropriation bill (for Army procurement). Similarly, House passage (RC 85) and Senate passage (RC 208) of a vetoed Public Works money bill were classed as defeats.

FAILURES TO VOTE -- In tabulating the Support and Opposition scores of Members on the selected Eisenhower-issue roll calls, CQ counts only "yea" and "nay" votes on the ground that only these affect the outcome. Most failures to vote reflect absences because of illness or official business.

WEIGHTING -- All Eisenhower-issue roll calls have equal statistical weight in this analysis. For example, included among the 175 Eisenhower-issue votes of 1959 were 8 on which no opposition votes were recorded. A Member's votes on these occasions count as heavily in his score as his votes on as many controversial issues decided by close margins. Any system of differential weighting, however, would make the analysis subjective and less useful.

CQ Fact Sheet On Party Unity

PARTIES OPPOSED ON 50 PERCENT OF 1959 ROLL CALLS

Major findings of Congressional Quarterly's study of Party Unity in 1959 are as follows:

- Partisanship, as measured by the number of roll calls on which Democratic and Republican majorities disagreed, increased sharply from 1958 to 1959. The two majorities split on 50 percent of the 1959 roll calls, up from 42 percent in 1958 and equal to the 50 percent in 1956.
- Democrats, with two-to-one majorities in the 86th Congress, prevailed on 109 of the 151 partisan showdowns in 1959 -- on 72 of 103 in the Senate and 37 of 48 in the House.
- The average Democratic Member and the average GOP Member voted with his party majority 75 percent of the time and against it 16 percent of the time, when the two majorities were opposed. But House Democrats, as a group, scored significantly higher in Party Unity (79 percent) than did Senate Democrats (67 percent).

The Party Line

American political parties have never developed the strong sense of party discipline and unity to be found in the British House of Commons and some other parliamentary bodies. Although the Democratic or Republican line on a particular issue may be established in a party caucus, it is rarely a matter of official public knowledge. Party leaders in Senate and House may lay down a line in floor debate, but there is no assurance that a majority of their colleagues will follow them. In 1959, for example, Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) found himself in the Democratic minority on 20 of the 103 showdown roll calls.

For this reason CQ uses the automatic device of selecting, as Party Unity roll calls, all votes in which the result shows a majority of one party in opposition to a majority of the other party. The respective majorities, of course, may and do range from unanimity to one more than one-half of the party members present and voting.

Defections cost both parties a number of potential victories in 1959, as follows:

- Of the 72 showdown votes in the Senate won by a Democratic majority and lost by a Republican majority, 29 might have been won by the latter but for the defection of one or more GOP Senators. One-half (15) of these roll calls were lost by three or fewer votes. The most costly, by far, was the Senate's refusal to confirm the nomination of Lewis L. Strauss to be Secretary of Commerce. The vote was 46-49 (D 15-47; R 31-2). Strauss would have been confirmed, 48-47, had Sens. Margaret Chase Smith (R Maine) and William Langer (R N.D.) voted with the majority of their GOP colleagues.
- Conversely, defections cost the Senate Democratic majority all of its 31 party-line losses to the GOP majority. The number of Democrats voting with the Republican, rather than Democratic, majority on these roll calls ranged from nine to 28, but one half (16) of the roll calls were lost by five or fewer votes. The closest one, lost by one vote, occurred when the Senate agreed, 47-46 (D 15-44; R 32-2), to incorporate a "bill of rights" in the labor reform bill. More costly to the Democratic majority were its two failures to pass housing bills over the President's vetoes, both requiring two-thirds majorities. The first attempt failed by nine votes, 55-40 (D 53-10; R 2-30), the second by five votes, 58-36 (D 52-9; R 6-27).
- In the House, only three of the Republican majority's 37 losses might have been averted but for the defection of a minority of GOP Representatives. The only significant loss by defection came on passage of a public works bill over the President's veto, requiring a two-thirds majority. The bill was passed 280-121 (D 260-5; R 20-116), with 12 votes to spare, thanks to the defection of 20 Republicans.
- All 11 losses experienced in the House by the Democratic majority could be ascribed to defections. Minorities of four and six Democratic Representatives, respectively, accounted for failures to pass an REA bill and the first public works bill over the President's vetoes. On the other nine roll calls, however, the Democratic minority ranged in size from 60 to 137. The most significant loss by the Democratic majority came when the House voted 229-201 (D 95-184; R 134-17) for the Landrum-Griffin labor reform bill. A shift of 14 Democratic votes would have changed the outcome.

As in 1958, Party Unity and Opposition scores for individual Members show, particularly in the Senate, that liberals most closely reflect the views of the Democratic majority, while it is the conservatives who speak for the Republican majority.

Definitions

- PARTY UNITY ROLL CALLS -- Roll-call votes that split the parties, a majority of voting Democrats opposing a majority of voting Republicans. Roll calls on which either party divides evenly are excluded.
- PARTY UNITY SCORES -- Percentage of Party Unity roll calls on which a Member votes "yea" or "nay" in agreement with a majority of his party. Failures to vote, even if a Member announces his stand, lower his score. (For names of Members missing one or more 1958 roll calls because of their illness or illness or death in their families, see this volume, p. 108.)
- OPPOSITION TO PARTY SCORES -- Percentage of Party Unity roll calls on which a Member votes "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with a majority of his party. A Member's Party Unity and Opposition to Party scores add to 100 percent only if he voted on all Party Unity roll calls.

Party Unity-Opposition Scores

House Party Unity - 1959 and 85th Congress

1. PARTY UNITY, 1959. Percentage of 48 House Party Unity roll calls in 1959 on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with a majority of his party. (Party Unity roll calls are those on which a majority of voting Democrats opposed a majority of voting Republicans.) Failures to vote lower both Party Unity and Party Opposition scores.

2. PARTY OPPOSITION, 1959. Percentage of 48 House Party Unity roll calls in 1959 on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with a majority of his party. Failures to vote lower both Party Unity and Party Opposition scores.

3. PARTY UNITY, 85th Congress. Percentage of 96 House Party Unity roll calls in 1957 and 1958 on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with a majority of his party. Failures to vote lower both Party Unity and Party Opposition scores.

4. PARTY OPPOSITION, 85th Congress. Percentage of 96 House Party Unity roll calls in 1957 and 1958 on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with a majority of his party. Failures to vote lower both Party Unity and Party Opposition scores.

Party Unity-Opposition Scores

Senate Party Unity - 1959 and 85th Congress

1. PARTY UNITY, 1959. Percentage of 103 Senate Party Unity roll calls on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with a majority of his party. (Party Unity roll calls are those on which a majority of voting Democrats opposed a majority of voting Republicans.) Failures to vote lower both Party Unity and Party Opposition scores.

2. PARTY OPPOSITION, 1959. Percentage of 103 Senate Party Unity roll calls on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with a majority of his party. Failures to vote lower both Party Unity and Party Opposition scores.

3. PARTY UNITY, 85th Congress. Percentage of 125 Senate Party Unity roll calls in 1957 and 1958 on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with a majority of his party. Failures to vote lower both Party Unity and Party Opposition scores.

4. PARTY OPPOSITION, 85th Congress. Percentage of 125 Senate Party Unity roll calls in 1957 and 1958 on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with a majority of his party. Failures to vote lower both Party Unity and Party Opposition scores.

HEADNOTES

*Not eligible for all 103 Party Unity roll calls in 1959; percentage score is based on number of votes for which Senator was eligible.

--Not a Senator in 1958.

‡ Score as Member of House of Representatives in 85th Congress.

Party Scores

Bipartisan Support and Bipartisan Opposition scores are composites -- the percentage of the time the average party Member voted with or against a bipartisan majority of the Senate or House. Failures to vote tend to lower both Support and Opposition scores.

Definitions

- BIPARTISAN ROLL CALLS -- Roll-call votes on which a majority of voting Democrats agreed with a majority of voting Republicans. Roll calls on which either party divides evenly are included.
- BIPARTISAN SUPPORT SCORES -- Percentage of bipartisan roll calls on which a Member votes "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the bipartisan majority. Failures to vote, even if a Member announces his stand, lower his score.
- BIPARTISAN OPPOSITION SCORES -- Percentage of bipartisan roll calls on which a Member votes "yea" or "nay" in opposition to the bipartisan majority. A Member's Support and Opposition scores add to 100 percent only if he voted on all bipartisan roll calls. For names of Members who missed one or more 1959 roll calls because of their illness or illness in their families, see p. 108.

Bipartisan Support-Opposition Scores

Senate Bipartisanship - 1959 and 85th Congress

1. BIPARTISAN SUPPORT, 1959. Percentage of 112 Bipartisan Support roll calls in 1959 on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the majority of both parties. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

2. BIPARTISAN OPPOSITION, 1959. Percentage of 112 Bipartisan Support roll calls in 1959 on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with the majority of both parties. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

3. BIPARTISAN SUPPORT, 85th CONGRESS. Percentage of 182 Bipartisan Support roll calls in 1957-58 on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the majority of both parties. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

4. BIPARTISAN OPPOSITION, 85th CONGRESS. Percentage of 182 Bipartisan Support roll calls in 1957-58 on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with the majority of both parties. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

CQ Fact Sheet On Northern vs. Southern Democrats

EXTENT OF NORTH-SOUTH DEMOCRATIC SPLIT ANALYZED

How deep is the division within the Democratic party? On what issues do Northern and Southern Democrats disagree?

In an effort to answer those questions, Congressional Quarterly since 1957 has analyzed the roll-call votes on which Southern Democrats opposed the stand taken by Northern Democrats. This study, the third in the series, covers the 1959 session of Congress. (For 1957 and 1958 studies, see 1957 Almanac p. 813; 1958 Almanac p. 764)

Number of Splits

The majority of voting Southern Democrats opposed the stand taken by the majority of voting Northern Democrats on 83, or 27 percent, of the 1959 session's 302 roll calls.

Northern and Southern Democrats split on 29 percent of the 1958 roll calls and 31 percent of the 1957 roll calls.

For this survey, Congressional Quarterly grouped 13 states as the South -- Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia. The other 37 states were grouped as the North.

In 1959, the Southern states had 24 Democratic Senators and 111 Democratic Representatives; the Northern states had 41 Democratic Senators and 173 Democratic Representatives.

To determine the number of roll calls on which there were North-South splits in the Democratic party, CQ checked all 1959 roll calls to see when the majority of voting Southern Democrats opposed the stand taken by the majority of voting Northern Democrats. Roll calls on which either Northern or Southern Democrats divided evenly were not counted as "splits."

The results are shown in this table:

1959	Total Roll Calls	North-South Democratic Splits	Percentage of Splits
Both Chambers	302	83	27%
Senate	215	63	29
House	87	20	23

The roll calls on which the Democrats split, and the breakdown of votes on each, are listed on p. 1492.

The table below shows how the number and percentage of splits in both chambers in 1959 compare with 1958 and 1957:

Year	Total Roll Calls	North-South Democratic Splits	Percentage of Splits
1959	302	83	27%
1957	207	64	31

Of the 83 roll calls in 1959 in which the North-South Democratic split occurred, the Southern majority was on the winning side 36 times -- 26 in the Senate and 10 in the House.

More important than the number of roll calls on which Northern and Southern Democrats differed are the issues that divided them. In 1959, as in the previous two years, splits showed differences between the two groups on many other issues than civil rights.

Issues that Divide Democrats

Foreign aid figured in 17 of the 83 splits. The majority of Southern Democrats in the Senate voted for cuts in every phase of the military and economic aid program and against permitting economic aid to European Communist satellites. The majority of voting Southern Democrats in both the House and Senate opposed any authorization or appropriation of funds for foreign aid. (Senate roll calls 56, 105-8, 110, 114, 117-8, 210-12, 215; House roll calls 42, 53, 56, 86).

Farm supports and surplus disposal policies were the issue in 11 of the splits. The majority of Southern Democrats in both House and Senate opposed moves to limit the amount of price support loans to an individual; in the Senate, they also opposed a move to boost wheat price supports. Senate Southern Democrats opposed a series of moves to make the surplus disposal law a "food for peace" program and to set up a "food stamp" plan for distribution of food to needy Americans. (Senate RC 63-5, 189-92, 198-200; House RC 20).

Labor reform legislation provoked 10 splits, including the critical House vote on which Southern Democrats voted to substitute the "tough" Landrum-Griffin bill for the "moderate" committee-approved measure. In the Senate, the majority of Southern Democrats supported the McClellan "bill of rights" amendment; a move to turn "no man's land" cases over to the states; a move to tighten the ban on secondary boycotts and another to require secret ballot strike votes. (Senate RC 34, 36, 38-9, 43, 46, 49; House RC 58-60).

Housing was the issue in seven North-South splits. Senate Southern Democrats voted twice to reduce the public housing authorization and House Southern Democrats voted to eliminate public housing authorizations altogether. Southern Democratic Senators also opposed moves to boost urban renewal funds and to block an increase in the interest rate on GI housing loans. (Senate RC 8, 10, 11, 161-2; House RC 21-22).

Taxes figured in six of the roll-call differences. The majority of voting Southern Senators opposed a "sliding scale" reduction in the oil and gas depletion allowance, a move to deny certain "expense account" deductions and an increase in Internal Revenue Service enforcement personnel funds. In the House, Southern Democrats voted against the 1-cent increase in the gas tax. (Senate RC 70, 96, 98, 101, 103; House RC 77.)

The Supreme Court -- a nomination to it and legislation provoked by its decisions -- was the source of six disagreements. Southern Democratic Senators voted, 7-17, against the nomination of Potter Stewart to the Court. In the House, the Southern Democrats supported a bill to prevent the Court from declaring that Federal legislation had preempted state legislation in the same field and the "Mallory Rule bill" to bar Federal courts from disqualifying confessions of suspects solely because of delay in their arraignment. (Senate RC 58; House RC 44, 46-7, 51-2).

An effort to remove the loyalty oath requirement for students seeking aid under the National Defense Education Act provoked four roll-call splits in the Senate. Southern Democrats voted to recommit (kill) the bill. (Senate RC 132-5).

The Senate filibuster rule fight brought four North-South splits. Southern Democrats opposed any change in the old rule that required the votes of two-thirds of all Senators to limit debate. (Senate RC 2-5).

Civil rights figured directly in only three of the roll-call disagreements. On all three, the majority of Southern Democrats in House and Senate opposed extension of the life of the Federal Civil Rights Commission. (Senate RC 213-4; House RC 87).

Depressed areas legislation caused two splits in the Senate. The majority of Southern Democrats voted first to substitute a smaller Administration program, and then voted against passage of the larger committee-endorsed program. (Senate RC 25, 28).

Hawaii statehood caused two splits, with the majority of Southern Democrats in both House and Senate voting against admission of the 50th state. (Senate RC 21; House RC 6).

Unemployment compensation was the issue in two Senate votes. Southern Democrats voted against extending the emergency program passed in 1958 to mid-1960, rather than mid-1959. (Senate RC 29-30).

Individual Stands

The chart on p. 137 shows how often each individual Southern Democrat voted with and against the Southern position on the party-splitting issues.

Most 'Southern' Senators -- The Southern Democratic Senators who voted most frequently with the majority of Southerners on the 63 party-splitting issues in 1959 were: Strom Thurmond (S.C.), 61; John Stennis (Miss.) and A. Willis Robertson (Va.), 60; Harry Flood Byrd (Va.) and Herman E. Talmadge (Ga.), 58.

Least 'Southern' Senators -- The Southern Democratic Senators who voted most frequently against the majority of Southerners on the 63 party-splitting issues in 1959 were: Ralph W. Yarborough (Texas), 47; A.S. Mike Monroney (Okla.), 46; Albert Gore (Tenn.) and Estes Kefauver (Tenn.), 45; and Lyndon B. Johnson (Texas), 37.

Most 'Southern' Representatives -- Seven Southern Democratic Representatives voted with the majority of Southerners on all 20 party-splitting issues in 1959: W.F. Norrell (Ark.), John J. Flynt Jr. (Ga.), Thomas G. Abernethy, Jamie L. Whitten and John Bell Williams, all of Mississippi, Alton Lennon (N.C.) and Watkins M. Abbitt (Va.).

Least 'Southern' Representatives -- The Southern Democratic Representatives who voted most frequently against the majority of Southerners on the 20 party-splitting issues in 1959 were: Frank W. Burke (Ky.) and Carl D. Perkins (Ky.), 14; Ed Edmondson (Okla.), Toby Morris (Okla.) and Jack B. Brooks (Texas), 11.

83 Roll Calls on Which Democratic Party Split

Following is a list of 83 Senate and House roll calls in 1959 on which the majority of voting Southern Democrats opposed the stand taken by the majority of voting Northern Democrats.

In this breakdown, Southern Democrats are Members from Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia; Northern Democrats come from the other 37 states.

The roll calls are listed in their chronological order by Congressional Quarterly roll call (RC) number.

An asterisk (*) before the roll call number indicates the roll call was one on which the majority of voting Southern Democrats agreed with the stand of the majority of voting Republicans.

For each roll call, the total vote is broken down into three groups: Southern Democrats (SD), Northern Democrats (ND) and Republicans (R).

Senate Roll Calls (63)

*RC 2. Senate rules. Johnson motion to table Anderson motion to consider adoption of rules for the Senate of the 86th Congress. The Anderson motion also provided for adoption of all 85th Congress rules except Rule 22 (on cloture) and called for immediate consideration of a revised Rule 22. Tabling motion agreed to 60-36 (SD 24-0; ND 16-22; R 20-14), Jan. 9, 1959. The President did not take a position on the motion.

*RC 3. S Res 5. Johnson-Dirksen (R Ill.) proposal to revise Rule 22 by enabling two-thirds of the Senators voting, instead of two-thirds of the Senate membership (66 Senators), to shut off debate on any matter. Douglas (D Ill.) amendment to enable a majority of the Senate membership (50 Senators) to limit debate 15 days after 16 Senators filed a cloture motion. Rejected 28-67 (SD 0-24; ND 20-19; R 8-24), Jan. 12, 1959. The President did not take a position on the resolution.

*RC 4. S Res 5. Morton (R Ky.) amendment to enable Senators by a three-fifths, instead of two-thirds, vote to shut off debate. Rejected 36-58 (SD 0-24; ND 24-14; R 12-20), Jan. 12, 1959. The President did not take a position on the amendment.

RC 5. S Res 5. Adopted 72-22 (SD 10-14; ND 34-5; R 28-3), Jan. 12, 1959. The President did not take a position on the resolution.

*RC 8. S 57. Capehart amendment to reduce authority for additional public housing units to 17,500 units. Rejected 39-53 (SD 13-11; ND 3-35; R 23-7), Feb. 5, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position.

*RC 10. S 57. Clark (D Pa.) amendment to provide $450 million annually in fiscal years 1959 through 1962 for urban renewal.

Stands of Individual Southern Democrats

The chart below shows how often individual Southern Democrats voted "with" and "against" the Southern position on party-splitting issues. The figures are based on the 63 Senate roll calls and the 20 House roll calls in 1959 on which the majority of voting Southern Democrats opposed the stand taken by the majority of voting Northern Democrats. (For list of roll calls, see p. 136.)

- COLUMN 1 gives the number of roll calls on which the Member voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the majority of voting Southern Democrats.
- COLUMN 2 gives the number of roll calls on which the Member voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with the majority of voting Southern Democrats.

Failure to vote kept the figures for most Senators below the 63 possible and for most Representatives below the 20 possible.

Adopted 194-109 (SD 20-68; ND 112-13; R 62-28), Sept. 15, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position.

RC 87. HR 8385. Rooney (D N.Y.) motion that the House concur in a Senate amendment extending the life of the Civil Rights Commission for two years, to Nov. 8, 1961, and appropriating $500,000 to it. Agreed to 221-81 (SD 16-72; ND 125-1; R 80-8), Sept. 15, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position.

CQ Fact Sheet On 'Conservative Coalition'

SOUTHERN DEMOCRATS-GOP WON 71% OF TEST VOTES

How strong is the conservative coalition?
On what issues does it appear?
Who belongs to it?

This Fact Sheet describes CQ's first full-scale study of the Congressional alliance of Southern Democrats and Republicans known as the conservative coalition. (See box)

Number of Coalition Votes

The conservative coalition appeared on 51, or 17 percent, of the 1959 session's 302 roll calls.

By contrast, the coalition appeared on 18 percent of the 1958 roll calls and 14 percent of the 1957 roll calls. The results for the last three years:

	Total Roll Calls	Coalition Roll Calls	Percentage Of Coalition Roll Calls
1959
Both Chambers	302	51	17%
Senate	215	40	19
House	87	11	13
1958
Both Chambers	293	52	18%
Senate	200	38	19
House	93	14	15
1957
Both Chambers	207	28	14%
Senate	107	12	11
House	100	16	16

The roll calls on which the conservative coalition appeared are indicated by an asterisk in the list beginning on p. 136 of this volume. For a statistical basis of the 1957 and 1958 results, see the marked votes in the stories in the 1957 Almanac p. 813, and 1958 Almanac p. 764.

Victories and Defeats

The 1958 election cut into the coalition's potential strength in Congress. In 1957 and 1958, Southern Democrats and Republicans held 311 of the 435 House seats and 71 of the 96 Senate seats. At the start of the 1959 session, they held 264 House seats -- a loss of 47; and 58 Senate seats -- a loss of 13. In both chambers, the losses came in Republican ranks. However, even in 1959, the coalition had a 92-vote majority in the House and an 18-vote majority in the Senate on any issue in which it could keep all its potential Members in line. (Changes in membership during the session because of deaths and the admission of Hawaii did not materially alter this situation.)

As the tables below indicate, there was a steady decline from 1957-59 in the percentage of coalition victories in the Senate -- from 100 percent in 1957 to 86 percent in 1958 and 65 percent in 1959.

On the other hand, the coalition won 91 percent of its tests in the House in 1959, up from 64 percent in 1958 and 81 percent in 1957, despite its reduced numbers. The explanation for this may lie in the more effective liaison between the Southern Democrats and the Republicans under their new minority leader, Rep. Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.). The coalition's won-lost record from 1957-59 years is shown in these tables:

	Coalition Roll Calls	Coalition Victories	Percentage Of Victories
1959
Both Chambers	51	36	71%
Senate	40	26	65
House	11	10	91
1958
Both Chambers	52	41	79%
Senate	38	32	86
House	14	9	64
1957
Both Chambers	28	25	89%
Senate	12	12	100
House	16	13	81

Definitions

- CONSERVATIVE COALITION -- As used in this study, the term "conservative coalition" means a voting alliance of Republicans and Southern Democrats against the Northern Democrats in Congress. This meaning, rather than any philosophic definition of the "conservative" position, provides the basis for CQ's selection of coalition roll calls.
- CONSERVATIVE COALITION ROLL CALL -- Any roll call on which the majority of voting Southern Democrats and the majority of voting Republicans oppose the stand taken by the majority of voting Northern Democrats. Roll calls on which there is an even division within the ranks of voting Northern Democrats, Southern Democrats or Republicans are not included.
- The Southern states are Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia. The other 37 states are grouped as the North in this study.
- CONSERVATIVE COALITION SUPPORT SCORE -- Percentage of conservative coalition roll calls on which a Member votes "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the position of the conservative coalition. Failures to vote, even if a Member announces his stand, lower his score.
- CONSERVATIVE COALITION OPPOSITION SCORE -- Percentage of conservative coalition roll calls on which a Member votes "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with the position of the conservative coalition. Support and Opposition scores add to 100 percent only if a Member votes on all coalition roll calls.

Coalition Issues

The variety of issues involved in the coalition votes is indicated by a listing of the major coalition victories and defeats in 1959. The roll call (RC) numbers refer to the list of roll calls beginning on p. 136.

SENATE VICTORIES -- In the Senate, the conservative coalition tried, successfully, to:

Defeat moves to permit a majority or three-fifths of the Senators to end debate. (RC 3, 4)

Defeat an increase in urban renewal funds and a move to block an increase in the interest rate on GI housing loans. (RC 10, 11)

Defeat an extension of all provisions of the emergency unemployment compensation program until mid-1960. (RC 29)

Add the McClellan "bill of rights" section to the labor reform bill. (RC 36)

Defeat moves to limit the amount of price support loans a farmer could receive on a single crop and to increase wheat price supports. (RC 63, 65)

Defeat moves to increase funds for Internal Revenue Service enforcement personnel, to deny certain "expense account" deductions and to reduce the oil and gas depletion allowance on a sliding scale. (RC 70, 96, 98)

Block a move to permit the Development Loan Fund to borrow $1 billion a year from the Treasury for five years. (RC 105)

Kill the bill to remove the loyalty oath requirement for students seeking Federal education aid. (RC 135)

Defeat a move to donate surplus food to underdeveloped countries for establishment of national food reserves. (RC 191)

SENATE DEFEATS -- In the Senate, the conservative coalition tried, unsuccessfully, to:

Reduce the number of public housing units authorized for construction. (RC 8, 198)

Defeat the bill for aid to areas of chronic unemployment. (RC 28)

Let state courts and agencies handle all labor disputes declined by the National Labor Relations Board. (RC 38, 39)

Strengthen the secondary boycott provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act. (RC 43)

Require secret-ballot strike votes. (RC 46)

Defeat the bill to establish a Youth Conservation Corps. (RC 153)

Defeat a move to start a demonstration food stamp program for distribution of food to the needy. (RC 198)

Defeat a move to let the President give economic aid to European Communist satellites. (RC 210)

Six of these "defeats" were not final. The depressed areas bill was stymied in the House Rules Committee in 1959. The final version of the labor reform bill did let state courts and agencies handle the labor disputes declined by the NLRB and it did strengthen the Taft-Hartley ban on secondary boycotts. The food stamp plan was made permissive, rather than mandatory, in the final version of the bill passed by Congress. The Youth Conservation Corps bill and the bill to permit the President to give economic aid to Communist satellites did not receive action in the House in 1959.

HOUSE VICTORIES -- In the House, the conservative coalition tried, successfully, to:

Pass the bill (HR 3) to prevent the courts from declaring that Federal legislation had preempted state legislation in the same field. (RC 44, 46, 47)

Pass the "Mallory rule bill" to bar Federal courts from disqualifying confessions of suspects solely because of delay in their arraignment. (RC 51-52)

Substitute the "tough" Landrum-Griffin labor reform bill for the "moderate" committee-approved bill and then pass the tougher bill. (RC 58-60)

HOUSE DEFEAT -- The single defeat for the coalition in the House came on a try to kill all public housing authorizations. (RC 22)

Coalition Support-Opposition Scores

CQ computed Coalition Support and Coalition Opposition scores for each Member of Congress. The scores measure the percentage of the time each Member voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement and in disagreement with the position taken by the conservative coalition.

Composite Scores

The Coalition Support and Coalition Opposition scores below are a composite of individual scores of Southern Democrats, Republicans and Northern Democrats.

	Southern Democrats	Republicans	Northern Democrats
COALITION SUPPORT, 1959
Both Chambers	74%	78%	18%
Senate	63	72	20
House	82	82	16
COALITION OPPOSITION, 1959
Both Chambers	20%	14%	74%
Senate	28	18	68
House	14	12	79

When the scores of the Southern Democrats and Republicans are combined, this is how the alignment on the conservative coalition appears:

	Southern Democrats-Republicans	Northern Democrats
COALITION SUPPORT, 1959
Both Chambers	76%	18%
Senate	68	20
House	82	16
COALITION OPPOSITION, 1959
Both Chambers	17%	74%
Senate	22	68
House	13	79

The figures above indicate that:

- The average Republican Representative and the average Southern Democratic Representative backed the coalition's position with equal consistency (82 percent of the time). But the average Republican Senator voted with the coalition more frequently (72 percent of the time) than the average Southern Democratic Senator (63 percent of the time).
- Similarly, the average Northern Democratic Representative voted against the coalition's position more consistently (79 percent of the time) than did the average Northern Democratic Senator (68 percent of the time).

● As a result, the split between the coalition and anti-coalition forces was much more sharply defined in the House than in the Senate in 1959.

Regional Scores

Coalition Support scores, by region, for 1959:

	East	West	South	Midwest
DEMOCRATS
Both Chambers	15%	19%	74%	19%
Senate	22	21	63	16
House	11	15	82	21
REPUBLICANS
Both Chambers	68%	85%	83%	83%
Senate	69	78	65	74
House	68	98	97	90

Coalition Opposition scores, by region, for 1959:

	East	West	South	Midwest
DEMOCRATS
Both Chambers	77%	69%	20%	75%
Senate	65	65	28	74
House	82	80	14	75
REPUBLICANS
Both Chambers	23%	8%	15%	9%
Senate	23	9	31	13
House	23	7	1	5

The figures above indicate that:

● Among the Democrats, Southerners were, of course, the most consistent backers of the conservative coalition and Midwest Senators and Eastern Representatives were its most consistent opponents.

● Among the Republicans, Western Senators and Representatives were the most consistent backers of the conservative coalition and Southern Senators and Eastern Representatives were its most consistent opponents. The Southern Republican Senators were John Sherman Cooper and Thruston B. Morton of Kentucky.

● In both the Senate and House, Southern Republicans gave more consistent backing to the conservative coalition than did Southern Democrats.

Individual Scores

● Highest Coalition Support scorers -- those who voted with the conservative coalition most consistently in 1959:

Northern Democrats -- Forty-seven scored 100 percent: Johnson, Clement W. Miller, George P. Miller, Moss, Sisk, Holifield, King, Roosevelt (Calif.); Bowles, Daddario, Giaimo (Conn.); Gray, Price, Shipley, Boyle, Dawson, Libonati, O'Brien, O'Hara, Pucinski (Ill.); Brademas (Ind.); Oliver (Maine); O'Neill (Mass.); O'Hara (Mich.); Karth, Wier (Minn.); Bolling, Karsten (Mo.); Metcalf (Mont.); Addonizio, Daniels, Rodino (N.J.); Delaney, Holtzman (N.Y.); Ullman (Ore.); Dent, Holland, Morgan, Prokop, Rhodes, Barrett, Byrne, Nix, Toll (Pa.); Staggers (W.Va.); Flynn, Kastenmeier (Wis.).

Scores for each Member of Congress appear in the charts on the next three pages.

Conservative Support-Opposition Scores

House Conservative Coalition Voting--1959

The chart below shows how often individual Representatives voted "with" and "against" the conservative coalition in 1959. The figures are based on 11 House roll calls on which the majority of votingRepublicans and the majority of voting Southern Democrats, forming a conservative coalition, opposed the stand taken by the majority of voting Northern Democrats. (The roll calls included are the ones marked by asterisks (*) in the list on p. 136.)

1. CONSERVATIVE COALITION SUPPORT, 1959. Percentage of 11 conservative coalition roll calls on which the Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the position of the conservative coalition. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

2. CONSERVATIVE COALITION OPPOSITION, 1959. Percentage of 11 conservative coalition roll calls on which Representative voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with the position of the conservative coalition. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

Headnotes

* Not eligible for all 11 conservative coalition roll calls in 1959. Percentage based on number of votes for which Representative was eligible. (Rep. Daniel K. Inouye (D Hawaii) was not eligible for any coalition votes in 1959.)

Conservative Support-Opposition Scores

Senate Conservative Coalition Voting--1959

The chart below shows how often individual Senators voted "with" and "against" the conservative coalition in 1959. The figures are based on 40 Senate roll calls on which the majority of voting Republicans and the majority of voting Southern Democrats, forming a conservative coalition, opposed the stand taken by the majority of voting Northern Democrats. (The roll calls included are the ones marked by asterisks (*) in the list on p. 136.)

1. CONSERVATIVE COALITION SUPPORT, 1959. Percentage of 40 conservative coalition roll calls on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" in agreement with the position of the conservative coalition. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

2. CONSERVATIVE COALITION OPPOSITION, 1959. Percentage of 40 conservative coalition roll calls on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" in disagreement with the position of the conservative coalition. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

Headnotes

* Not eligible for all 40 conservative coalition roll calls in 1959. Percentage based on number of votes for which Senator was eligible.

CQ Fact Sheet On 'Economy' Voting

AVERAGE DEMOCRAT OPPOSED SPENDING CURBS 72% OF TIME

The average Democrat in the 86th Congress voted against moves to limit Federal spending 72 percent of the time, and for such moves only 19 percent of the time. By contrast, the average Republican Member opposed efforts to limit Federal spending 32 percent of the time, but supported them 57 percent of the time.

These were the principal findings of Congressional Quarterly's annual study of "Economy Support," based in 1959 on 97 roll calls -- 68 in the Senate and 29 in the House -- that presented clear-cut opportunities to limit Federal spending. Contrasted with the scores for the 85th Congress, they showed a marked increase in 1959 in Democratic opposition to spending curbs and, conversely, in Republican support for limited spending.

Of the 97 test votes of 1959 (which are summarized beginning on p. 152), 80 resulted in defeat for the economy forces -- attesting to the size and bent of Democratic majorities in Senate and House. Many of these defeats, however, were modified or nullified by later developments, including several Presidential vetoes.

Test Votes

Detailed ground rules governing the selection of the 97 votes used in the 1959 study appear on the next page. The rules are strict; only roll calls that directly affect Federal spending are included. Some important roll calls with only an indirect effect on spending, as well as all roll calls on taxes or other revenue measures, are excluded.

Included among the test votes of 1959 were a number concerning authorization measures which, although not directly appropriating funds, effectively granted the power to obligate Federal funds. This was the case with housing legislation (accounting for 16 test votes in the Senate and eight in the House), which contained provisions concerning the urban renewal and public housing programs that amounted to contract authority. It was also the case with a number of other authorization measures concerning aid to airports, veterans' benefits, and farm legislation.

The authorization for the Mutual Security Program is a special case. Although the funds authorized must later be appropriated, Congress habitually appropriates less money than was authorized. Since the program is financed in large part from earlier appropriations, the size of the authorization as much as the size of the appropriation determines the total outlay. Votes on this authorization measure are therefore included in the study.

Most of the "economy support" roll calls of 1959 were also party-line votes, with a majority of Democrats pitted against a majority of Republicans; on none of the roll calls was there complete unanimity. Closest to unanimity were votes in the Senate (RC 128: 81-4) and the House (RC 71: 382-4) authorizing a health insurance program for Federal workers, with the Government footing half the bill. Clearly, the large majority of Congressmen considered this expenditure to be justified.

Evaluating the Scores

In evaluating "Economy Support" and "Economy Opposition" scores for individual Members, shown on following pages, these cautions must be considered.

1. Rarely, if ever, is "economy" the only issue in a vote. Spending is justified by proponents in terms of the goals for which the money will be used: to provide additional public services, to strengthen defense, to further foreign policy objectives, etc. On one 1959 Senate vote (RC 70), the spending proposal was justified on grounds that it would lead to a substantially larger increase in revenue. Each Member must decide for himself whether the cause justifies spending additional funds.

2. Each bill involved in these roll calls comes to the floor with the endorsement of a committee which has given it careful study. Many Members are inclined to support whatever the committee has recommended, in the belief that the committee's opinion is the best judgment available. This is particularly true of appropriation bills, which are detailed.

3. The sums involved in these 97 roll calls vary widely -- from $75,000 in one case to more than $3 billion in another. On some roll calls, there is no way to determine the exact amount of money that would be spent or saved. It is entirely possible for a Member to vote for a number of small economies and then for a single large expenditure.

4. Many of the test votes of 1959 involved Republican attempts to scale down measures drafted by Democratic-controlled committees. Thus the organization of Congress -- and the decisions of its leaders -- help to determine what issues are put to roll call votes and to shape their outcome.

Eisenhower Score

The question of whether a particular expenditure is or is not justified was, of course, at the heart of the 1959 "spending debate." Although President Eisenhower led the battle against the "spenders," he likewise opposed a number of suggested "savings." To ascertain how the President stood on "economy support," vis-a-vis Members of Congress, Congressional Quarterly tabulated his position, as publicly revealed before the vote, on the roll calls of 1959 bearing directly on the issue. (For Eisenhower-position roll calls, see p. 119.)

The President had taken a clear position on 83 of the 97 test votes -- 59 in the Senate, 24 in the House. On these he supported moves to limit spending in 54 cases, and opposed them in 29 cases, giving him an "Economy Support" score of 65 percent. Significantly, of the 29 votes on which he stood opposed to "economy," 19 concerned foreign policy in general, the Mutual Security Program in particular.

Party Scores

Economy Support and Economy Opposition scores are composites and show the percentage of the time the average Democrat and Republican voted to support or opposed moves to limit Federal spending. Failures to vote tend to lower both Support and Opposition scores.

Republicans: Merrow (N.H.) led with 93 percent, followed by Baldwin (Calif.) and Rogers (Mass.), with 79 percent, and Fulton (Pa.) and Halpern (N.Y.) with 76 percent.

GROUND RULES FOR CONGRESSIONAL ECONOMY VOTING

Congressional Quarterly's Economy Support study attempts to measure the performance of Members of Congress on those roll-call votes that directly affected Federal spending. CQ does not presume to say what a Member's score should be, or whether that score -- either high or low -- makes him a "better" Member.

● VOTES INCLUDED -- CQ includes only those votes the outcome of which clearly would mean an increase or decrease in Federal spending if finally enacted into law. This encompasses the following kinds of votes on appropriation measures:

Amendments to increase or decrease the amount of money appropriated.

Motions to recommit, with instructions to change the sums appropriated.

Amendments or motions to recommit that lay down conditions on the use of the money that will clearly and indisputably affect the extent of Federal spending.

Passage of appropriation bills for programs without permanent authorization, like Mutual Security.

● AUTHORIZATION BILLS -- These measures generally grant authority for an activity, set the limits on its extent or duration or cost, but do not themselves provide the money to carry it out. Since Congress is under no obligation to appropriate the money to carry out such activities, votes on this type of authorization bill are excluded from the study. Certain authorizations, however, are to some extent self-financing. Either they carry authority to borrow money from the Treasury, or involve a clear obligation by Congress to appropriate money at a later date, as for the farm price support program or pay raise measures. Measures affecting payments from trust funds, as for the highway program and social security, likewise influence directly the total Federal outlay. On such types of authorizations only, votes are included on:

Amendments to reduce or increase the program's scope.

Motions to pass or recommit (kill) the authorization, or to recommit with instructions to increase or decrease the scope of the authorization.

Motions or amendments to insert or delete specific limits on the authorization.

● VOTES EXCLUDED -- Votes to pass, recommit or amend ordinary authorizations whose execution must await later appropriations.

Passage votes on routine, annual appropriations bills.

Motions to recommit appropriations bills without instructions.

Amendments whose effect on Federal spending is subject to substantial doubt and disagreement.

Measures relating to Federal revenues, rather than to Federal expenditures.

Motions and rules preliminary to consideration of Economy Support votes.

● FAILURES TO VOTE -- The tabulation of Economy Voting scores is based only on "yea" and "nay" votes, on the ground that only these votes affect the outcome of the roll call. Failures to vote lower both Economy Support and Economy Opposition scores. Most failures to vote are based on valid reasons, such as absence because of illness or official business. (For absences, see p. 108.)

● WEIGHTING -- There is no effort on the part of CQ to weight the individual votes. All Economy Voting roll calls have equal statistical weight in this study, even though the amount of money involved in the votes differs widely. No attempt is made to judge whether the vote was one of "bad" or "good" economy, whether it was "real" or "false" economy. On many of the votes, the exact amount of money at stake cannot be determined, and any system of differential weighting would make the analysis less objective and, by the same token, less useful.

Economy Support - Opposition Scores

Senate Economy Voting - 1959 & 85th Congress

1. ECONOMY SUPPORT Score, 1959. Percentage of 68 economy-issue roll calls in 1959 on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" in support of moves to limit Federal spending. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

2. ECONOMY OPPOSITION Score, 1959. Percentage of 68 economy-issue roll calls in 1959 on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" in opposition to moves to limit Federal spending. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

3. ECONOMY SUPPORT Score, 85th Congress. Percentage of 70 economy-issue roll calls in 1957 and 1958 on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" in support of moves to limit Federal spending. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

4. ECONOMY OPPOSITION Score, 85th Congress. Percentage of 70 economy-issue roll calls in 1957 and 1958 on which Senator voted "yea" or "nay" in opposition to moves to limit Federal spending. Failures to vote lower both Support and Opposition scores.

97 ROLL-CALL VOTES MEASURING CONGRESSIONAL SPENDING SENTIMENT

Following is a list of the 97 roll-call votes in the Senate and House in 1959 that Congressional Quarterly used in measuring economy sentiment among Members of Congress. Votes were selected on the basis of the Ground Rules described on page 148. No attempt was made to judge whether the issue was one of "good" or "bad" economy or of "real" or "false" economy, nor was any attempt made to evaluate the votes according to the amounts involved.

SENATE VOTES

Listed below are the 68 roll-call votes of 1959 in the Senate that directly involved Federal spending. The votes are grouped according to the outcome -- victory or defeat for the spending proposals involved. Within each group, the roll calls are listed in chronological order by CQ roll call (RC) number.

Charts showing the roll-call votes of each Senator appear in numerical order, starting on page 398 of this volume.

RC 33, HR 7509. Taber (R N.Y.) motion to recommit the bill with instructions to reduce by 5 percent each construction item of $5 million or more. Rejected 149-251 (D 25-233; R 124-18), June 9. A "yea" was a vote for economy;

RC 34, HR 7509. Passage of the bill, which included funds for 51 unbudgeted construction projects. Passed 381-20 (D 258-1; R 123-19), June 9. A "nay" was a vote for economy;

RC 42, HR 7500. Mutual Security Act of 1959, authorizing $3,542,600,000 in fiscal 1960 funds. Passed 271-142 (D 182-83; R 89-59), June 18. A "nay" was a vote for economy;

RC 45, S 57. Housing Act of 1959, authorizing $1.4 billion for various programs. Adoption of the conference report. Adopted 241-177 (D 222-51; R 19-126), June 23. A "nay" was a vote for economy;

RC 53, HR 7500. Mutual Security Act of 1959. Adoption of the conference report. Adopted 258-153 (D 182-86; R 76-67), July 22. A "nay" was a vote for economy;

RC 56, HR 8385. Mutual Security appropriation bill, carrying $3,186,500,000 for the Mutual Security Program in fiscal 1960. Passed 279-136 (D 192-78; R 87-58), July 29. A "nay" was a vote for economy;

RC 65, HR 8609. Extend for one year, until Dec. 31, 1960, the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954. Passed 305-53 (D 227-9; R 78-44), Aug. 20. A "nay" was a vote for economy;

RC 68, S 2539. Housing Act of 1959 (revised bill). Hiestand (R Calif.) motion to recommit bill with instructions that it be amended to delete the entire $50 million loan program for college classroom construction, and to spread the $550 million urban renewal program over two years instead of one. Rejected 156-231 (D 41-215; R 115-16), Aug. 27. A "yea" was a vote for economy;

RC 69, S 2539. Passage of the bill. Passed 283-106 (D 229-29; R 54-77), Aug. 27. A "nay" was a vote for economy;

RC 71, S 2162. Federal Employees Health Benefits Act of 1959, establishing a health insurance program for Federal employees under which the Government would pay one-half of the cost. Passed 382-4 (D 252-1; R 130-3), Sept. 1. A "nay" was a vote for economy;

RC 82, HR 9105. Revised fiscal 1960 Public Works appropriation bill, making an across-the-board cut of 2.5 percent in funds provided in a vetoed bill (HR 7509), but retaining 67 projects that were not in the President's budget. Passed 304-93 (D 258-4; R 46-89), Sept. 8. A "nay" was a vote for economy;

RC 85, HR 9105. Passage of the bill over the President's veto (two-thirds majority required). Passed 280-121 (D 260-5; R 20-116), Sept. 10. (268 "yeas" were required to override.) A "nay" was a vote for economy;

RC 86, HR 8385. Mutual Security appropriation bill, appropriating $3,225,813,000 for mutual security in fiscal 1960 and $400,905,137 for various Federal agencies. Adoption of the conference report. Adopted 194-109 (D 132-81; R 62-28), Sept. 15. A "nay" was a vote for economy;

RC 87, HR 8385. Rooney (D N.Y.) motion that the House concur in a Senate amendment extending the life of the Civil Rights Commission for two years, to Nov. 8, 1961, and appropriating $500,000 to it. Agreed to 221-81 (D 141-73; R 80-8), Sept. 15. A "nay" was a vote for economy.

CONGRESS PASSES ANTI-CORRUPTION LABOR BILL

S 1555 -- Reported by Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee (S Rept 187) April 14, 1959.

• Passed by the Senate, amended, April 25 by a 90-1 roll-call vote. (See p. 407)

HR 8342 -- Reported by House Education and Labor Committee (H Rept 741) July 30.

• Passed by the House, amended, Aug. 14 by a 303-125 roll-call vote. (See p. 382)

S 1555 -- Conference report (H Rept 1147) agreed to Sept. 3 by the Senate on a 95-2 roll-call vote and Sept. 4 by the House on a 352-52 roll-call vote. (See p. 440, 392)

PL 86-257 -- Signed into law Sept. 14.

The labor reform bill enacted after seven months of Congressional debate, strenuous business and labor lobbying, and repeated public appeals by the President and other national figures represented a major legislative victory for the union anti-corruption approach favored by the President and a House coalition of Republicans and Southern Democrats. The bill, sponsored by Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.), began as a "moderate" labor reform measure dealing primarily with financial and electoral misconduct of union officials. As finally enacted it carried, in addition, the first major Taft-Hartley changes since the Act was passed in 1947 -- changes backed by the President but opposed by Kennedy, labor and the Democratic leadership of Congress. (For Taft-Hartley Act history, see box p. 158)

The original Kennedy bill deliberately did not deal with major Taft-Hartley Act issues affecting labor-management rights in collective bargaining. Its aim, Kennedy said, was solely to clean up the kind of labor racketeering and labor-management collusion exposed in a long series of Congressional investigations (the latest by a Senate Select Committee headed by Arkansas Democrat John L. McClellan) dating back to 1953. Collective bargaining issues, Kennedy argued, were not pertinent in a bill dealing with union corruption; the introduction of these controversial issues, particularly of "anti-labor" Taft-Hartley Act changes, would only endanger passage of a reform bill and perhaps cause its defeat -- the fate of a similar reform bill sponsored by Kennedy in 1958, which passed the Senate but died in the House.

The approach favored by Kennedy, along with most Democrats and organized labor (at least nominally), called for mild Federal intervention coupled with the sanction of public exposure. The Kennedy bill as introduced (and substantially as reported) required unions and their officers individually, along with management and its agents, to file annual reports with the Secretary of Labor containing financial and other information bearing on such practices as labor-management bribery and collusion, union-busting, extortion and misappropriation of union funds. The reports were to be made public. The bill also required union elections by secret ballot every few years and honest administration of union locals under trusteeship to their national or international parent unions. Finally, the bill provided criminal penalties for bribery, extortion and misappropriation of union funds; for failure to maintain proper union financial records; and for other similar practices.

The President and the Republican Congressional leadership did not oppose the Kennedy approach, but they argued it did not go far enough. Certain secondary boycott practices, "blackmail" organizational picketing and "hot cargo" contracts, they contended, were part of the corruption problem; they were used by dishonest union leaders to intimidate employers and manipulate the union membership, and they had to be curbed.

In the Senate the Kennedy bill was passed with some "toughening" amendments like the McClellan "bill of rights for union members," but with no changes in its basic approach. But when the issue reached the House floor, a Republican-Southern Democratic coalition, seizing the initiative, rejected a "moderate" Education and Labor Committee bill similar to Kennedy's and passed instead a substitute bill, sponsored by Reps. Phil M. Landrum (D Ga.) and Robert P. Griffin (R Mich.), that added the major Taft-Hartley changes supported by the President. These closed the so-called "no man's land" gap by letting state courts and state labor relations agencies take jurisdiction over labor disputes in interstate commerce that the National Labor Relations Board declined to handle; outlawed "hot cargo" contracts not only in the trucking industry but in all industries; closed so-called "loopholes" in existing Taft-Hartley Act prohibitions against secondary boycotts; and imposed curbs on union organizational and recognition picketing. The final version of the bill was almost entirely the House version.

PROVISIONS -- S 1555, the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959, contained these provisions:

Bill of Rights

Guaranteed union members "equal rights and privileges" to nominate candidates, vote for union officers, participate in union meetings and caucus with other members under "reasonable rules and regulations" established by the union.

Barred unions from raising dues or initiation fees or making special assessments except by secret-ballot majority vote or, in national and international unions, by majority vote of the executive board or convention.

Barred unions from preventing a member from appearing before any governmental judicial, legislative or administrative proceeding, or from suing the union, provided that the member exhausted "reasonable" union hearing procedures for up to four months before instituting a proceeding against the union; barred employers from financing or prompting such suits.

Required a union, before disciplining a member, to give him written charges, a full and fair hearing and reasonable time to prepare his defense.

Required unions to furnish members with copies of collective bargaining contracts, and to inform members of the provisions of the bill.

Permitted a union member whose rights under the "bill of rights" section were infringed, or who was fined, expelled, suspended or disciplined by the union for exercising any right guaranteed him by the bill, to file a Federal civil suit for relief; made it a crime, subject to a $1,000 fine and one year in prison, to threaten or use violence in order to interfere with rights guaranteed union members by the bill.

Labor-Management Reports

Required all unions to adopt constitutions and by-laws and to register them, and other information outlining their financial and organizational structure, with the Secretary of Labor.

Required unions to file annual reports with the Secretary detailing assets and liabilities, receipts and sources, payments to any employee receiving more than $10,000 from the union, loans to union members or employees aggregating more than $250 to one person, loans to businesses and other disbursements; the information would be made available to any union member on request, and a member could sue in Federal or state court to get permission to examine records necessary to verify the reports.

Required officers and employees of unions to file annual reports with the Secretary outlining possible "conflict of interest" payments and receipts and stock and other financial transactions of themselves or members of their family with employers or employer "middlemen."

Required employers who paid money to union members or representatives, other than ordinary wages, or to labor relations consultants (middlemen), for the purpose of influencing employees on their collective bargaining rights, to report the details of such payments to the Secretary of Labor; similar reports would be filed by labor relations consultants but lawyers would not have to report on legitimate lawyer-client relationships and payments.

Made all the reports filed under this section public information, to be made available for inspection by the Secretary.

Required anyone filing a report to maintain records to corroborate it for five years.

Made it a crime not to file a report, to make false statements on it, or to destroy or make false entry in records required to be kept; permitted the Secretary of Labor to seek injunctions and orders in Federal courts to prevent or stop violations of the reporting section.

Trusteeships

Required any union exercising trusteeship over a union local to file semi-annual reports with the Secretary of Labor detailing the conditions of the trusteeship and the financial condition of the local; made it a crime not to file, to file falsely or to destroy records; made the reports public information.

Permitted trusteeships only for the purpose of carrying out the "legitimate objects" of the union; made it a crime to count the votes of a local under trusteeship in a national union election unless the local's delegates were chosen by secret-ballot majority vote, or to transfer money, except normal yearly assessments, from the local to the national union.

Permitted the Secretary of Labor or a member of a local under trusteeship to file civil suits to prevent violations of the trusteeship requirements; in such suits, a trusteeship would be presumed valid for 18 months from the date of its establishment, not to be disturbed except on "clear and convincing proof" of bad faith in establishing it. At the end of 18 months, it would be presumed invalid but could be extended by the court.

Elections

Required local unions to elect officers by secret-ballot majority vote at least once every three years; national unions and intermediate bodies at least once every five years and four years, respectively, by secret ballot or vote of delegates elected by secret ballot.

Required these election safeguards: bona fide candidates given the right to require the union to comply with reasonable requests to mail the candidate's campaign literature to members of the organization, at his expense (enforceable by civil court suit); in unions with union-shop contracts, the candidate would also have the right to inspect the membership lists; candidates given the right to have observers at polls and counting of ballots; reasonable opportunity given to nominate; preservation of ballots; no use of union or employer funds to finance a candidate.

Permitted the Secretary of Labor to conduct an election for recall of a union officer guilty of serious misconduct if the union did not have adequate recall procedures.

Permitted a union member who claimed the union was violating its own or the bill's election or recall safeguards, and who had sought remedy through internal union procedures but had not received a decision for three months, to ask the Secretary of Labor to seek a Federal court order for a new election or recall election under the Secretary's supervision.

Fiduciary and Other Safeguards

Stated that union officers occupied positions of trust and were obligated to handle and spend union money and property solely for the benefit of the union and its members, in accord with its constitution and bylaws.

Permitted union members to sue in Federal or state courts to recover damages or ask an accounting when a union officer was alleged to have violated the trust imposed above, and the union had made no attempt to recover.

Made it a crime to embezzle, steal or otherwise misappropriate union funds; made it a crime for a union officer handling union moneys not to be bonded.

Barred a union from lending more than $2,000 to any officer or employee, and from paying the fine of an officer or employee convicted of violating the bill.

Barred from union office for five years persons convicted of specified felonies or of violation of the reporting or trusteeship provisions of the bill; Communist party members would be barred for a similar period. All such persons also would be barred from serving as labor relations consultants or as officers of associations or groups of employers dealing with any union. Violation would be a crime. An existing requirement that officers of unions seeking to use the auspices of the National Labor Relations Board sign non-communist affidavits was repealed.

Outlawed payments, except bona fide wages and fringe benefits, to union representatives by employers or employer "middlemen," and made it illegal to accept or solicit such payments; outlawed truck unloading fees.

Made it a crime to picket for the purpose of extortion.

Gave the Secretary of Labor power to investigate, with the right of subpena, suspected violation of any provisions of the bill except the "bill of rights" and the Taft-Hartley Act amendments.

Taft-Hartley Act

Permitted state labor relations agencies and state courts to assume jurisdiction over labor disputes the National Labor Relations Board declined to handle, but barred the NLRB from enlarging the categories of cases it declined to handle.

Permitted the President to designate an acting NLRB General Counsel if the office were vacant.

Made it an unfair labor practice for a union to try to coerce or threaten an employer directly (but not to persuade or ask him) in order: to get him to join a union or sign any illegal hot cargo contract; to get him to stop doing business with another firm or handling its goods; to get him to recognize a union if the NLRB had already certified another union as his workers' bargaining agent; to force him to assign work to members of one union, rather than another, in a jurisdictional dispute between unions representing his employees; to get any other employer to recognize a union not certified as the representative of his employees in an NLRB election. (Direct coercion of an employer by a union for these purposes was not previously covered by the secondary boycott prohibitions.)

Made it an unfair labor practice for a union to induce supervisory workers, or any single worker, to refuse to handle goods, or to strike, for any of the purposes outlined above. (Previously, supervisors were not covered by the secondary boycott prohibitions, and inducement of a worker to stop working was banned only if he ceased working in concert with other workers.)

Made clear that union inducement of employees not to handle work "farmed out" to their employer by a struck firm was not a secondary boycott.

Made it an unfair labor practice for a union and employer to sign a so-called hot cargo contract under which the employer agreed not to do business with any other firm; nullified any such existing contracts; exempted from this provision garment industry contracts barring a jobber from subcontracting work on a single garment to unorganized shops, and building industry contracts barring a firm from subcontracting work at its jobsite to an unorganized firm.

Barred organizational or recognition picketing by a union: if in the absence of an unfair labor practice by an employer, the employer already recognized another union or there had been any NLRB certification election in the previous 12 months; or if the union had been picketing for 30 days and had not asked for an election. If the union claimed its picketing was purely informational, it could picket for longer than 30 days without seeking an election, provided the picketing did not cause the employees of the firm involved to stop working or prevent deliveries or pickup of goods.

Brought under the picketing and secondary boycott prohibitions of the bill and of the Taft-Hartley Act several groups of workers not previously covered: railroad, airline, farm and local government workers.

Permitted the NLRB to allow strikers fired during a strike and not entitled to reinstatement to vote in an NLRB representation election conducted within a year after the strike began.

Barred a union from picketing a retail store to advertise that the store was handling the goods of a firm the union was striking; but permitted other forms of such advertising (handbills, for example) if they did not cause the store's employees to stop working or prevent pickups and deliveries.

Permitted building trades firms and unions to sign union contracts in advance of a construction job, even if the union had not won an NLRB certification election or did not represent the majority of the existing or potential employees. Such contracts could require the employees to join the union within seven days (except in states with laws barring the union shop), require the employer to hire through the union, or permit the union to set up experience and training qualifications for employees.

Taft-Hartley History

The legislative history of the Taft-Hartley Act and attempts to amend it before 1959:

1947 -- The House April 17 passed Taft-Hartley 308-107 (D 93-84; R 215-22; Ind. 0-1). Senate passed bill May 13 by 68-24 vote (D 21-21; R 47-3). Final version was cleared June 6, vetoed June 20 by President Truman, who said it would "reverse the basic direction of our national labor policy." House June 20 overrode veto 331-83 (D 106-71; R 225-11; Ind. 0-1). Senate June 23 overrode veto 68-25 (D 20-22; R 48-3). (1957 Almanac p. 279)

1948 -- A majority on Republican-controlled Joint Labor-Management Relations Committee Dec. 31 said the act was "working well." Democratic minority called it "discredited." (1948 Almanac p. 227)

1949 -- President Truman recommended the act be repealed and replaced by the original National Labor Relations Act of 1935 (Wagner Act). Organized labor backed the proposal but there was no final action in either chamber. (1949 Almanac p. 444)

1950 -- A bill to permit hiring halls in the maritime industry cleared the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee but did not reach the floor. (1950 Almanac p. 272)

1951 -- Act amended for first time. The amendment (PL 189, 82nd Congress) validated union elections held after passage of the act, even though several union leaders had not signed required non-Communist affidavits, and eliminated the requirement that a union's members must approve a union shop agreement. (1951 Almanac p. 268)

1952 -- A bill to permit building trades unions to hire workers for the contractor was introduced by Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio, 1939-53), passed Senate by voice vote May 12 but died in House Education and Labor Committee. (1952 Almanac, p. 188)

1953 -- Committee hearings in both chambers on proposed amendments, but no action. (1953 Almanac p. 260)

1954 -- President Eisenhower recommended 15 amendments. A Taft-Hartley amendment bill reached the Senate floor May 7 but was recommitted 50-42 (D 46-0; R 3-42). Hearings but no action in House. (1954 Almanac p. 300)

1955 -- No action despite Presidential recommendations.

1956 -- The President repeated his 1955 recommendations. No action. (1956 Almanac p. 100)

1957 -- Mr. Eisenhower made no requests concerning Taft-Hartley Act. The Senate Aug. 23, by voice vote, passed S J Res 94, directing the Secretary of Labor to make public certain information to be filed with him under the Taft-Hartley Act. No House action. (1957 Almanac p. 662)

1958 -- Attempts to add major Taft-Hartley Act amendments to two anti-corruption bills (S 2888, S 3974) passed by the Senate were defeated in a series of roll-call votes. The House eventually passed the welfare and pension plans bill (S 2888) but rejected S 3974. S 2888 was signed into law Aug. 28 by the President (PL 836, 85th Congress). (1958 Almanac p. 191)

Background

Public interest in labor reform stemmed largely from investigations conducted by the Senate Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor or Management Field, headed by McClellan. Since 1957, the Select Committee had been looking into the affairs of such unions as the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, headed by James R. Hoffa, and the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America (AFL-CIO). The Committee Jan. 31, 1959 received another $750,000 to continue its studies through Jan. 31, 1960.

In some cases, not involving the majority of American unions, but nevertheless a substantial number, the Select Committee had turned up a record of massive corruption, embezzlement and labor-management collusion against the interests of the employees. Most of the provisions of the Administration and Kennedy bills were attempts to curb specific practices revealed by the Select Committee. Some examples:

- MISAPPROPRIATION -- The Select Committee found, in some cases, wholesale rifling of union treasuries and pension and welfare funds by union officers. Sometimes this took the form of simple theft, sometimes of commissions or kickbacks on fees paid to insurance firms holding union welfare funds, sometimes of luxuries voted union leaders by executive boards wholly in their control, and sometimes of "loans" -- without collateral or even notes -- by the union to its officers.
- CONFLICT OF INTEREST -- Many union officers were found to be heavy investors in firms with which the union had contracts, insuring "soft" contracts.
- COLLUSION -- Union officers took "loans" or outright bribes from employers in return for giving them "soft" contracts.
- MIDDLEMEN -- Many employers used "labor relations consultant firms" (so-called management middlemen) to do such dirty work as bribing union officials, terrorizing officials who would not be bribed, carrying on anti-union propaganda, labor spy work.
- PICKETING, BOYCOTTS -- Union leaders sometimes used the threat of picketing and boycotts to extort money from employers, to drive an employer who would not pay bribes out of business or to force an employer to recognize them as bargaining agents.
- ONE-MAN RULE -- Within some unions, restrictive membership clauses, strong-arm tactics in elections, reprisals against union reform movements were common.
- GANGSTERISM -- In some unions, a high percentage of officers or employees were former felons. Many employers also were shown to have used mobs to keep unions "in place." (For Select Committee, see p. 731)

ACTION IN 1958

Following an interim report (S Rept 1417) by the Select Committee on March 24, 1958, the Senate acted on two anti-corruption bills. One (S 2888) dealt largely with pension and welfare funds. The other (S 3974) largely paralleled the 1959 Kennedy bill and dealt generally with union corruption. Floor fights developed on both bills, with the issue the same as in 1959 -- whether the rules of collective bargaining should be changed. Led by their floor leader, Sen. William F. Knowland (R Calif. 1946-59), Republicans and a few Democrats threw up a series of floor amendments proposing both sharper penalties for union corruption and extensive Taft-Hartley amendments, similar to those the President requested in 1959, dealing with such issues as "hot cargo" contracts (a form of secondary boycott), the "no man's land" gap, secondary boycotts in general, organizational picketing and union elections.

In a remarkable show of unanimity, Democrats with the aid of a small band of Republicans headed by Sen. Irving M. Ives (R N.Y. 1947-59), a sponsor of both S 2888 and S 3974, voted down all substantial amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act. They argued, first, that major collective bargaining changes should not be written "on the Senate floor" but should be carefully considered in committee beforehand; and, second, that many of the amendments offered were "union-busting." Possibly a dozen Democrats (mostly Southerners led by McClellan) who favored some of the Taft-Hartley changes nevertheless voted against them most of the time on the procedural ground that prior committee study was necessary.

The Senate eventually passed both bills, and the welfare fund bill (S 2888), in a weaker version, was passed by the House and signed into law by the President. However, S 3974, after failing to get out of the House Education and Labor Committee, was brought to the floor under suspension of the rules procedure, requiring a two-thirds vote for passage. In the waning days of the session, it was rejected 190-198, failing to get even a simple majority. About two thirds of the House Democrats present voted in favor of passage and the same proportion of Republicans against.

After the House action, Democrats charged Republicans, prodded by business interests, had killed S 3974 in hopes of getting a stronger bill, with anti-labor Taft-Hartley amendments, later. Republicans, in turn, backed the President in his contention, made during the November 1958 election campaign, that Democrats, by pushing a bill too weak to clean up labor corruption, had killed labor reform for 1958. (1958 Almanac p. 191)

ROLE OF LOBBIES

In 1958, powerful business and labor union lobbying played a major role in Congressional action on the labor bill. It was no secret that many unions -- the United Mine Workers, to name one -- considered the 1958 bill far too prone to pry into labor's internal affairs, and vigorously lobbied against its passage.

Business groups, on the other hand, tended to agree with Sen. Goldwater that any reform bill without secondary boycott, picketing and "no man's land" provisions would be a "sweetheart" bill. They therefore lobbied strongly to have these provisions inserted in the bill, or to prevent its passage in the hope that a later bill would include them.

As in 1958, labor and business lobbying in 1959 was destined to be a major factor in Congressional action. Almost from the very moment Kennedy introduced his bill, both unions and business groups began to put pressure on legislators to amend the bill this way or that, to oppose it or to support it. This pressure continued through the various legislative steps on the bill. Although the AFL-CIO endorsed the original Kennedy bill as it emerged from the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee April 14, it withdrew its endorsement after the Senate "beefed up" the bill through floor amendment, and by the time the President signed the bill in September, nearly all labor was opposed; business groups, on the other hand, gave the final version near-unanimous endorsement.

Senate

The initial Kennedy bill (S 505) was introduced Jan. 20 with Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) as cosponsor. Kennedy said the bill would crack down on "Mr. James Hoffa and his hoodlum associates" in the Teamsters union and on corrupt union leaders and employers. (Throughout the year, Hoffa and the Teamsters were cited frequently as examples of why a reform bill was needed.) President Eisenhower Jan. 28 sent his labor program to Congress (for text see p. 650) and a bill incorporating his requests was introduced the same day and referred to the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Labor Subcommittee, headed by Kennedy.

The Administration bill (S 748), written in the Labor Department and sponsored in the Senate by the Labor Committee's ranking Republican, Barry Goldwater (Ariz.), paralleled closely most provisions of the Kennedy bill. But the Administration bill also gave the Secretary of Labor wider powers to investigate suspected violations and to go to court to compel compliance, and permitted the Secretary to impose two powerful administrative sanctions on non-complying unions: loss of tax exemption and loss of access to the National Labor Relations Board, which certifies unions as collective bargaining agents and rules on charges of unfair labor practices.

Where the Administration, backed by some Southern Democrats in Congress and by most business groups, differed most sharply with the Kennedy approach was in its attitude toward Taft-Hartley Act amendments. Its position was outlined by the President in his labor message and written into S 748.

In S 748, the Administration called for these major changes in the Taft-Hartley Act, along with several lesser changes:

- Picketing -- Bar recognition and organizational picketing (designed to get an employer to recognize or bargain with a union, or an employee to join a union) if the employer already recognized another union, if there had been an NLRB certification election within the preceding year, if the employees were not "sufficiently" interested (in the NLRB's judgment) in joining the union, or if no application for an NLRB election had been made after picketing had gone on for a "reasonable" length of time.
- No Man's Land Cases -- These were cases over which existing law gave the Federal Government exclusive jurisdiction, excluding the states from jurisdiction, but which the NLRB declined to handle because it considered them too small to warrant the expense. S 748 would have permitted the states to take jurisdiction in these cases.
- Secondary Boycotts -- Close loopholes under which unions might threaten an employer directly and personally in order to get him to boycott another firm, although they might not strike for this purpose; and under which it was not illegal to induce workers one by one to stop handling struck goods or to strike to compel their employer to boycott another firm, although it was illegal to so induce workers "in concert". In addition, extend the ban on secondary boycotts to railway, airline, domestic, government and agricultural workers.

In comparison, the Kennedy bill had no provision on secondary boycotts, limited its picketing provisions to a prohibition on picketing for the purpose of extortion and, in the "no man's land" cases, required the NLRB to assert jurisdiction in all labor disputes although permitting it to cede minor, primarily local cases to states with labor laws similar to Federal law.

A major controversy arose over the Administration's Taft-Hartley Act proposals -- basically the same controversy that killed the labor reform bill in 1958. Labor would have none of the Administration's major proposals, characterizing them as dangerous to the rights of organized labor and a major shift in collective-bargaining ground rules in favor of management. Business groups and most Republicans, on the other hand, tended to agree with Sen. Goldwater that any bill without secondary boycott and picketing provisions would be at best a slap-on-the-wrist to labor corruption, or what Goldwater had frequently called a "sweetheart" bill.

Anticipating the controversy, Kennedy, as chairman of the Labor Subcommittee, moved to set up a two-stage procedure by which Congress would first pass an anti-corruption bill, and later deal with Taft-Hartley changes. At Kennedy's behest, the Senate Feb. 6 authorized $20,000 for a Taft-Hartley study by a special panel of labor experts, with orders to report its recommendations by June 1. But Republicans feared that if they went along with the two-stage procedure, the second part of the package -- Taft-Hartley amendment -- would somehow never get passed. Moreover, they pointed out, the Kennedy bill contained three "pro-labor" amendments to Taft-Hartley: one permitting so-called economic strikers (fired and not entitled to replacement) to vote in NLRB certification elections; the second permitting the building trades to sign contracts with unions without an NLRB certification election; the third narrowing the definition of "supervisor" and so making more supervisors subject to union shop agreements. (The first two of these changes were also favored by the President.)

The Administration, after some apparent wavering by Labor Secretary James P. Mitchell, eventually turned down the two-stage plan. The special 12-member panel of labor experts (headed by Harvard professor Archibald Cox, Kennedy's labor law advisor) met several times during the year, beginning Feb. 11. It was reported in deep disagreement and the date for filing its report was extended from June 1 to Dec. 31.

Hearings

Kennedy's Labor Subcommittee Jan. 28-Feb. 6 held hearings on S 505 and S 748.

TESTIMONY -- Jan. 28 -- Ex-Rep. Andrew J. Biemiller (D Wis., 1945-47, 1949-51), AFL-CIO legislative director, endorsed S 505 but suggested several changes, including addition of a provision permitting NLRB to hold representation elections without prior hearings. Questioned by Goldwater, Biemiller said the AFL-CIO would oppose the Kennedy bill if provisions permitting strikers to vote in representation elections, redefining "supervisor" so that more supervisors could join unions and permitting building industry collective bargaining contracts without NLRB certification elections were deleted. Biemiller said the AFL-CIO opposed provisions in S 748 that would tighten existing bans on secondary boycotts, outlaw certain types of organizational picketing and give states jurisdiction over "no man's land" labor disputes.

Jan. 29 -- Godfrey P. Schmidt, a member of the court-appointed Board of Monitors of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, said S 505 needed revision to protect union members seeking to oust corrupt labor leaders from reprisals.

Jan. 30 -- The American Farm Bureau Federation said S 505 didn't go far enough toward curbing the "almost overwhelming concentrations of economic and political power" of unions.

Feb. 2 -- The American Retail Federation said the Kennedy bill was "seriously deficient" in not containing curbs on secondary boycotts and organizational picketing. John Raber, Indiana Farmers Union, endorsed S 505.

Feb. 3 -- Gerard D. Reilly, Chamber of Commerce of the U.S., opposed the striker voting and building industry contracts provisions of both S 505 and S 748. He said S 505 was wholly inadequate because it was silent on organizational picketing and secondary boycotts.

Feb. 4 -- Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell, in prepared testimony, supported the Goldwater bill. Referring to the Kennedy bill, he said no bill that did not include secondary boycott and organizational picketing provisions "can claim to be a truly effective labor reform measure." He said a Kennedy bill provision requiring the NLRB to assert jurisdiction in all labor disputes would "force the board to dissipate its energies" on minor cases "primarily local in character."

Kennedy, during questioning and in a statement released during the hearing, said the "Goldwater-Administration bill is an open invitation to collusion between corrupt employers and labor racketeers." Mitchell, under sharp questioning by Kennedy, said he would have to check on some provisions of the Goldwater-Administration bill criticized by Kennedy. After a recess, Mitchell returned and said the Administration bill would not, as claimed by Kennedy, bar picketing where employees were discharged solely for union activities, or bar picketing of a shop with a "sweetheart" contract or deny access to the NLRB to a local union merely because its parent union had failed to file reports required by the bill.

HONEST UNIONS NOT HURT

Feb. 5 -- Mitchell, in his second day of testimony, defended S 748's provisions on secondary boycotts and organizational picketing and said he would submit a memorandum to show that these provisions would not hurt honest labor unions, as charged by Kennedy and Sen. Wayne Morse (D Ore.) Feb. 4. Morse, who had said on Feb. 4 that Labor Department Solicitor Stuart Rothman apparently didn't know what was in the picketing and boycott provisions, withdrew "any derogatory statements about Mr. Rothman."

Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.), a co-sponsor of the Kennedy bill (S 505), said all Taft-Hartley Act amendments, including those favored by labor, should be stripped from the bill. Their inclusion, he said, would "make it certain that no legislation will pass at this session of Congress."

The National Assn. of Manufacturers said neither the Kennedy nor Administration bill was strong enough. It favored applying antitrust laws to unions, passing a national right-to-work law and curbing secondary boycotts. The same position was taken by the Associated General Contractors in Feb. 2 testimony. The NAM also asked curbs on organizational picketing and on union political spending, whether from dues or special funds.

Feb. 6 -- Biemiller and Albert J. Hayes, president of the International Assn. of Machinists (AFL-CIO) and chairman of the AFL-CIO Ethical Practices Committee, said the Administration bill was anti-labor, particularly the picketing and secondary boycott provisions. Hayes, together with George M. Harrison, president of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks (AFL-CIO) and Richard J. Gray, president of the AFL-CIO Building and Construction Trades Department, gave qualified approval to the Kennedy bill (S 505), suggesting improvements.

Feb. 16 -- Although the regular hearings ended Feb. 6, the Subcommittee called in NLRB Chairman Boyd Leedom for testimony on the "no man's land" problem. Leedom declined to endorse either the Kennedy bill provision (make the NLRB take jurisdiction over all cases) or the Administration bill provision (let the states handle minor cases). He said the NLRB, however, under its existing setup would not be able to handle all cases in its jurisdiction even if its appropriation was raised.

Bill Reported

The Labor and Public Welfare Committee March 25 voted 13-2 to report the Kennedy bill with amendments added in a month of executive sessions. A clean bill (S 1555) was introduced later in the day and reported April 14 (S Rept 187). All nine Committee Democrats and four of the Republicans voted to report the bill. Republicans Goldwater and Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.) voted against reporting the bill.

The measure sent to the floor was basically the Kennedy bill. All major Administration Taft-Hartley Act proposals were rejected. The bill contained Kennedy's anti-corruption, election and reporting provisions and these Taft-Hartley changes:

- PRE-ELECTION HEARINGS -- Permitted the National Labor Relations Board to order a representation election without a prior hearing, to conduct it even if there were objections, then take up the objections before certifying the results.
- BUILDING TRADES -- Permitted building trades collective bargaining contracts without prior NLRB union certification elections.
- STRIKER VOTING -- Permitted economic strikers fired and not entitled to reinstatement to vote in NLRB elections.
- SUPERVISORS -- Excluded certain telephone company employees previously classified as supervisors under the Taft-Hartley Act from such classification. The original bill contained a broad redefinition of "supervisor" but the Committee deleted it.
- NON-COMMUNIST OATH -- Repealed existing law requiring officers of unions seeking to use NLRB facilities to sign a non-Communist affidavit and instead required union officers and employers who used NLRB facilities within the preceding year to sign such affidavits, with jail terms and fines for violation.
- "NO MAN'S LAND" -- Permitted the NLRB to cede certain labor disputes to the states if the state involved had an existing labor relations agency that followed Federal standards in deciding labor cases. (As of September 1959, only 13 of the 50 states had state labor agencies or boards with machinery adequate to handle "no man's land cases.")

In introducing the clean bill (S 1555) March 25, Kennedy got two Republican co-sponsors -- John Sherman Cooper (Ky.) and Jacob K. Javits (N.Y.) -- both Committee members. Nevertheless, Senate Republicans were expected to make a floor fight for some Administration proposals, particularly secondary boycotts and picketing, and Sen. John L. McClellan (D Ark.) was expected to propose floor amendments to strengthen the reform provisions to bring them closer to his own bill (S 1137). McClellan also had introduced four Taft-Hartley amendment bills (S 1384-1387) paralleling provisions of S 748.

Floor Action

The Senate April 15 began debate on the labor reform bill (S 1555) sponsored by Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.). The debate, at least in part, was a test of strength between Northern Democrats who favored passing the bill without change, and a bloc of Southern Democrats and Republicans which wanted stronger provisions, both in the anti-corruption and in the Taft-Hartley Act amendment sections.

As debate began, Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.), a co-sponsor, proposed to drop Title VI of the bill, containing Taft-Hartley Act amendments, so that the bill's financial reporting, anti-bribery, union election and anti-corruption sections would stand alone. Ervin's position was supported by Sen. John L. McClellan (D Ark.), but Kennedy rejected the proposal and the Senate defeated it, 27-67.

A second major test came April 21, when Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) offered a substitute amendment for Title VI. The substitute contained all the Taft-Hartley Act amendments -- including those involving organizational picketing and secondary boycotts -- that were included in the Administration bill. On the theory that the substitute was too broad and should be broken down into separate amendments, almost all the Southern Democrats and 11 Republicans, including Minority Whip Thomas H. Kuchel (R Calif.), joined Northern Democrats to defeat the substitute, 24-67. (For voting on this and other key amendments, see charts p. 405, 406, 407)

A third major test came April 22, when the Senate by a 47-46 vote agreed to the McClellan "labor bill of rights" amendment. The McClellan amendment was drawn largely from McClellan's own bill (S 1137) and provided specific guarantees that McClellan said would protect union members from coercion and arbitrary action by union leaders. A Goldwater motion to table a reconsideration motion on the "bill of rights" was carried, 46-45, with Vice President Nixon voting "yea" to break a tie.

The amendment (later amended somewhat; see below) guaranteed union members the right to speak at union meetings, vote and run for office, and attempted to prevent union leaders from imposing arbitrary fines and punishment on members.

Debate on the McClellan proposal and on some other provisions produced several attacks on the Supreme Court for interpreting some Federal labor law as "preempting" the areas involved to the exclusion of the states. Sens. Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.), Allen J. Ellender (D La.) and Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.) criticized the Court.

In a turnabout, however, Kennedy and John A. Carroll (D Colo.) said provisions of the McClellan amendment might have the effect of nullifying state laws protecting the rights of union members, and McClellan subsequently modified his amendment to meet this objection. Carroll and Kennedy also charged a provision of the McClellan amendment permitting the Secretary of Labor to seek Federal court injunctions against violation, or orders for compliance, did not protect the individuals involved, and was almost identical to a provision of the civil rights bill of 1957 that Southerners had bitterly opposed. Said Kennedy: "Speaking of consistency, I stood on the floor of the Senate and voted for jury trial in all cases of injunction with respect to voting rights. Yet the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas would deny the right of jury trial in all cases involving the rights of millions of Americans if the Secretary of Labor gets an injunction."

The Senate passed the bill April 25 by a 90-1 roll-call vote. Sen. Barry Goldwater (R Ariz.) was the sole dissenter. Final passage came after 55 votes on amendments, 16 of them roll calls. (Goldwater Aug. 5 remarked on the Senate floor that following the roll call, he met with President Eisenhower who "looked at me and said, 'Had I been in the Senate, I would have voted with you.' ")

The bill was sent to the House, where the Education and Labor Committee was holding hearings on corresponding legislation, and Chairman Graham A. Barden (D N.C.) predicted a "good, strong bill" would be sent to the floor.

CURBS REJECTED

High points of Senate voting on the last days (debate began April 15) were the rejection of strong secondary boycott and organizational picketing curbs offered by McClellan and the revision of McClellan's "labor bill of rights" amendment. Charges were made that guarantees of equality to all union members in the McClellan amendment might be applied to enforce social integration of Southern unions, and that a provision permitting the Secretary of Labor to seek injunctions to restrain anticipated violations paralleled rejected civil rights legislation. As a result, a bipartisan coalition led by Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel (R Calif.) wrote a new section into the bill watering down the McClellan "bill of rights," which had been opposed from the outset by Kennedy. After a bitter debate late April 24, marked by an appeal by Sen. Styles Bridges (R N.H.) against a ruling of the presiding officer, A.S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.), that Kuchel's amendment was in order, the Senate April 25 voted 77-14 to insert the new language. Before the vote was taken, Vice President Richard M. Nixon sustained Monroney's ruling and Bridges' appeal was withdrawn.

BILL OF RIGHTS ADDED

The bill as passed was a "beefed up" version of the bill that had been reported by the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee. It required labor, management and management "middlemen" to report to the Secretary of Labor on a wide variety of practices and expenditures, outlawed various forms of union corruption and labor-management collusion, contained guarantees of fair union elections and trusteeship procedures. To these provisions McClellan had succeeded in adding his "bill of rights," and other significant changes were also made from the floor. Although the major organizational and recognition picketing amendments (and secondary boycott proposals) of the President had been rejected, supporters of a stronger bill succeeded in adding several provisions that had initially been opposed by Kennedy, and that labor unions said made the bill "anti-labor." These included a limited ban on organizational and recognition picketing (adopted 86-4), the outlawing of hot cargo contracts between trucking unions and interstate common carriers (adopted by voice vote) and language put in by McClellan imposing a "fiduciary responsibility" on union officials for the handling of union funds.

This Senate bill became the basis of subsequent bills approved by the House Education and Labor Committee and passed by the House. Except for strong Taft-Hartley Act provisions later added by the House (and accepted by the House-Senate conference committee in the bill's final version), there were few significant changes as the bill progressed toward final passage.

PROVISIONS -- For final provisions of S 1555, as enacted into law, see p. 156; for a comparison of the major differences between the Senate bill and the bills that went to the House floor, see p. 166; for initial Administration proposals, see p. 160).

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Barry Goldwater (R Ariz.), Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) and John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) -- Define "officer" of a union so that, except for provisions relating to the non-Communist affidavit, "officer" under the bill means not only persons filling union jobs with the title of officer but also any person performing the functions of president, vice president, secretary, treasurer or other executive or governing functions; April 22. Voice vote.

McClellan, as modified -- Add a new title containing a "labor bill of rights," with criminal penalties for violation and with the Secretary of Labor empowered to sue in Federal courts to enjoin violations of or compel compliance with the provisions of the title. The new title contained guarantees of equal voting rights, free speech and the right to assemble for all members, guarantees against arbitrary discipline or expulsion or financial exactions, guarantees of a member's right to sue or testify on matters involving the union and of the right of candidates for union office to inspect membership lists; April 22. Roll call, 47-46. (McClellan's modification provided that, except if specified, no provision of S 1555 should be construed -- through the doctrine of Federal preemption -- as intended to deprive union members of rights and remedies guaranteed them under state laws.)

Barry Goldwater (R Ariz.) and John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) -- Make clear that union conferences and joint boards, such as the Western Conference of Teamsters, are covered by the act; April 23. Voice vote.

John L. McClellan (D Ark.) -- Require employers to report certain payments to "middlemen" or to union officers within 30 days, instead of annually; April 23. Voice.

Thomas J. Dodd (D Conn.) -- Require all unions to give 15 days written notice to members before union elections; April 23. Voice.

Goldwater -- Permit union members, for proper cause, to examine books and records upon which their union's annual reports to the Secretary of Labor are based; April 23. Voice.

McClellan -- Impose a fiduciary responsibility on union officers to handle union funds and trusts honestly and for legitimate union purposes; April 23. Voice.

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), McClellan, Gordon Allott (R Colo.) and Winston L. Prouty (R Vt.) -- Permit union members to seek Federal or state court relief against mishandling of funds by union representatives without waiting for the latter to be convicted of misconduct and after only four, instead of six, months of union inactivity on the matter; April 23. Voice.

McClellan -- Require unions holding locals under trusteeship, in their semi-annual reports, to state what funds have been transferred from the local to the trustee and give other financial data; April 23. Voice.

Kennedy, McClellan -- Punish "shakedown" picketing, even if peaceful, by up to 20 years in jail, instead of up to one year; April 23. Voice.

Francis Case (R S.D.) -- Permit the NLRB to limit the period during which strikers not entitled to reinstatement would be eligible to vote in representation elections; April 23. Voice.

Goldwater -- Bar proxy voting in secret-ballot votes required under the bill; April 23. Voice.

McClellan -- Require unions to give members, on request, copies of labor contracts; April 23. Voice.

McClellan -- Delete Secretary of Labor's power to exempt individuals from a provision barring felons from union office and make clear that conviction after, as well as before, enactment of the bill would be grounds for exclusion; April 23. Voice.

Albert Gore (D Tenn.) -- Make it a crime for a union and a common carrier to conclude "hot cargo" agreements; April 23. Voice.

John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.), Javits and Wayne Morse (D Ore.) -- Permit state labor relations agencies but not state courts to handle labor disputes the NLRB declines to handle, require application of Federal labor law in such cases and permit appeals from the state agencies to Federal but not state courts; April 24. Roll-call vote, 78-15.

McClellan -- Require union officials handling union money or trust funds to be bonded; April 24. Voice.

Prouty, as modified -- Bar organizational or recognition picketing if the employer has already recognized another union or if the union lost an NLRB election in the preceding nine months and cannot show that it has since come to represent the majority of the employees or that the employer used unfair labor practices in the election; April 24. Roll call, 86-4.

Morse -- Permit trusteeships over locals for only 12, instead of 18, months; April 24. Voice.

Thomas H. Kuchel (R Calif.) on behalf of a bipartisan group of Senators -- Revised April 22 McClellan "labor bill of rights" amendment to make clear that guarantees of equality of privileges for all union members applied only to voting and other organizational rights and not to social equality, to strike a provision that would have given the Secretary of Labor power to seek Federal court injunctions against anticipated attempts to deny members equal voting and other rights and to strike a provision guaranteeing all candidates for union office access to membership lists; April 25. Roll call, 77-14.

Javits -- Within reasonable limits, require unions to mail members the campaign literature of all bona fide candidates for union office and to grant equal mailing privileges to all candidates; permit candidates to seek Federal court orders for compliance; April 25. Voice.

Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) and Strom Thurmond (D S.C.) -- Guarantee jury trial to persons charged with criminal contempt of court, except if committed in the presence of the court, in any civil proceeding brought under the bill; April 25. Voice.

George A. Smathers (D Fla.) and Russell B. Long (D La.) -- Make existing as well as future "hot cargo" contracts, or discussion of "hot cargo" provisions and secondary boycotts during collective bargaining unfair labor practices and bring them under the mandatory injunction provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act; April 25. Voice.

Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.) -- Guarantee every candidate for union office the right to have a teller at the counting of ballots; April 25. Voice.

Mundt -- Require immediate NLRB handling of charges that an employer, in the absence of a union-shop contract, had fixed terms of employment that discriminated against a particular individual with the purpose of encouraging or discouraging union membership; April 25. Voice.

Mundt -- Bar use of union funds for factual statements of issues regarding an individual's candidacy for union office; April 25. Voice.

Kennedy -- Make clear that the Secretary of Labor's power to seek court injunctions in advance against suspected violation of the bill applies only to the reporting sections of the bill; April 25. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) -- Limit the bill to its anti-corruption provisions by striking out Title VI, containing Taft-Hartley Act amendments affecting collective bargaining rights, representation elections and the powers and procedure of the National Labor Relations Board; April 21. Roll-call vote, 27-67.

Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) -- Perfect language of pending Dirksen (R Ill.) amendment (see below) so that organizational picketing by a union would be barred under the amendment only where an employer already recognized another union legally, where a representation election had been held within the preceding 12 months and no union had been certified as bargaining agent, or where the employer or another union had a petition for an election pending before the NLRB; April 21. First accepted by voice vote, but later rejected when the Dirksen amendment was defeated.

Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.) -- Perfect Dirksen amendment so that union contracts with building trades firms under the amendment would not be permitted to contain union shop clauses in states with laws barring the union shop; April 21. Accepted, voice; later rejected when the Dirksen amendment was defeated.

Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) -- Substitute for Title VI of S 1555 a new section, as modified by Keating and Curtis amendments (above), containing the Administration's proposals for amending the Taft-Hartley Act; April 21. Roll call, 24-67.

Goldwater -- Require annual union reports on all union loans to members and officers, not just those over $250; April 23. Standing vote.

Prouty -- Impose criminal penalties on anyone denying or attempting to deny union members election rights guaranteed by the bill; April 23. Voice.

McClellan -- Permit state labor relations agencies or state courts to handle labor disputes the NLRB declines to handle; April 23. Roll call, 39-52.

Clifford P. Case (R N.J.) -- Delete permission for the Secretary of Labor to exempt from filing annual financial reports unions with fewer than 200 members and less than $20,000 annual gross receipts; April 24. Voice.

Prouty -- Substitute for pending Cooper-Javits-Morse amendment (above) language to permit state labor relations agencies and state courts (the latter only in the absence of, or on appeal from, a state labor agency) to handle labor disputes the NLRB declines to handle, provided they apply Federal labor law, and permit appeals in such cases directly from the state courts to the U.S. Supreme Court; April 24. Roll call, 40-53.

Ervin -- Revise pending McClellan amendment (below) so as not to bar peaceful organizational picketing; April 24. Roll call, 25-67.

McClellan -- Bar organizational or recognition picketing if the union had not won an NLRB election within the preceding 12 months or the majority of the employees, five days before picketing started, had not petitioned the employer to recognize the union; impose criminal penalties on individuals and fines of $10,000 per day on unions involved in "shakedown" picketing; April 24. Roll call, 30-59.

McClellan -- Revise Taft-Hartley Act secondary boycott prohibitions to bar unions from inducing or coercing an employer or employee, by any means, to stop doing business with another firm or handling its goods, and to extend the secondary boycott prohibitions to all unions; April 24. Roll call, 41-50.

Dodd -- Permit union trusteeships only for one year (the Secretary of Labor could authorize a second year) and only with permission of the Secretary and on evidence of the need for the trusteeship; April 24. Roll call, 41-51.

James O. Eastland (D Miss.) -- Require secret-ballot strike votes before any strike can take place; April 24. Roll call, 28-60.

Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.) -- Permit a union or employer to defray the defense costs but not the court fines of agents or officers prosecuted for violating the bill; April 24. Roll call, 7-85.

Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.) -- Require unions to nominate and elect officers by secret-ballots mailed to members' homes with votes counted by non-members of the union designated by the Secretary of Labor; April 25. Voice.

Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) -- Permit states to regulate or prohibit strikes in public utilities; April 25. Roll call, 27-64.

DEBATE -- Debate lasted from April 15-25. These were the highlights:

April 21 -- Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) -- There could be "no assurance" from Kennedy that an omnibus Taft-Hartley Act revision bill would be reported later. Consequently, the President's Taft-Hartley revision program would be offered from the floor.

John L. McClellan (D Ark.) -- S 1555 was not a bill he could "support enthusiastically." The day was swiftly approaching when the gangster element would "gobble up decent unionism" unless Congress did something to prevent it.

April 24 -- John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) -- "The difference between (Sen. McClellan) and me is that every time he sees a union, he sees racketeering." McClellan's picketing amendment "would prevent any further union organization in this country," and if it were put into the bill, it would and should "end any chance for this bill to pass.... I myself would be forced to vote against the bill and ask that my name be stricken from it...."

Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) -- The original McClellan bill of rights amendment "contains injunctive procedures which if approved in the labor field would open the door... in the field of civil rights." It "effectively enforces integration in social activities of unions...and is the first step to a broad Federal FEPC program."

House

The House Education and Labor Special Labor-Management Reform Legislation Subcommittee, consisting of the Labor Standards and Labor-Management Relations Subcommittees, sitting jointly, held 39 days of hearings on labor bills from March 4-June 10. Throughout the period, members of the Committee and of the House were subjected to strenuous lobbying by labor and business groups. The AFL-CIO May 20, for example, announced it opposed S 1555 as anti-union and would wage a "vigorous battle" for its revision in the House. Both the National Assn. of Manufacturers and the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S. in mid-May came out against

S 1555, as too weak to clean up corruption. The United Mine Workers and the Teamsters (the latter in a series of breakfast meetings with House Members) were other groups that lobbied against the bill.

The Special Subcommittee had before it not only the Senate-passed S 1555 and a House counterpart (HR 3540) of the Administration bill, but also bills introduced by Committee Chairman Graham A. Barden (D N.C.) and ranking Republican Carroll D. Kearns (Pa.). In most provisions, one of Barden's bills (HR 4473) was similar to S 1555, but it also required strike votes, outlawed all union political contributions, either state or Federal, and denied access to the NLRB to unions not complying with fair elections procedures. Barden's second bill (HR 4474) included some of the Administration's Taft-Hartley proposals but also permitted states concurrent jurisdiction with the Federal Government over all labor disputes. Kearns' bill (HR 7265) corresponded to HR 4474 and also included a "bill of rights" section. Highlights of the testimony:

● Administration -- Secretary of Labor Mitchell supported the Administration bill, criticizing a measure (HR 3302) corresponding to S 1555 as too weak and the Barden bills as too strong. He said the Barden organizational-recognition picketing provision "would foreclose picketing in every situation, no matter how justifiable." Mitchell said he could not agree to the Barden approach of "licensing unions" and providing detailed internal regulations: "The Administration does not believe that the Government should inject itself into the internal affairs of any organization more than is absolutely necessary to correct the evils which must be remedied." On the Barden (HR 4474) concurrent jurisdiction provisions, he said, "I would be opposed to any provision which would actually provide concurrent jurisdiction and destroy the uniformity of law and procedures which I think is a necessary part of a national labor policy." Mitchell also said the Administration bill was not intended in any way to encourage states to enact laws banning the union shop.

● Unions -- AFL-CIO President George Meany, Teamster representatives Sidney Zagri and David Previant, National Maritime Union (AFL-CIO) President Joseph Curran, International Assn. of Machinists (AFL-CIO) President Albert J. Hayes, United Mine Workers President John L. Lewis and a number of other union leaders opposed without exception all proposals to: let the states handle labor disputes, curb organizational picketing, impose additional curbs on secondary boycotts, require strike votes, put unions under antitrust laws, impose additional Federal curbs on union political spending or pass a Federal law outlawing the union shop. Lewis, in addition, opposed any labor reform legislation, saying existing state and Federal laws were adequate to deal with any union corruption.

Both Meany and the Teamster representatives said they would be willing to accept a moderate labor reform bill (Meany supported the original Kennedy bill) that would guarantee union members various rights and protect their financial interests. But they said the Taft-Hartley changes proposed in the Administration, Barden and Kearns bills would merely tip the collective bargaining balance in favor of management.

The union representatives said provisions of the McClellan "bill of rights" were so vague that extended litigation would be needed to test their meaning. Meany said some provisions were so rigid and detailed in setting out electoral, disciplinary and membership rules that they would outlaw "normal and proper" union practices: a union leader who threw a drunkard out of a meeting for refusing to keep order, or expelled a Communist trying to disrupt business, might be harassed by a court suit or even fined or imprisoned. He objected particularly to a provision of S 1555 imposing a fiduciary responsibility on union leaders for the handling of union funds. It might be interpreted by the courts, he said, as outlawing union education spending, financing of labor good will tours overseas, or supporting civil liberties. Meany also said: "The political power of unions is bunk.... Union leaders don't control any votes.... You can't force an American worker to vote any particular way."

● Business Groups -- Although business groups were less in agreement than the labor leaders on reform legislation, most of them supported the Administration, Kearns or Barden bills. The argument was repeatedly made by business representatives that small business men were powerless to withstand pressure from a large union when the latter engaged in "blackmail" picketing or certain permissible secondary boycott practices.

March 17 -- Gerard D. Reilly, Chamber of Commerce of the U.S., said both the Kennedy and Administration bills were too weak, though the latter was preferable. He endorsed the Barden bills.

April 7 -- The National Restaurant Assn. called for restraints on organizational picketing, closing of the "no man's land" gap and secondary boycott "loopholes."

April 8, 14 -- The Associated General Contractors of America opposed a provision of S 1555 permitting building industry firms to conclude bargaining contracts with unions not certified in an NLRB election. It said the provision would be used as a "weapon" by unions to force workers into a union through union-shop contracts, Fred C. Fischer, National Retail Merchants' Assn., urged prohibition of secondary boycotts and organizational picketing, closing of the "no man's land" gap.

June 2 -- Theodore R. Iserman, special counsel and spokesman for the National Small Business Men's Assn., said both the Senate bill and the Barden bill (HR 4473) "leave much undone," but he supported the Barden bill.

● Others -- The American Farm Bureau Federation April 7 endorsed the general approach of HR 4473. It also called for tightening of picketing and secondary boycott prohibitions without endorsing any specific measure, for banning of unloading fees, transfer of jurisdiction over wide categories of labor disputes to the states and prohibition of union political spending.

The American Civil Liberties Union June 22 reversed a seven-year stand against Federal intervention in internal union affairs and urged Congress to support a "bill of rights" for rank and file union members. The ACLU testified that "Government intervention...is a necessary evil (because) self regulation alone cannot adequately protect the democratic rights of members."

Americans for Democratic Action July 6 wrote the Committee endorsing the reporting, trusteeship and election provisions of S 1555 as reported to the Senate and stating that failure to enact a reform bill in 1959 would hurt good unionism and the public interest.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- June 3 -- House Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas) reportedly told key Democrats in the House, "We got to get a bill."

President Eisenhower at his news conference endorsed the original McClellan "bill of rights" in the Senate bill and said, "I was sorry to see it watered down." He said he "most certainly" did not believe Congress should recess without passing a real labor reform bill.

Bill Reported

Although there had been fears that the Committee, split between conservatives and liberals, might end by writing no bill at all, it soon became clear that there were powerful pressures for passage of a labor bill in 1959. One was the campaign waged by the President to arouse public opinion.

Another was the immense prestige of Sen. McClellan and his Select Committee. This Committee, throughout the spring and summer of 1959, continued its well-publicized hearings on labor corruption and labor-management collusion, having as its chief witness for a time the president of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, James R. Hoffa. The Committee also released a number of reports charging Hoffa's union and others with massive corruption and betrayal of the interests of union members.

Sen. Kennedy and his brother Robert Kennedy, chief counsel of the McClellan Committee, also sought public support for enactment of an effective labor reform bill.

On July 23, a sharply divided Education and Labor Committee voted 16-14 to send a bill to the floor. Basically, it was the Senate bill, refined and changed somewhat but still largely the same bill. Of the 10 Republicans on the Committee, four voted against reporting the Committee bill (HR 8342), later named the Elliott bill after sponsor Carl Elliott (D Ala.). When the Committee report was filed July 30 (H Rept 741), all 10 Republicans said HR 8342 was a weak bill; the six who voted for it did so only to get some bill -- any bill -- to the floor for amendment. The Committee's 20 Democrats split 10-10; the opponents said the bill was anti-labor, though less so than the Senate bill. Several Democrats said they supported it only to get the issue to the floor. Only five members of the Committee supported the Elliott bill wholeheartedly.

The breakdown on the 16-14 vote: Republicans for -- Griffin (Mich.), Holt (Calif.), Ayres (Ohio), Lafore (Pa.), Frelinghuysen (N.J.), Quie (Minn.). Republicans against -- Kearns (Pa.), Hoffman (Mich.), Wainwright (N.Y.), Hiestand (Calif.).

Democrats for -- Udall (Ariz.), Elliott (Ala.), Landrum (Ga.), Green (Ore.), Thompson (N.J.), Barden (N.C.), Giaimo (Conn.), Daniels (N.J.), Brademas (Ind.), O'Hara (Mich.). Democrats against -- Powell (N.Y.), Bailey (W. Va.), Wier (Minn.), Roosevelt (Calif.), Zelenko (N.Y.), Holland (Pa.), Teller (N.Y.), Dent (Pa.), Pucinski (Ill.), Perkins (Ky.).

On July 27, two Committee members, Reps. Phil M. Landrum (D Ga.) and Robert P. Griffin (R Mich.), introduced a labor bill (HR 8400) they said they would propose as a bipartisan floor substitute for the Elliott bill. With some minor changes, the Landrum-Griffin bill was identical with the anti-corruption and union democracy provisions of the Elliott bill; but the substitute also contained the strong Taft-Hartley changes favored by the President. A second substitute for the Elliott bill was introduced (HR 8490) July 30 by Rep. John F. Shelley (D Calif.), a former president of the California Federation of Labor. Supported by a caucus of 43 Democrats, Shelley's bill corresponded roughly to the original Senate Kennedy bill (S 505).

Kennedy and House Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas) endorsed the Elliott bill (Rayburn Aug. 10 in a nationwide radio speech); the President Aug. 6, also in a nationwide speech, praised the Landrum-Griffin bill; and AFL-CIO President George Meany Aug. 6 endorsed the Shelley bill. McClellan backed the Landrum-Griffin bill.

Three Bills Compared

The union democracy, reporting and anti-corruption provisions of the Kennedy bill, the Elliott bill and the Landrum-Griffin bill were largely similar. The Taft-Hartley provisions, however, were quite different. These were the chief differences in the three bills before the House-Senate conference committee came up with a final version. In every case, the Landrum-Griffin provision, with modifications, ultimately emerged in the final bill.

1. Bill of Rights. The Senate bill made violation of a union member's rights a crime; the Elliott bill did not make violation a crime but permitted a union member whose rights were being infringed by union leaders to get a court order to protect his rights. The Landrum-Griffin bill made interference with a union member's rights a crime if violence or threats were involved; if not, the member could seek a court order.

2. Annual Reports. Kennedy bill required all unions to file annual reports, but allowed the Secretary of Labor to exempt small unions (less than 200 members and $20,000 annual receipts). The Elliott bill automatically exempted small unions but permitted the Secretary to order them to report after a hearing. The Landrum-Griffin bill made all unions report.

3. Ethical Practices, Commissioner of Labor Reports. Neither the Elliott nor Landrum-Griffin bill contained the Kennedy bill provisions setting up the post of Commissioner of Labor Reports and creating a 15-member advisory committee on labor-management ethical practices codes.

4. "No Man's Land." The Kennedy bill let state labor agencies, but not state courts, handle "no man's land" cases, provided Federal law was followed. The Elliott bill required the NLRB to handle all cases over which Federal law gave it jurisdiction. Landrum-Griffin gave states and state courts full jurisdiction to take over "no man's land" cases, with no stipulation on Federal law.

5. Supervisors. The Kennedy bill excluded telephone switchboard supervisors from the category of "supervisors," making them liable to union-shop contracts. The other two bills had no such provision.

6. Secondary Boycotts. The Landrum-Griffin bill closed up the secondary boycott "loopholes" as favored by the President. The Elliott and Kennedy bills had no secondary boycott provisions.

7. Hot Cargo Contracts. The Kennedy and Elliott bills outlawed hot cargo contracts only if they involved common carriers under Part II of the Interstate Commerce Act and drivers unions. The Landrum-Griffin bill outlawed any contract in any industry by which an employer agreed in advance not to do business with another firm the union labelled "unfair."

8. Picketing. The Kennedy and Elliott bills outlawed organizational and recognition picketing only where another union was recognized or the picketing union had lost an NLRB representation election in the past nine months. The Landrum-Griffin bill did the same thing, but also outlawed picketing where the union had not already signed up 30 percent of the employees or had not asked the NLRB to hold a representation election within 30 days. In addition, it outlawed consumer boycott picketing.

Floor Action

The House Aug. 14, by a 303-125 roll call vote, passed an amended labor reform bill (HR 8342) that contained the strong secondary boycott and picketing provisions requested by President Eisenhower but opposed by organized labor and the Democratic leadership. A motion by Rep. Carroll D. Kearns (R Pa.) to recommit the bill was rejected on a 149-279 roll call.

After the vote on passage, the House by voice vote substituted the language of its amended bill for that of the Senate-passed labor bill (S 1555) and sent the latter bill to conference.

The key vote on the bill came Aug. 13 when the House agreed, on a 229-201 roll-call vote, to an amendment offered by Reps. Phil M. Landrum (D Ga.) and Robert P. Griffin (R Mich.). The Landrum-Griffin amendment replaced the original text of HR 8342 with the text of the Landrum-Griffin bill (HR 8400). (For voting see chart p. 382)

The bill, as passed by the House, carried the first major Taft-Hartley Act changes voted by either chamber of Congress since the Act was passed in 1947. It also represented a substantial legislative victory for the President and for the Republican-Southern Democratic coalition that put across the Landrum-Griffin substitute.

The same coalition, before putting through the Landrum-Griffin substitute, defeated a civil rights amendment offered by Rep. Adam C. Powell Jr. (D N.Y.) and turned back the John F. Shelley (D Calif.) substitute bill by teller votes of 160-215 and 132-245.

President Eisenhower late Aug. 13, when it appeared certain the Landrum-Griffin substitute had won, issued the following statement from his vacation headquarters at Gettysburg, Pa.:

"With, I am sure, millions of Americans, I applaud the House of Representatives for its vote today in support of the Landrum-Griffin labor reform bill which would deal effectively with the abuses disclosed by the McClellan Committee (of the Senate)."

The President's Aug. 6 radio-television speech, with its high praise of the Landrum-Griffin measure, was widely credited for the latter's success.

LOBBYING EFFORTS

Debate on the bill, which began Aug. 11, was conducted in what Members called an atmosphere of power-house lobbying by labor and business groups. Several Members opposing the Landrum-Griffin substitute said the National Assn. of Manufacturers, the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S. and other business groups were conducting a concerted lobbying effort for the substitute. Members favoring the substitute said the AFL-CIO and constituent groups were demonstrating equal effort on behalf of the Shelley bill, and the International Brotherhood of Teamsters and United Mine Workers were lobbying to kill all labor reform legislation. Ray J. Madden (D Ind.), a supporter of the Shelley bill, and Stewart L. Udall (D Ariz.), floor manager of the original version of HR 8342, both indicated that Members who supported the Landrum-Griffin substitute might face political retribution from labor in the 1960 Congressional election. (On Aug. 19, James B. Carey, an AFL-CIO vice president who headed the International Union of Electrical Workers, wrote to all House Members promising political support for those who voted against the bill, and opposition for those who voted for it.)

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

John Dowdy (D Texas) -- Amend Landrum-Griffin substitute so that a union member, instead of the Secretary of Labor, would be permitted to bring a Federal civil suit to prevent his union from fining, suspending, expelling or otherwise disciplining him for exercising rights guaranteed by the bill; Aug. 13. Standing vote, 186-157; teller vote, 207-158.

J. Carlton Loser (D Tenn.) -- Amend Landrum-Griffin substitute so that the penalty for threatening or using violence to interfere with rights guaranteed union members by the bill would be $1,000 and one year in prison instead of $10,000 and two years in prison; Aug. 13. Voice.

Phil M. Landrum (D Ga.) and Robert P. Griffin (R Mich.) -- Substitute the text of the Landrum-Griffin labor bill (HR 8400), as amended above, for the text of the committee bill; Aug. 13. Teller, 215-200; roll call, 229-201.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Adam C. Powell Jr. (D N.Y.) -- Add to the Landrum-Griffin substitute a provision outlawing racial and religious discrimination or segregation by unions; Aug. 12. Teller, 160-215.

Carl D. Perkins (D Ky.) -- Substitute for the Landrum-Griffin bill the text of the Shelley bill (HR 8490), which did not contain secondary boycott, hot cargo or organizational picketing provisions; Aug. 12. Teller, 132-245.

Oren Harris (D Ark.) -- Exempt from the Landrum-Griffin substitute all unions and employers subject to the Railway Labor Act; Aug. 13. Teller, 179-183.

Charles S. Gubser (R Calif.) -- Amend Landrum-Griffin substitute so that the officers of national unions when chosen at a union convention, be elected by secret ballot; Aug. 13. Voice.

Clare E. Hoffman (R Mich.) -- Amend Landrum-Griffin substitute to outlaw strikes by employees of public utilities; Aug. 13. Voice.

Hoffman -- Amend Landrum-Griffin substitute to make unions subject to Federal antitrust laws; Aug. 13. Voice.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- Aug. 13 -- In a House speech, Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D Mass.) criticized Attorney General William P. Rogers and Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield for applying pressure on Members on behalf of the Landrum-Griffin bill.

Vice President Nixon said the Landrum-Griffin bill was a "very constructive bill" that would "do no damage to labor leaders who follow honest practices."

Aug. 17 -- An article by Scripps-Howard writer Dickson Preston said the President decided to broadcast his Aug. 6 appeal for passage of the Landrum-Griffin bill after Reps. Ayres and Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.) urged him to offset the appeals of Sen. Kennedy and Robert Kennedy.

Vote Record Set

The key 229-201 roll-call vote on which the House Aug. 13 agreed to the Landrum-Griffin substitute labor bill was the largest House vote ever taken, Congressional experts believe. Only five of the 435 Representatives (there was one vacancy) did not vote.

The next largest total vote taken in the House on a legislative issue in the past 10 years also came on a labor bill which on May 4, 1949 was recommitted by a 212-209 roll call, with nine Members not voting.

HOUSE VOTING ANALYSIS

An analysis of the key House vote, on the Landrum-Griffin bill (see chart p. 382), showed:

- Eighty-five of the 95 Democrats who supported the Landrum-Griffin substitute came from the 13 Southern states; 24 Southern Democrats opposed the bill. Northern Democrats voted against the substitute, 10-160.

The 10 Northern Democrats who voted Aug. 13 for the Landrum-Griffin bill were: J. Floyd Breeding (Kan.), Daniel B. Brewster, George H. Fallon, Thomas F. Johnson and Richard E. Lankford (all Md.), Clarence Cannon, W.R.Hull Jr. and Paul C. Jones (all Mo.), Larry Brock (Neb.) and Thomas G. Morris (N.M.).

- Republicans supported the Landrum-Griffin bill, 134-17. The 17 opposition Republicans were: John F. Baldwin Jr. (Calif.), William G. Bray (Ind.), Fred Schwengel (Iowa), John B. Bennett (Mich.), Glenn C. Cunningham (Neb.), Chester E. Merrow (N.H.), William T. Cahill and Frank C. Osmers Jr. (both N.J.), Paul A. Fino (N.Y.), Robert J. Corbett, James G. Fulton, John P. Saylor, James E. Van Zandt (all Pa.), Thor C. Tollefson (Wash.), Arch A. Moore Jr. (W.Va.), Alvin E. O'Konski and Gardner R. Withrow (both Wis.).
- Official campaign spending reports of labor union political committees identified 126 Representatives as recipients of labor contributions in the 1958 election campaign.

Of these 126, 116 opposed the Landrum-Griffin bill, eight supported it and two were not recorded. The eight recipients of labor contributions who voted for the bill were: Reps. Breeding, Johnson, Lankford, Hull, Morris, Robert A. Everett (D Tenn.), Thomas N. Downing (D Va.) and Thomas M. Pelly (R Wash.). The two who did not vote were Charles C. Diggs Jr. (D Mich.) and Gordon Canfield Jr. (R N.J.).

Conference

A compromise version of the House and Senate labor bills was cleared Sept. 4 for President Eisenhower's signature when the House agreed to the report of the Senate-House conference committee by a 352-52 roll-call vote. The Senate had accepted the conference report, 95-2, on Sept. 3.

Only one House Republican, Rep. Paul A. Fino (N.Y.), voted "nay" with 51 Democrats. Another, John P. Saylor (Pa.), was paired against the bill. Sen. William Langer (R N.D.) joined Wayne Morse (D Ore.) in Senate opposition to the conference version. (For voting, see charts p. 392, 440)

The final version of the bill carried union democracy, financial reporting and anti-corruption provisions, along with "no man's land," secondary boycott and organizational picketing amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act.

The bill was in conference 12 days, and Senate conferees worked against a background of the Aug. 17 promise of Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.), sponsor of the original Senate version and conference committee chairman, to return to the Senate for instructions if the conferees could not reconcile the Senate version, which did not include the President's Taft-Hartley requests, with the House version, which did include them. There was little disagreement on non-Taft-Hartley provisions.

Kennedy Aug. 28 introduced a resolution (S Res 181) asking the Senate to instruct its conferees to insist on a Taft-Hartley compromise proposed by him; Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) the same day introduced S Res 180, asking instructions to accept the House version. No vote was necessary, however, because the conferees finally agreed late Sept. 2.

The final bill was largely the House bill, but Kennedy, the other Senate Democratic conferees and Reps. Frank Thompson Jr. (D N.J.) and Carl D. Perkins (D Ky.) succeeded in getting the House conferees to soften their Taft-Hartley provisions by including several exemptions for unions. These involved the "no man's land" provision, garment and construction industry hot cargo contracts, and organizational and recognition picketing. (See p. 169 for an analysis of the major Taft-Hartley Act changes made by the bill.)

An AFL-CIO spokesman Sept. 2, while applauding these softening efforts, said the final bill was "worse" for labor than the Taft-Hartley Act.

The conference committee reached agreement after Kennedy dropped his insistence on including a provision to let building trades unions picket a joint construction site. The House Parliamentarian said this provision could have been ruled out of order in the House as new matter in a conference report. Kennedy and Republican Whip Thomas H. Kuchel (Calif.) Sept. 3 introduced a bill (S 2643) to effect this provision, and Kennedy said Senate leaders assured him it would be considered in 1960. Only Perkins and Sen. Wayne Morse (D Ore.) did not sign the conference report. Morse spoke for four hours against S 1555 before the 95-2 vote.

LATER EVENTS

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- Sept. 4 -- Chairman John L. McClellan (D Ark.) and Vice Chairman Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.) of the Senate Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor or Management Field said in separate interviews that the Senate should create a special "watchdog" committee to study the effectiveness of S 1555 in practice and to provide a forum for serious complaints of labor-management wrongdoing left uncorrected by S 1555.

Labor Secretary James P. Mitchell said he would ask Congress for a special $2 million appropriation so that the department could begin administering the financial reporting provisions of S 1555. According to department estimates, annual financial reports would have to be filed with the Secretary of Labor by about 55,000 unions, 500,000 individual union officers and over 100,000 employers. Mitchell said he would set up a unit in the department to conduct investigations, authorized by S 1555, of suspected violations of the election and reporting sections of the bill.

Sept. 7 -- Addressing an AFL-CIO rally in Salt Lake City, George Meany said Southern Democrats had joined GOP forces in backing a tough labor reform bill in return for help in blocking civil rights legislation.

Sept. 8 -- The Senate Appropriations Committee, in reporting the fiscal 1960 mutual security appropriation bill (HR 8385 -- S Rept 981), attached to it supplemental appropriations granting Secretary of Labor Mitchell his $2 million and giving the National Labor Relations Board $500,000 for additional expenses it would incur under S 1555. The two sums were included in the bill as enacted.

Sept. 18 -- Mitchell sent a telegram to Teamster President Hoffa asking him to report on what steps he had taken to remove from Teamster office union officials who were convicted felons, a requirement of S 1555.

Taft-Hartley Amendments

EXPLANATION OF FOUR CONTROVERSIAL LABOR ISSUES

The four big issues of the 1959 labor reform debate were the "no man's land" gap, secondary boycotts, hot cargo contracts and "blackmail" picketing. These were all proposed amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act. This fact sheet explains these four issues. (See story p. 156)

"No Man's Land"

A "no man's land" labor dispute was one the Federal Government refused to handle and the states were not allowed to handle because the Federal Government had exclusive jurisdiction. The situation arose because of the nature of Federal-state relationships.

Congress has power to regulate interstate commerce. In 1935, in the Wagner Act, it set up a National Labor Relations Board to regulate labor-management disputes involving businesses in interstate commerce. (The act was amended in 1947 by the Taft-Hartley Act.) The board was given power to conduct representation elections designating unions as the bargaining agent for employees at any business. It also was authorized to order an employer or a union to stop doing various things defined as "unfair labor practices" under the law. It could go to Federal courts to get injunctions to enforce its orders.

From its creation, the NLRB refused to handle some types of labor disputes over which Congress gave it jurisdiction, because they were too small to warrant the expense. For example, until a 1958 Supreme Court decision forced it to, the NLRB refused to handle any dispute between a hotel and its employees. In other industries, the board refused to handle any cases involving firms doing less than a specified dollar volume of business annually. This meant all non-qualifying businesses and unions had no recourse to the NLRB against illegal practices.

To meet this situation, state labor relations agencies and state courts began to assume jurisdiction over cases excluded by the NLRB. But in 1957, in a landmark decision in the Guss v. Utah case, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that state agencies or courts could not handle the cases excluded by the NLRB. The Court said Congress had preempted the labor-management relations field when it involved business in interstate commerce; regardless of the fact that the NLRB refused to handle certain cases, the states could not take over.

This left unions and employers in a jurisdictional "no man's land," with no recourse to any state or Federal agency against unfair labor practices.

The situation worked this way in practice: Suppose a small Florida hotel had a contract with a waiters' union. The hotel qualified as a business doing interstate commerce or affecting interstate commerce, but it was not doing enough business annually ($500,000) for the NLRB to agree to handle the case. The hotel owner decided he wanted to break the union, and he fired its three officers. Under the Taft-Hartley Act, firing an employee for union activities was an unfair labor practice. But the union could not go to the NLRB and ask it to order the fired man rehired, because the case was too small for the NLRB. Nor could the union go to the Florida state government, because the state was barred from handling the case. In effect, the three fired men had no legal recourse and the hotel owner was able to break the law with impunity.

Extent of "No Man's Land" -- According to the NLRB and AFL-CIO, businesses trapped in the "no man's land" gap covered several million workers (no exact estimate was ever made), chiefly in the retail, hotel, restaurant, service and laundry industries. Under NLRB 1959 standards, retail concerns had to do a half million dollars gross volume of annual business to qualify for NLRB handling; non-retail firms had to do $50,000 annual business outside the state; public utilities and transit systems a quarter million gross volume annually; taxicabs a half million; hotels a half million; radio, television, telegraph and telephone firms $100,000 annual gross volume; and newspapers, $200,000 gross volume.

Debate -- President Eisenhower in his 1959 labor message requested that states be given power to assume jurisdiction over any labor dispute the NLRB refused to handle. He argued that the businesses involved were small and primarily local in character.

Unions, almost without exception, opposed this plan. They said that since state labor laws were not uniform, unions would be subjected to a variety of conflicting regulations and requirements. They also feared letting state courts, with wide injunctive powers, handle labor cases; Federal court injunctive power in labor disputes was much more limited. The unions favored expanding the NLRB and making it handle all cases in interstate commerce.

Final Provision -- The final version of the labor bill, as cleared for the President, followed his proposal: state labor agencies and state courts were permitted to take jurisdiction over "no man's land" cases and apply state law. A provision added in conference barred the NLRB from expanding the categories of cases it refused to handle. In the future, it could not refuse to handle any case it would have handled as of Aug. 1, 1959.

Secondary Boycotts

Secondary boycotts were long a sore point with both labor and management. Unions wanted Taft-Hartley prohibitions against secondary boycotts repealed; business wanted them extended.

The Taft-Hartley Act made it an unfair labor practice for a union to induce employees to strike or stop work with the aim of getting their employer to cease doing business with another firm with which the real dispute existed. Following are two hypothetical examples of the most common types of illegal secondary boycotts:

A. The workers at the Ace Paper Co. were striking for higher wages. The leaders of the Ace Paper union paid a visit to the plant of the Eagle Corrugated Box Co., which bought all its paper supplies from Ace. They asked the workers at Eagle to refuse to make boxes with the paper purchased from Ace, or, alternatively, to strike against Eagle, in sympathy with the Ace strike. This was an illegal secondary boycott because the union (at Ace) was inducing the employees of a secondary employer (Eagle) to stop work in order to prevent Eagle from doing business with another firm (Ace).

B. The workers at Ace Paper Co. were striking for higher wages. Leaders of the union at Eagle Corrugated Box Co., with no prompting from the union at Ace, called a strike or a work stoppage to get Eagle to stop doing business with Ace. This too was an illegal secondary boycott, because the Eagle union was inducing its own members to stop work in order to pressure their employer (Eagle) to stop doing business with Ace.

In the first case cited above, the union at Ace was guilty of a secondary boycott. In the second case, the union at Eagle was guilty. In either case, the owner of Eagle was the victim, and he could ask the NLRB to get an injunction ordering the strike at Eagle stopped.

Under the Taft-Hartley Act, the fact that it was a union who induced the Eagle workers to stop working was all-important. If, with no inducement from any union, the Eagle workers voluntarily refused to handle paper coming from Ace, no secondary boycott existed.

The chief argument for enactment of the Taft-Hartley ban on secondary boycotts was that they could destroy the business of an innocent bystander in no way responsible for the labor trouble at the primary struck plant. In the situation outlined above, the Eagle Co., even though it possibly paid the highest wages in the corrugated box industry and had excellent relations with its employees, would be subject to these damaging consequences: its supply of paper -- possibly irreplaceable -- would be cut off; its production would be stopped because its workers refused to work; it could not fill orders and might lose them permanently; it could gain a bad name in the community as the site of "labor trouble." At the very least, it would be likely to lose money.

Unions denied that an employer who continued to do business with a struck firm was necessarily an innocent party. By doing business with a struck firm, a secondary business helped the former economically and made it more able to fight the strike. If one firm defeated a union and ran a sweatshop, it might lead to similar incidents throughout a whole industry and eventually depress the living standards of all the workers in the industry. In addition, the Taft-Hartley Act ban on secondary boycotts, the unions said, prevented a union from striking in order to get its employer to stop subcontracting work to a substandard sweatshop (this would constitute striking to get an employer to cease doing business with another firm).

1959 Issues -- During the 1959 labor debate, four issues involving secondary boycott law were in controversy.

1. Direct Appeals to an Employer. The Taft-Hartley Act made it an unfair labor practice for a union to induce the employees of any firm to strike or stop working with the aim of getting the firm to stop dealing with another firm. But anyone not defined as an "employee" under the act was not included. This meant that the union was permitted to ask supervisory personnel -- not defined as employees under the act -- to stop working, which might have serious consequences for the secondary firm involved. More important, however, it meant that there was nothing to prevent the union from going directly to the employer and asking him to stop doing business with another firm, or even threatening him. It was perfectly legal for a union leader working for Smith to say to him: "Look, the workers at Jones' factory are on strike. Conditions there are a disgrace. You buy a lot of goods from him. Why don't you cancel your orders and let Jones know you'll put them in again when he improves labor conditions at his factory and settles the strike." Under Taft-Hartley, this was permitted as long as the union leader didn't call a strike on Smith or get Smith's workers to stop working. And there was nothing to prevent Smith from complying if he wished, even if the union leader had hinted or stated that if Smith didn't comply, he might be in for trouble.

President Eisenhower asked that this so-called loophole be closed, by making it an unfair labor practice to coerce or threaten an employer directly in order to get him to stop doing business with another firm. As worded, the Administration proposal would not have affected simple persuasion or a request of an employer to stop doing business with another firm; this would still have been permitted. Smith's union could ask him to stop dealing with Jones; it could not threaten him with trouble if he refused. Unions charged, however, that the line between persuasion and coercion was so subject to misinterpretation that the net effect of the proposal would probably be to outlaw persuasion also.

2. Inducement of Concerted Activity. The Taft-Hartley wording required that to be guilty of a secondary boycott, a union had to induce workers to strike or to concerted refusal to work or handle specified goods. It was later argued that this created an escape hatch, since inducement of a single key employee to stop working might shut down a plant or curtail operations severely (a key machinist or mechanic, for example). To be concerted, the refusal to work would have to involve at least two persons; and inducement of a single worker was therefore not banned as a secondary boycott. The Administration asked that this so-called loophole be closed, even though only very few situations arose under it.

3. Extension of Coverage. The Taft-Hartley Act as a whole did not apply to agricultural workers, local government employees or to railway and airline workers and others governed by the Railway Labor Act -- several million workers in all. The Administration requested that these workers be brought under the secondary boycott and picketing provisions (see below). Although there was some protest from unions that workers not enjoying the facilities and safeguards of the NLRB and its procedures should not be subjected to the boycott and picketing provisions, the protest was relatively mild. Secondary boycotts do not ordinarily play a major part in those industries.

4. Common Site Picketing. In the building industry, a number of different firms frequently work together at the same construction site, sometimes joined in an association called a joint venture. In its 1949 Denver Building Trades decision, later upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court, the NLRB ruled that picketing of one employer at a common work site necessarily also constituted picketing of the other employers at the same site, and was a prohibited secondary boycott against the latter. The President and the unions supported a Taft-Hartley amendment to exempt common-site picketing from classification as a secondary boycott. The building industry opposed the provision on grounds the effect of common-site picketing could be to close down an entire job.

Extent of Boycott Practices -- Of all the secondary boycott loophole situations listed above, only common-site picketing and direct pressure on employers figured largely in labor-management relations. In 1959 there were about 3.5 million workers in building trades unions -- carpenters, electric workers, hod carriers, marble and terrazzo workers and sheet metal workers -- who fell under the Taft-Hartley Act ban on picketing at common work sites. The practice of requesting or pressuring an employer directly to stop doing business with another firm was not confined to any one industry, although it was probably most widespread in the garment industry, with about a million workers in the U.S. -- 800,000 in unions, chiefly the Amalgamated Clothing Workers (275,000) and the International Ladies Garment Workers (375,000), both AFL-CIO affiliates. There, it was used to prevent employers from dealing with sweatshops.

Final Provisions-- The final version of the bill closed all three secondary boycott "loopholes." It made it illegal for a union to induce or try to induce supervisors or a single worker to stop work in order to get their employer to stop dealing with another firm; it made it illegal for a union to coerce or threaten (but not to ask or persuade) an employer in order to get him to stop dealing with another firm; and it brought rail, farm, airline and local government workers under the secondary boycott and picketing provisions.

The request to permit common-site picketing by a construction union at a common work site was not included in the final bill. Conferees were advised it would violate the rule against new matter in a conference report.

Hot Cargo Contracts

The hot cargo contract was an outgrowth of the Taft-Hartley "loophole" that permitted a union to ask an employer not to do business with another employer. It was simply a provision in an ordinary contract between a union and an employer stating that the employees were not required to handle "unfair" goods (generally, goods emanating from or headed for a struck shop, a non-union shop or a sweatshop). Alternatively, or in addition, such a contract stated that the employer would not do business with an "unfair" firm and would not fire his workers for refusing to cross a picket line. Arguments over whether hot cargo contracts were fair and reasonable largely duplicated those on secondary boycotts.

In 1958, in the Sands Door and Plywood case, the U.S. Supreme Court held that while hot cargo contracts were legal under the Taft-Hartley Act, because the employer signed them voluntarily, a union could not strike to enforce a hot cargo contract. If an employer who had signed a hot cargo contract later decided to ignore it, and do business with a firm the union labelled unfair, the union could not strike to enforce the contract.

During the labor bill debate, those who favored outlawing hot cargo contracts argued that the Sands Door decision did not sufficiently guarantee that a union would not strike to compel compliance, or to get a hot cargo provision put in the contract. If an employer negotiating a contract refused to accept a hot cargo provision, the union could simply raise its wage demands unreasonably and strike to back them up. A wise employer would be forced to propose a compromise under which he accepted the hot cargo provision and the union lowered its wage demand and stopped the strike.

Incidence of Hot Cargo Agreements -- Hot cargo contracts were widespread in the garment and transportation industries. In the garment industry, where work on different parts of one garment may be subcontracted to several different firms by a jobber, the hot cargo contracts took the form of a guarantee by the jobber that he would not subcontract to a non-union shop. Reps. Phil M. Landrum (D Ga.) and Robert P. Griffin (R Mich.), sponsors of the House labor bill, Aug. 13 said they did not mean to outlaw this kind of hot cargo agreement, because the making of a garment, even though its parts were made by different producers, was actually one production process.

In transportation, hot cargo contracts were signed chiefly between the International Brotherhood of Teamsters (1.6 million members) and trucking firms. Since truck transportation is vital to almost every industry in the Nation, these contracts had a wide effect.

Final Provisions -- The final version of the bill outlawed all existing or future hot cargo contract clauses under which an employer agreed in advance not to do business with an "unfair" or struck firm. Two exceptions were permitted. Garment makers were allowed to sign contracts agreeing not to subcontract parts of work on a single garment to unorganized shops; and construction firms were allowed to sign contracts agreeing not to subcontract work at a joint construction site to unorganized firms.

"Blackmail" Picketing

When President Eisenhower called for curbs on "blackmail" picketing, he was using the term to cover abuses connected with organizational, recognition and informational picketing. The NLRB and the courts have found it difficult to differentiate between them in practice.

Suppose, for a example, a union picketed an unorganized factory with signs saying, "Factory X unfair to labor -- pays substandard wages." This might be interpreted as aimed solely at informing the public of substandard conditions (informational picketing). If the union also distributed handbills to the factory's employees asking them to join the union, the picketing was probably organizational picketing. If in addition the union asked the factory owner to sign a contract with the union and to permit it to represent the employees, the picketing was recognition picketing, aimed at getting an employer to sign a contract.

Regardless of its purpose, however, the kind of picketing described above could have disastrous economic consequences for the factory. Seeing a picket line, the public might hold the factory in opprobrium and refuse to buy its products; workers in unions with hot cargo provisions, permitting them to refuse to take goods into an "unfair" plant, might balk at crossing the picket line to pick up or deliver goods or finished products. In short, the factory could be ruined or severely hurt.

The kind of "blackmail" picketing that exercised the President was picketing, in a situation like the one described above, which continued even though the workers in the factory indicated they did not want to join the picketing union or be represented by it. They might indicate this in several ways: (1) The majority might refuse to join the picketing union; (2) They might reject the picketing union in a representation election; (3) They might already have chosen another union as their representative.

Under the Taft-Hartley Act, organizational and recognition picketing was not illegal if the picketing union had lost an NLRB election (where no other was involved) or could not get a majority of the employees to sign union cards; it could continue indefinitely. Nor was it illegal if the employer, without holding an NLRB representation election, had already recognized another union. (The Taft-Hartley Act permitted a firm to recognize a union without first holding an NLRB election.) The Taft-Hartley Act made organizational and recognition picketing illegal only if the employer had recognized another union following an NLRB certification election won by that union.

Some hypothetical examples of picketing "abuses" permitted by the Taft-Hartley Act:

A. Smith's factory was not organized. Union X came to Smith and demanded he sign a contract with it recognizing it as bargaining agent for his employees. Smith asked his employees whether they wanted to join Union X and they said no. Smith then refused the union's request and the union threw a picket line around the factory. When deliveries started falling off and Smith's business began to be disrupted, he decided he'd better sign. So he recognized Union X and agreed to a contract provision requiring all his employees to join the union within 30 days (a union-shop contract). Economic pressure had been exerted to force Smith to recognize a union both he and his employees didn't want, and to get Smith to compel his employees to join it.

B. The same situation existed but the union said it was merely trying to organize Smith's workers, not to gain recognition. Smith asked for an NLRB representation election and the union lost. The next day it was out continuing to picket to persuade the workers to join the union. Unless he agreed to recognize the union, Smith could not stop the picketing.

In 1957, in the Curtis case, the NLRB ruled that a union could not picket for recognition (this would have included organizational picketing the NLRB found actually to be aimed at recognition) unless at least 50 percent of the employees had signed union cards. This would have ended the kind of minority picketing indicated above. But the ruling was struck down by a U.S. Court of Appeals in 1958.

President's Requests -- President Eisenhower's labor requests were aimed at curbing minority picketing, where employees showed no or little interest in joining the union. He proposed that organizational and recognition picketing be banned if another union was recognized, whether through an NLRB election or not; if an NLRB election had been held in the past year and no union had been certified; and if the picketing had been going on a reasonable length of time and the employees had not indicated a desire to join the union.

The unions said examples of picketing abuses were exaggerated and cited these instances where unions would be hurt unfairly under the President's proposals: if an employer, to avoid organization by an honest union, voluntarily recognized a crooked union that agreed to give him a "sweetheart" contract, the honest union could not picket to advertise that fact; if workers rejected a crooked, or Communist-dominated union in an NLRB election, an honest union could not move in and picket to organize the firm. The unions also said it was absurd to make the right to picket to organize workers dependent on the requirement that they already be organized before the picketing started.

The last major picketing controversy in the labor debate involved "consumer boycott" picketing. Under the Taft-Hartley Act, a union was permited to picket a retail store to advertise the fact that it sold "unfair" or struck goods, provided such picketing was purely informational and did not become a secondary boycott, that is, did not have the effect of getting the retail store's employees to stop working or stop handling the alleged unfair goods. In his Aug. 6 labor speech, the President said he considered this "blackmail" picketing, since by discouraging consumers from entering the store, it could ruin the store's business. Unions said they should have the right to advertise peacefully in this manner and to promote "buy union" campaigns.

Incidence of Picketing-- According to the AFL-CIO, consumer boycott picketing was most common in the garment industry; organizational and informational picketing most common in the garment, textile, hotel and restaurant, laundry and retail industries, where it was used to advertise substandard conditions and persuade workers to join unions.

Final Provisions -- The final version of the bill contained these partial curbs on organizational and recognition picketing:

1. A union was prohibited from organizational or recognition picketing if another union had won an NLRB election, or if the employer had voluntarily recognized another union even without NLRB certification election.

2. A union was prohibited from organizational or recognition picketing if there had been an NLRB election within the preceding 12 months. This would prevent a union from picketing if it or another union had lost a certification election.

In either case, the employer could ask the NLRB to get it an injunction to stop the picketing. But if the picketing union charged the employer had done something illegal in recognizing the other union, or in influencing the outcome of the NLRB election in the preceding year, and the NLRB after preliminary investigation thought the union's charge was probably true, the injunction could not be issued. This would prevent an employer from financing and then recognizing a company-dominated union in order to prevent picketing by the picketing union; and it would prevent the employer from influencing the workers during the NLRB election in a number of illegal ways and then getting an injunction to stop further organizational picketing.

3. A union was prohibited from organizational and recognition picketing for longer than 30 days if by the end of that time it had not asked the NLRB to hold a certification election. In this case, however, if the union claimed its picketing was merely informational -- designed solely to inform the public of labor conditions in the picketed firm -- it could continue beyond 30 days, provided the picketing did not stop the firm's employees from working or prevent other workers from entering and leaving the firm with pickups and deliveries.

4. Consumer boycott picketing -- The bill outlawed consumer boycott picketing. But other publicity (handbills, for example) to inform the public that a retail store was handling struck goods was permitted, as long as it was truly informational in nature and did not cause the store's employees to stop working or other workers to refuse to pick up or deliver goods to the store.

Labor's Reaction

The AFL-CIO told CQ the Taft-Hartley changes enacted in 1959 would retard union organization of 10 million unorganized workers in the South (which has two million union members), particularly in such Southern industries as garments, textiles, hosiery, building trades, furniture, paper, chemical, retail and white collar industries. It would have similar effects on 16 million unorganized workers -- half white collar -- in the rest of the Nation, according to the AFL-CIO.

This would happen, according to labor spokesmen, by giving the state courts with wide injunction powers more control over labor matters ("no-man's land"); by permitting unrestrained transactions with struck firms (secondary boycott and hot cargo contract bans); and, mainly, by making organization of new plants more difficult, if not impossible (organizational, recognition and informational picketing).

CONGRESS ADMITS HAWAII AS 50th STATE

HR 4221 -- Reported Feb. 11, 1959 by House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee (H Rept 32).

S 50 -- Reported March 5 by Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee (S Rept 80).

- Passed by the Senate March 11 by a 76-15 roll-call vote. (See p. 402)
- Passed by the House March 12 by a 323-89 roll call. (See p. 350)

PL 86-3 -- Signed into law March 18.

A statehood bill for Hawaii took its place high on the agenda of the 86th Congress and, although the standard arguments pro and con were aired once more, the legislative roadblocks to its passage were successfully and quickly cleared in 1959.

Hawaii Delegate John Burns (D) Jan. 7, 1959 introduced a statehood bill (HR 50) in the House. In due course, the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee had 20 Hawaiian statehood bills under consideration. A bill (S 50) similar to HR 50 was introduced in the Senate Jan. 9 by Chairman James E. Murray (D Mont.) of the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee. Fifty-one other Senators -- 36 Democrats and 15 Republicans -- joined Murray in sponsoring the bill.

In a drive to pass statehood legislation before the annual Easter recess, the House and Senate considered their respective bills simultaneously. The Senate acted first and passed S 50 March 11. The House, by-passing its own bill to hasten final action, approved the Senate version the next day. House passage cleared the bill for President Eisenhower's signature, which was given the following week.

Hawaiian voters June 27 voted to approve the conditions spelled out in the bill and elected their Senators and Representative July 28. (See box) On Aug. 21 President Eisenhower issued a proclamation formally making Hawaii the 50th state in the Union.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, S 50:

Confirmed and ratified the constitution of the state of Hawaii, adopted Nov. 7, 1950, as being in conformity with the Constitution of the United States.

Provided that the area in the new state include "all the islands, appurtenant reefs and territorial waters included in the territory," except Palmyra Island.

Granted to the new state lands and other property held by the territory along with the public lands and property held by the U.S. at the time of admission, but permitted Congress or the President, within the five-year period following admission of the state, to set aside for the U.S. any public lands. (Lands retained under this provision may be returned to the state if, at the end of five years, the President deems they are no longer needed by the Federal Government.)

Created a trust of public lands granted to the state and directed that any proceeds derived from them go for the support of non-sectarian public schools or other public improvements.

Required the state of Hawaii to adopt as part of its constitution the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act of 1920 and provided that its basic provisions should not be changed without the consent of the U.S. Congress.

Directed the President to certify to the Governor of Hawaii his approval of the bill and ordered that the Governor proclaim the date of the first election of state offices and state Congressional delegation.

Entitled the new state to elect two Senators and limited to one the number of Representatives in Congress Hawaii might have until after the 1960 census.

Raised House membership to 437 until after the 1960 census.

Extended the Federal judicial system and the Federal Reserve System to the new state.

Ordered that Hawaiians vote in a referendum at the next election on whether they consented to becoming a state under the conditions specified in the bill.

Background

For a history of Hawaiian statehood legislation and the pros and cons of the issue, see p. 176.

House

COMMITTEE -- Interior and Insular Affairs.

SUBCOMMITTEE REPORT -- The Territorial and Insular Affairs Subcommittee Jan. 19 issued a report to the full Committee on a Hawaii tour made by three of its members from Nov. 24 to Dec. 8, 1958. Subcommittee members making the trip were Chairman Leo W. O'Brien (D N.Y.) and Reps. B.F. Sisk (D Calif.) and E.Y. Berry (R S.D.).

The report said Hawaii was "entitled to statehood by every fair test and precedent." It said the people of Hawaii were willing to admit the existence of a Communist movement in the islands but that "they abhor it as we do and are meeting its evil challenges as capably as do people and Government in the 49 states." The group said

Hawaii Elections

In a primary election and three statehood referenda held June 27, Hawaii's voters selected their candidates for the general election and voted to accept statehood by a margin of about 17-1.

Elected to Congress July 28 were these candidates for Governor, Senator and Representative:

Governor -- William F. Quinn (R), 39, territorial governor, over John A. Burns (D), 50, Delegate to the House (1957-59).

Senator, Term A -- Hiram L. Fong (R), 51, Honolulu businessman, over Frank F. Fasi (D), 38, territorial senator.

Senator, Term B -- Oren E. Long (D), 70, territorial senator, over Wilfred C. Tsukiyama (R), 62, territorial senator.

Representative -- Daniel K. Inouye (D), 34, territorial senator, over Charles H. Silva (R), director of territorial institutions.

The Congressional delegation was sworn in Aug. 24. Fong became the senior Senator and won a six-year term; Long drew a four-year term. (For biographies of the three Hawaii Members, see the Political Background section of this volume.)

it had concentrated its inquiry on the effect of communism, since that problem had been a primary concern of many Hawaii statehood opponents. The Subcommittee report said "no present state of the Union is attempting to do the kind of effective anti-Communist work that is being done in the islands."

HEARINGS -- Jan. 26-28 on HR 50 and other statehood bills.

TESTIMONY -- Jan. 26 -- Secretary of Interior Fred A. Seaton called for early admission of Hawaii to the Union. Seaton said Hawaii was economically and politically qualified for statehood and, with approximately 635,000 residents, it surpassed six of the present states in population. He rejected arguments that Hawaii was susceptible to Communist control. He said "the people of Hawaii, time after time, have utterly rejected the Communist philosophy and every attempt of Communists to influence their government." The admission of Alaska as a state, Seaton said, "provides an excellent rebuttal" to the argument of noncontiguity. He said the United States needed "the participation of Hawaiians in our counsels, and their advice and experience in dealing with peoples of the Orient."

Rep. John W. McCormack (D Mass.), House majority leader, urged Hawaii statehood and said he would "program the bill after it is reported for as early consideration by the House as possible."

Jan. 27 -- Rear Admiral K. M. McManes, deputy chief of naval operations, acting as Defense Department spokesman, said all the bills under consideration "adequately safeguard the needs of the (military) services."

The State Department, in a formal statement to the Committee, endorsed Hawaii statehood, saying it "would serve to support the American foreign policy...."

Jan. 28 -- Rep. W.R. Poage (D Texas) said many Members of Congress would oppose Hawaii statehood because they feared admission of Hawaii was being pushed solely to provide two more votes in the Senate for civil rights bills. Poage said he had voted for statehood in the past and might do so again if he were convinced the statehood bill was a sincere move to extend local self government to all citizens on U.S. soil.

BILL REPORTED

ACTION -- The Committee Feb. 11 reported a clean bill (HR 4221 -- H Rept 32) after approving, by a 25-4 vote Feb. 4, an amended version of HR 50. Before approving the bill the Committee rejected, on a 6-21 vote, a motion by Rep. Walter Rogers (D Texas) to refer it to the Territorial Subcommittee for further hearings.

On the final vote approving the bill, Reps. Rogers, James A. Haley (D Fla.), J.T. Rutherford (D Texas) and J. Ernest Wharton (R N.Y.) voted against approval. The same four, plus Glenn C. Cunningham (R Neb.) and Donald F. McGinley (D Neb.), had voted in favor of Rogers' motion to recommit.

HR 4221 limited Hawaii to only one Member in the House of Representatives, despite the fact that its population, under normal apportionment procedures, would have entitled it to two Representatives. Rep. O'Brien, who introduced the revised bill, Jan. 30 said that 89 House Members currently represented more populous districts than Hawaii. This provision also appeared in the Senate bill.

The House Rules Committee, after holding hearings Feb. 26 and March 3, 5 and 10, March 10 granted HR 4221 an open rule (H Res 205).

Floor Action

The House March 11 voted on a 338-69 roll call to adopt the open rule providing for the bill's consideration. On the same day, the Senate passed its own statehood bill (S 50).

The House March 12, on a 323-89 roll-call vote, passed S 50 after unanimous consent was obtained to substitute the Senate-approved version for the House bill. Before passage, the House rejected by voice vote a motion by Rep. John R. Pillion (R N.Y.) to recommit the bill. (For voting, see chart p. 350)

AMENDMENT REJECTED

W.R. Poage (D Texas) -- Permit the state of Hawaii to include within its boundaries all lands of the U.S. located in the Pacific Ocean; March 12. Voice vote.

DEBATE -- March 11 -- Leo E. Allen (R Ill.) -- The Communist-controlled International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union controls "the life blood of Hawaii."

Pillion -- To grant Hawaii statehood would reduce the political power of every citizen and make Hawaii the first Communist-controlled state.

Edwin B. Dooley (R N.Y.) -- Hawaii can provide a "great bastion of democratic strength in the Pacific."

Leo W. O'Brien (D N.Y.), floor manager of the bill, -- The Communist apparatus in Hawaii is crippled and communism under control.

March 12 -- Francis E. Walter (D Pa.) -- Although Communist unions have a strong hold on Hawaii's economy, if Hawaii becomes a state there will be a complete change in the entire structure of the labor movement there.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Interior and Insular Affairs, Territorial and Insular Affairs Subcommittee.

HEARING -- Feb. 25 on S 50.

TESTIMONY -- Secretary Seaton, Subcommittee Member Frank Church (D Idaho) and Mike Masaoka, legislative representative of the Japanese-American Citizens League, supported the measure. Mrs. Margaret Hopkins Worrell, representing the Wheel of Progress, opposed the bill on the grounds that Hawaii was Communist-dominated.

ACTION -- Feb. 26 the Subcommittee approved, and March 5 the full Committee reported, S 50 (S Rept 80). The bill was essentially the same as HR 4221.

Floor Action

The Senate March 11 passed S 50 on a 76-15 roll-call vote after only a few hours debate. (For voting, see chart p. 402)

Earlier it rejected, by voice vote, a motion by Sen. Strom Thurmond (D S.C.) to recommit the bill to the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee with instructions that the Committee further investigate and report the bill back with provisions to make Hawaii a commonwealth.

DEBATE -- March 11 -- James E. Murray (D Mont.) -- "There is no merit" to the contention that the admission of Hawaii will open the door to the admission of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands or Guam. "Hawaii is the only area that meets the tests and conditions for statehood."

Henry M. Jackson (D Wash.), floor manager of the bill -- "No one can say Congress has behaved with mad haste in admitting Hawaii to the Union...."

Russell B. Long (D La.) -- It would be a serious error to "conclude that the problem of maintaining peace and good will between members of the Caucasian and Negro races applies to the situation in Hawaii."

James O. Eastland (D Miss.) -- Opposed the bill on the grounds that Hawaii's economy was controlled by Communists and that Hawaii was not on the continent.

Thurmond -- Opposed admitting Hawaii because of the difference between Western and Oriental cultures.

President Eisenhower Aug. 21 signed the proclamation formally admitting Hawaii into the Union as the 50th state. The President also signed an executive order designating the design and dimensions of the new 50-star flag that would become the Nation's official ensign on July 4, 1960.

FINAL ALASKA STATEHOOD ACTION

President Eisenhower Jan. 3, 1959 signed the official proclamation making Alaska a state and designating the design of the 49-star flag that July 4 became, for one year, the Nation's official ensign.

On March 25 Budget Director Maurice H. Stans submitted to Congress a draft of legislation to ease Alaska's transition to statehood. (1958 Almanac p. 281)

Congress June 12 completed action on the Alaska Omnibus Act (HR 7120), voting $1 million more for transitional grants than the President had requested.

PROVISIONS -- The new law (PL 86-70):

Made Alaska eligible to participate in several Federal grant-in-aid programs on a comparable basis with other states.

Ended several special Federal assistance programs which otherwise would have cost the Federal Government an estimated $25 million through fiscal 1964.

Authorized $28.5 million of "transitional grants" to Alaska through fiscal 1964 to meet the special costs of statehood.

Amended the Alaska Statehood Act to permit Alaska to assume jurisdiction over its fish and wildlife resources Jan. 1, 1960, rather than a year later.

ALASKA MINERAL LEASES

HR 6940 -- Reported by House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee (H Rept 699) July 22, 1959.

S 1855 -- Reported by Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee (S Rept 579) July 24.

HR 6940 -- Passed by the House, by voice vote, Aug. 3.

- Passed by the Senate, by voice vote, Aug. 4. (For roll-call vote on recommittal, see p. 431)
- Vetoed Aug. 17.

HR 6940 was intended to stimulate development of Alaskan oil and gas resources by liberalizing existing restrictions on the amount of land which one person or corporation could hold. President Eisenhower vetoed the bill, saying it would tend to produce an excessive concentration of control over potential resources rather than provide an inducement to develop those resources.

The bill, as sent to the President, amended the Mineral Leasing Act of 1920 to raise the limitation on Alaskan oil and gas leases or options for a single producer from 300,000 to 600,000 acres. The bill also eliminated the distinction between leased and optioned lands. Under existing law, 100,000 acres could be leased and 200,000 optioned.

The Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, in its report, said the legislation was needed to provide incentive for the production of oil and gas in Alaska. The report said Alaska's vast area, its lack of transportation facilities and restrictive climatic conditions raised the cost of mineral exploration and development to three times the average cost prevailing in other areas. The Committee said another advantage of the bill was that Alaska would receive "many millions of dollars in badly needed additional revenue," since Alaska received 90 percent of both rental and production revenue from Federal oil and gas leases.

The Senate, before passage of HR 6940, rejected, by a 32-55 roll-call vote, a motion by Sen. Gordon Allott (R Colo.) to recommit the bill. Allott said HR 6940 would discriminate against oil producers in other states whose limitation on mineral leases and options was 246,080 acres. (For voting, see chart p. 431)

President Eisenhower in his Aug. 17 veto message said "any additional concentration of ownership would, among other things, deter participation in...existing and successful programs which are designed to provide specific assurance of expenditure of funds for exploration and development work." He said Alaska's immediate revenue gains might in the long run be outweighed by revenue losses both to Alaska and the Federal Government.

MINING PROGRAM

The Senate and House in 1959 adopted a concurrent resolution (H Con Res 177) calling on the President to review the condition of the stricken United States mining industry and to formulate programs to stimulate employment and production in U.S. mines. The resolution was reported by the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee July 23, 1959 (H Rept 708) and adopted by voice vote of the House Aug. 26. The Senate Interior Committee reported it Sept. 8 (S Rept 968), and the Senate adopted it by voice vote Sept. 10. The resolution, for which the Budget Bureau said it saw no need, did not require the President's signature.

BACKGROUND -- Both in 1957 and 1958 the Eisenhower Administration proposed major mining legislation which Congress failed to approve. The 1957 plan provided for low, sliding-scale, import taxes on lead and zinc and limited assistance for minerals exploration. (1957 Almanac p. 654) The 1958 bill proposed a five-year price support program for lead, zinc, tungsten and acid-grade fluorspar, incentive payments for scarce strategic minerals and a one-year stockpile purchase plan for copper. It was passed by the Senate but rejected by the House. (1958 Almanac p. 321)

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- Sept. 10 -- The Senate, by voice vote, passed a bill (S 1537) similar to H Con Res 177. S 1537 declared it to be the policy of the Government to encourage a sound U.S. mining and minerals industry, to assure accumulation of mineral reserves and discovery of new domestic mineral resources, and to promote mining and metallurgical research. The bill authorized the Secretary of the Interior to seek these ends in administering various programs under his jurisdiction and to report annually to Congress, recommending legislation if he saw fit. The House did not act on it before Congress adjourned.

CQ Fact Sheet On Hawaii Statehood

BACKGROUND ON HAWAII STATEHOOD BILL

Considerably bolstered by the admission of Alaska to the Union in 1958, proponents of Hawaii statehood moved determinedly toward making the territory the 50th state in 1959. Their success came after 40 years of attempts to get Congressional passage of a statehood bill, during which, on five separate occasions, one of the houses passed statehood legislation.

Major opposition to statehood for Hawaii had come from Southern Members of Congress. Their primary arguments were that the territory is Communist-dominated and the majority of Hawaii's population is non-Caucasian.

But statehood was backed by both the Truman and Eisenhower Administrations and both the Democratic and Republican party platforms in 1956. Arguments favoring Hawaii statehood cited the moral obligation of the United States to grant statehood to a territory that served nearly 60 years' tutelage and the favorable foreign policy implications of showing Asian nations that the U.S. was welcoming a state with a predominantly Asian population.

Statehood Pros and Cons

These were the primary arguments for and against Hawaii statehood:

● COMMUNIST DOMINATION -- Opponents contended that the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, expelled from the CIO in 1950 for alleged Communist domination, wields tremendous political power in the islands and has a stranglehold on the Hawaiian economy. The ILWU, headed by Harry Bridges, is directed in Hawaii by Jack Hall, who in 1953 was convicted under the Smith Act for conspiring to overthrow violently the U.S. Government. Hall's conviction prompted a mass protest strike of 24,000 ILWU workers. The union has 25,000 members, 90 percent of whom work on the sugar and pineapple plantations. According to Rep. John R. Pillion (R N.Y.), an avid opponent of Hawaii statehood, "the unions in Hawaii controlled or infiltrated by Communists have a membership of about 30,000." Pillion spoke May 5, 1958, before the House, saying the "atmosphere in Hawaii is one of tolerance, appeasement and encouragement for communism." He added that Hawaii had not yet proved that it could eradicate communism and that statehood should be withheld until it had done so.

Proponents countered the Communist-domination argument by pointing to the measures taken by the Hawaiian legislature against possible tie-ups by the ILWU. They cited the "heroic" record of Hawaiian servicemen, many of whom were ILWU members, who served in World War II and more particularly in the Korean conflict when they fought against the Communist Chinese.

The Department of Justice in 1954 wrote the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, then holding hearings on Hawaii statehood: "The fact that it has been necessary to prosecute the leaders of the Communist conspiracy is...no more of an indication of the strength of the party in that area than the convictions of the Communist leaders in New York, Pittsburgh, Seattle and Los Angeles are indications of party control and dominance in those areas."

The number of Communists in Hawaii in 1946 was estimated to be 160 by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. In 1950, the House Un-American Activities Committee said there were 90, and the FBI in 1952 indicated there were 36 Communists in the islands.

Rep. Francis E. Walter (D Pa.), chairman of the House Un-American Activities Committee, Jan. 28 testified before the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee in favor of Hawaii statehood. He estimated there were currently "no more than 100" Communists in Hawaii.

● MINORITY POPULATION -- The reasoning behind the argument against admitting as a state an area whose population is primarily non-Caucasian was not as clearly detailed or as frequently voiced as others. In a 1953 speech opposing statehood for Hawaii, Rep. Howard W. Smith (D Va.), top Democrat on the Rules Committee, said he had "no objection to other races." "But," he said, "we have never brought a state into this Union where the Caucasian race was in the minority." In Feb. 26 testimony before his Rules Committee, Smith again cited the 77 percent non-Caucasian population of Hawaii as an argument against statehood.

The population of Hawaii is 85 percent native-born American citizens of diverse racial and national backgrounds. The 1950 census showed the population of Hawaii as 23 percent Caucasian, 37 percent Japanese, 17 percent Hawaiian and the remainder Filipino, Chinese, Korean, Puerto Rican and others.

Statehood supporters contended that despite the large Asian-blood population, the Hawaiian cultural and educational institutions stand on an equal footing with those of the existing states. Proponents also claimed that the admission of Hawaii would help to counter Communist propaganda based on U.S. race problems.

● REPRESENTATION -- Although the argument that Hawaii would be overrepresented in Congress had largely disappeared since Alaska was admitted, Hawaii statehood opponents claimed that the two Senators and two Representatives to which Hawaii would be entitled would mean overrepresentation. Underlying this argument was the unwillingness of Southern Congressmen to add additional Senate votes from an area unsympathetic to segregation and the feeling of others that their votes in Congress would be diluted.

Proponents simply pointed to the Constitution, which provides for Representatives elected on the basis of population and for two Senators from each state, regardless of its population. Although in numbers Hawaii would be entitled to two Representatives, both House and Senate bills provided for only one until after the reapportionment following the 1960 census.

● CONTIGUITY -- Another argument that lost much of its strength after the admission of Alaska was that of non-contiguity. Opponents felt, however, that Hawaii is too far distant to be successfully integrated into the Union.

Statehood Lobbying

The Hawaii legislature in 1947 created a bi-partisan Hawaii Statehood Commission and authorized the Governor, then Samuel Wilder King (R), to appoint the nine-member group. The commission was supported with public funds and maintained an office in Washington since 1947. Jan Jabulka, a Republican, served as the commission's Washington representative since 1951.

In addition to the official statehood commission, Hawaii's Democratic non-voting Delegate, John A. Burns was in a good position to maintain close contact with Members of Congress. Burns told Congressional Quarterly that Hawaii's citizens themselves never before were as united behind statehood. He predicted the plebiscite required by statehood bills would be approved 10-1.

Other lobbying for statehood in 1959 was carried on by individual Hawaiian businessmen who visited Washington to, as Burns put it, "talk with their friends."

Moves Toward Statehood

In 1840 Hawaii became an independent constitutional monarchy. Thirteen years later King Kamehameha III negotiated with the United States a treaty providing for Hawaii's admission as a state. The treaty, providing for the annexation of Hawaii as a state "as soon as it can be done in consistency with the principles and requirements of the Federal Constitution," was drafted but the king died before he could sign it. His successor let the negotiations lapse.

The first concrete bond with the U.S. was effected with the signing of the Reciprocity Treaty in 1876, under which the U.S. agreed to admit Hawaiian sugar duty free and Hawaii agreed to make no territorial concessions to any foreign power. Shortly thereafter, Hawaii gave the U.S. exclusive rights to use Pearl Harbor as a naval station.

Hawaii's independent monarchy was ended with the overthrow of Queen Liliuokalini in 1893. The newly constituted government, with Sanford B. Dole as president, was republican in form. The Republic of Hawaii immediately began negotiations with the U.S. which resulted in a treaty under which Hawaii was "incorporated with the U.S. as an integral part thereof."

In 1900 Hawaii was given the political status of an incorporated territory and its new constitution, the Hawaiian Organic Act, approved by Congress. In 1903 the legislature of the territory petitioned Congress to pass an act enabling the territory to adopt a state constitution as a first step toward admission into the Union. Similar petitions were submitted in almost every succeeding session of the territory's legislature.

In 1939 the Hawaii legislature passed an act providing that a statehood plebiscite be held at the Nov. 5, 1940, general election. The plebiscite vote was 2-1 in favor of statehood. Before further action could be taken, however, Japan bombed Pearl Harbor and statehood was shelved for the duration of World War II.

The Hawaii legislature in 1949 enacted a bill authorizing a constitutional convention. The constitution was drafted and at the Nov. 7, 1950, general election, Hawaiians approved it by a nearly 3-1 margin.

Congressional Action

The question of annexation was placed before the U.S. Congress for the first time in 1852 by Rep. J.W. McCorkle (D Calif.). Del. Kuhio Kalanianaole (R 1903-22) in 1919 introduced the first of the long series of bills for Hawaii statehood. In support of his statehood measure, Del. Samuel Wilder King (R 1935-43) in 1935 succeeded in getting the House Territories Committee to appoint a Subcommittee to visit the islands and investigate statehood.

In all, 22 investigations of Hawaii statehood have been held since 1935, seven of which were conducted in Hawaii itself.

In 1937 Congress appointed a joint committee to study the statehood question. The joint committee recommended a plebiscite of the Hawaiian electorate.

Congressional legislative action on Hawaii statehood:

1947 -- The House for the first time passed a bill providing for Hawaii statehood by a 195-133 roll-call vote (D 54-77; R 141-56).

1948 -- A resolution to discharge the Hawaii statehood bill from the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee was defeated on the Senate floor by a 20-51 vote (D 6-24; R 14-27).

1949 -- The House Public Lands Committee favorably reported a Hawaii statehood bill to the floor, but no further action was taken on it.

1950 -- The House passed the Hawaii statehood bill by a 261-111 roll-call vote (D 140-79; R 120-32). The Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee reported the bill to the floor, but it did not come up for a vote.

1951 -- The Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee reported a bill, but no further action was taken.

1953 -- The House passed the Hawaii statehood bill by a 274-138 roll-call vote (D 97-100; R 177-37).

1954 -- The Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee voted to combine an Alaska statehood bill with a Hawaii one, but later reversed itself and reported the bills separately. The Senate agreed to an amendment to combine the two bills by a 46-43 roll-call vote (D 42-2; R 3-41). The Senate rejected an amendment, by a 24-60 (D 20-22; R 4-37) vote, to grant commonwealth status to Alaska and Hawaii. It also rejected an amendment, by a 26-59 (D 23-19; R 3-39) vote, to have the inhabitants of the territories vote whether they wanted statehood or commonwealth status.

The Senate later amended the House-passed Hawaii statehood bill of 1953 by tying Alaska to it. It passed the combined bill 57-28 (D 23-19; R 33-9). House Rules Committee refused to hold a conference to resolve differences in the House and Senate versions, thus killing the bill.

1955 -- The House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee approved a joint Alaska-Hawaii admission bill, but the House recommitted it 218-170 (D 105-107; R 113-63).

1957 -- The Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee reported a Hawaii statehood bill (S 50 -- (S Rept 1164) to the floor, but no further action was taken.

1958 -- The House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee reported a Hawaii statehood bill (HR 49 -- H Rept 2700) Aug. 23. The 85th Congress adjourned Aug. 24. (1958 Almanac p. 285)

1959 -- Statehood legislation went all the way through Congress in a relatively short time, with passage of S 50 by both houses by March 12. Hawaii officially became a state Aug. 21 and the new state's Congressional delegation was sworn in Aug. 24.

CONGRESS AUTHORIZES $3,556,200,000 FOR MUTUAL SECURITY

HR 7500 -- Reported by House Foreign Affairs Committee June 5, 1959 (H Rept 440).

• Passed, amended, by the House June 18, by a 271-142 roll-call vote. (See p. 370)

S 1451 -- Reported by Senate Foreign Relations Committee June 22 (S Rept 412).

HR 7500 -- Passed, with amendments, by the Senate July 8, by a 56-26 roll-call vote. (See p. 424)

• Conference report (H Rept 695) agreed to July 22 by a 258-153 House roll-call vote and by voice vote of the Senate. (See p. 378)

P. L. 86-108 -- Signed into law July 24.

The Mutual Security Act of 1959 authorized appropriations of $3,556,200,000 for foreign aid in fiscal 1960. An additional $20,595,000 already was authorized for fiscal 1960 by previous laws. Congress subsequently appropriated $3,225,813,000 for the program. (See following story) President Eisenhower had requested $3,929,995,000, including the previous authorizations.

Increasing emphasis on economic rather than military aid marked Congressional consideration of the 1959 authorization bill. As finally enacted, the measure reflected in part reform proposals offered by Sens. J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.), Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) and others, as well as some recommendations of the President's Special Committee to Study the Military Assistance Program (Draper Committee).

Major policy changes included a shift of military aid to the defense budget, starting in fiscal 1961, and a request that the President submit to Congress a plan for progressive reduction of all bilateral grant assistance. A Fulbright proposal to expand the Development Loan Fund and give it a long-term authorization directly from the Treasury became embroiled in a dispute over "backdoor spending" and a compromise was approved, authorizing direct appropriations of $700 million for the DLF in fiscal 1960 and $1.1 billion in fiscal 1961.

The following chart shows the history of the fiscal 1960 foreign aid bill. The figures under the heading "Authorized by PL 86-108" are the major dollar provisions in the 1959 Mutual Security Act (HR 7500). Figures in parentheses represent sums authorized in previous years for fiscal 1960.

*Does not include $500 million subsequently requested for the Development Loan Fund, to be appropriated in fiscal 1960 but not to be spent until fiscal 1961. (See p. 191)

In addition to authorizing $3,556,200,000 for fiscal 1960, the Mutual Security Act of 1959:

Authorized $1.1 billion in fiscal 1961 for the Development Loan Fund.

Provided that, in fiscal years 1961 and 1962, military assistance appropriations be included in the Defense Department budget and authorized in those years "such funds as may be necessary" for military aid.

Provided that, beginning in fiscal 1961, military assistance programs be budgeted so as to come into competition for financial support with other activities and programs of the Defense Department.

Created a new office of Inspector General and Comptroller in the State Department to take major responsibility for audits and financial control of the program, made his records available to the General Accounting Office and Congress and authorized him to consult with the Secretary of Defense on military assistance matters.

Directed the President, in making fiscal 1961 requests for the program, to submit a detailed plan for progressive reduction of all bilateral grant assistance.

Limited to $67 million the amount of military assistance for Latin American countries.

Tightened standards for military assistance to Latin America and to underdeveloped countries.

Permitted the U.S. ambassador in a country receiving military assistance to make sure the recommendations were "coordinated with political and economic considerations."

Strengthened the Secretary of State's authority over the program by providing for his "continuous supervision and general direction."

Required that overseas construction contracts be made by competitive bidding "to the extent practicable," except contracts financed with loans from the DLF.

Increased from $500 million to $1 billion the authority of the Investment Guaranty Fund and limited the guarantees to projects in underdeveloped countries after Jan. 1, 1960.

Provided that foreign currencies derived from repayment of loans that were in excess of the needs of the Fulbright educational exchange program might be sold to other U.S. agencies for payment of their obligations abroad; and required that the amounts of foreign currency repayments to be credited to the DLF be specified in appropriation acts.

Required annual studies of the role of private enterprise in foreign policy and of the U.S. balance of trade and provided that the State Department and other agencies study methods to strengthen the economies of free nations.

Required the President to make public all information on the Mutual Security Program that was not incompatible with the national security.

Provided that the President might suspend aid to any country that he determined had nationalized or expropriated property of U.S. citizens if he was not satisfied with the offending government's corrective actions under international law.

Directed the Secretary of State to submit to Congress plans for an East-West cultural exchange center in Hawaii

Earmarked $10 million from the Contingency Fund for U.S. participation in the World Refugee Year.

The Mutual Security Program requires a new authorization, as well as an appropriation, every year. Congress invariably authorizes less than is requested, then appropriates less than it authorizes.

Although Administration requests and Congressional appropriations have fluctuated somewhat over the years, actual expenditures under the Mutual Security Program, as well as the size of the unexpended balance of available funds, have dropped steadily since 1953. The following table shows, for the fiscal years 1953 through 1959, the Executive Branch appropriation request, actual appropriations adjusted for transfers and reimbursements, expenditures, and the unexpended balance ("pipeline") at the close of the fiscal year.

President's Fiscal 1960 Proposals

In a special message to Congress March 13, asking $3.9 billion for the Mutual Security Program, President Eisenhower said his request "is in the same pattern and has the same component parts" as the program enacted in 1958. (For text of message, see p. 655)

The program was broken down as follows:

- Military Assistance: The President asked for $1.6 billion (41 percent of the total) as the "minimum figure necessary to prevent serious deterioration of our collective defense system." In 1958, when he asked for $1.8 billion, Congress first authorized $1.6 billion, then appropriated $1.5 billion.
- Defense Support: For this form of economic aid to 12 nations whose "burden of defense vastly exceeds their limited resources," he asked $835 million -- the same sum requested in 1958. Congress then authorized $810 million and appropriated $750 million.
- Special Assistance: The President asked for $272 million to meet special situations in West Berlin, Jordan, Tunisia and other areas "whose need is so great and whose freedom and stability are so important to us." Of the $212 million sought in 1958, Congress voted $200 million.
- Technical Cooperation: To support 6,000 American technicians abroad and train 10,000 "rising leaders" in underdeveloped countries, he asked for $179.5 million for the bilateral Point Four program plus $31.5 million as the U.S. contribution to international aid programs -- $16 million more than was asked in 1958 and $8 million more than Congress appropriated.
- Development Loan Fund: Created in 1957 to make long-term loans for economic development, the DLF was given $300 million in 1957, $400 million in 1958, and, in a supplemental bill approved May 14, an additional $150 million for the balance of fiscal 1959. For fiscal 1960, the President asked for $700 million, compared to $625 million requested in 1958 and a total of $550 million finally appropriated. (For supplemental, see p. 344)
- Contingency Fund: To cover needs "which cannot be foreseen at all or with sufficient clarity to program in advance," the President again asked for $200 million. Congress agreed to $155 million in 1958.

Total appropriation requests, including more than $100 million for various special programs, came to $3,929,995,000. This included $20,595,000 which Congress had authorized in previous years. In 1958, when requests added up to $3,942,092,500, Congress authorized $3,675,592,500. Funds actually appropriated, including the supplemental $150 million approved May 14, 1959, came to a total of $3,448,092,500, or about 13 percent less than the President had requested.

Chairman J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, at the Administration's request, March 18 introduced its foreign aid bill (S 1451), but reserved the right to support amendments and said, "Survival requires adaptability and imagination, not rigidity -- the kind of rigidity evidenced by this bill."

House

COMMITTEE -- Foreign Affairs.

HEARINGS -- March 16-May 5 on President Eisenhower's mutual security requests.

TESTIMONY -- March 16 -- Acting Secretary of State Christian A. Herter said cuts would seriously cripple the aid program and might make necessary much larger appropriations and taxes to support an expanded U.S. military operation.

Under Secretary of State C. Douglas Dillon, in a prepared statement, said the "pipeline" of military assistance materials to U.S. allies had steadily decreased from a 1953 high of $8.5 billion to an expected level of $2.6 billion by July 1, 1959. He said the President's $1.6 billion military assistance request would "require a substantial reduction in future deliveries." Drying up of the pipeline made it more important than ever, he said, for the President to get the $200 million contingency fund he requested to meet unexpected demands.

Democratic Reps. Wayne L. Hays (Ohio) and John L. Pilcher (Ga.) protested when Chairman Thomas E. Morgan (D Pa.) ordered closed session testimony by Dillon. Hays threatened to "declassify the whole thing" through release of top-secret military assistance figures, and Pilcher left the hearing room in protest.

MORE MILITARY AID URGED

March 17 -- Dillon testified on the preliminary report, released earlier March 17, of the President's Special Committee to Study the Military Assistance Program (Draper Committee). The Draper group recommended an increased $2 billion military assistance program, with most of the increase to be earmarked for North Atlantic Treaty Organization countries. It also recommended raising the Development Loan Fund to $1 billion a year. The President April 29 notified Congress he would defer action on the Committee's recommended $400 million increase in military aid until 1960. (For summary of Draper Committee's activities and recommendations, see p. 189)

Dillon said the Draper Committee's report indicated "quite clearly that in its judgment the (aid) program is not excessive either in its military or economic components...."

March 18 -- In brief statements, Defense Secretary Neil H. McElroy and Gen. Nathan F. Twining, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, held that any mutual security cuts would kill hopes of modernizing and improving friendly forces receiving assistance.

March 19 -- In closed session testimony released April 4, McElroy disclosed his department was seeking $96.5 million for 1960 military aid to Latin America, compared to $54 million in fiscal 1959.

Herter said the U.S. planned to increase technical aid to Latin America by one-fourth.

April 7 -- Donald C. Stone, spokesman for the National Council of Churches, said military aid should be divorced from economic aid, with the latter and technical assistance granted on moral grounds.

April 9 -- Gen. Lauris Norstad, Supreme Allied Commander in Europe, urged approval of the full $3.9 billion request so that his "truly minimal" forces could make up for their small numbers with the best in weapons. He said the program was responsible for 64 percent of "certain critical categories of equipment" currently in NATO hands; 80 percent of NATO aircraft; and 33 percent of ship tonnage. He said 63,000 allied officers and men had received U.S. training under the program.

April 10, 14 -- Rear Adm. E.B. Grantham Jr., regional director of military foreign aid, said the "outlines of the Communist offensive in Africa" had emerged "with startling rapidity" in the past year and the West would have to demonstrate "in positive terms" the advantages of cooperation with the free world.

April 13 -- William S. Culbertson, speaking for the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S., recommended a $289 million cut in the program to avoid "lavish spending" and waste.

Robert A. Nathan of Americans for Democratic Action urged a Development Loan Fund increase, and Rabbi Maurice N. Eisendrath, speaking for the Synagogue Council of America, called for an expanded, long-range economic aid program.

April 16 -- Former New York Gov. W. Averell Harriman (D), who directed the Mutual Security Program in 1951-53, said foreign aid should be planned over a four- or five-year period. He said there were "a number of industrial countries who would follow our lead in an international approach" to investment in underdeveloped countries. While he generally supported the program, Harriman said a recent trip to India and Pakistan showed that U.S. military aid to Pakistan had set off an arms race between the two countries. He said the U.S. should concentrate on helping the two nations solve their outstanding problems, so that they might agree on a common defense program.

April 21 -- Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs Walter S. Robertson testified in support of the Administration's economic and military aid requests. He said U.S. policy should be based on the assumption that the "Communist regime in China is unlikely to be replaced in the foreseeable future."

April 22 -- Adm. Harry D. Felt, commander of the Pacific fleet, supported continued military and defense support aid to Korea, Japan, Formosa, the Philippines and Southeast Asian countries.

April 24 -- Assistant Secretary of State for European Affairs Livingston T. Merchant said the move to concentrate more on economic rather than military aid showed that Americans "are becoming increasingly aware of the diversified character of the Soviet challenge." But he warned against "assuming that military defenses are for that reason any less valuable."

April 27 -- John C. Lynn and Herbert E. Harris, representing the American Farm Bureau Federation, urged that defense support funds be cut $315 million below the President's request of $835 million and that military assistance funds be cut by $100 million. They recommended that the request for $700 million for the Development Loan Fund be trimmed to $500 million.

Ex-Rep. Andrew J. Biemiller (D Wis. 1945-47, 1949-51), AFL-CIO legislative director, urged that the DLF be placed on a "strong continuing basis," with at least $1 billion auhorized for fiscal 1960. He said the over-all Mutual Security Program should not be cut.

PRIVATE FIRMS HELPED

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- April 26 -- A study ordered by the Mutual Security Act of 1958, made by specialists in Federal agencies under International Cooperation Administration leadership, found that the economic development of other countries increased U.S. sales abroad in the long run. Purpose of the study was to discover the relation of the Mutual Security Program to American private enterprise and the U.S. economy in order to prevent any possible adverse effects. (1958 Almanac p. 184) The study said the purchase of U.S. goods by countries helped under the former Marshall Plan rose from less than $3 billion a year in 1950 to nearly $5 billion in 1958. It said holding down aid purchases would not increase production or employment in the U.S., where 500,000 persons were engaged in producing goods and services purchased by aid funds.

April 30 -- Dr. Henry M. Wriston, former president of Brown University, announced the formation of a citizens' group, the Committee to Strengthen the Frontiers of Freedom, to rally support for President Eisenhower's foreign aid program. Dr. Vannevar Bush, director of the Office of Research and Development during World War II, was named committee chairman.

TESTIMONY -- May 5 -- Former President Harry S. Truman supported mutual security but said that Congress should "keep these expenditures under constant scrutiny" in order to prevent abuses under the program. Truman urged Congress to increase the DLF authorization to more than $700 million and to put it on a long-term basis.

BILL REPORTED

ACTION -- The Committee June 5 reported a clean bill (HR 7500 -- H Rept 440) authorizing $3,642,600,000 in fiscal 1960 expenditures for the Mutual Security Program. The Committee made an over-all cut of $266,-800,000 in the Administration request, but it increased by $100 million -- to $800 million -- the President's $700 million budget for the Development Loan Fund.

As approved, the bill also made several revisions in the program to place emphasis on economic rather than military assistance. HR 7500 created a new post of "Inspector General and Comptroller" in the State Department to take major responsibility for audits and financial control of the program. He was given authority to deal with the Defense Department on military aid matters and would be directly responsible to an Under Secretary of State to be designated by the Secretary of State for the job. The majority report charged administrators of the program with inefficiency and wastefulness.

The 143-page report, in defending the Committee's cut of $160 million in the $1.6 billion requested for military aid, said, "The charge has been made that our arms and equipment have on occasion been used by the recipient nations for other than the purposes agreed upon."

A minority report, signed by Reps. J.L. Pilcher (D Ga.), Marguerite Stitt Church (R Ill.), E. Ross Adair (R Ind.) and Alvin M. Bentley (R Mich.), said HR 7500 represented "a further abdication of Congressional responsibility and control over the foreign aid program...." Additional views of William H. Meyer (D Vt.) said, "We cannot afford to profess a belief in high principles, democracy and the American way of life and at the same time support the opposites in any country." Reps. Frances P. Bolton (R Ohio) and Walter H. Judd (R Minn.), in other additional views, opposed cuts made in the President's proposals.

Floor Action

The House June 18 passed, by a 271-142 roll-call vote, an amended version of HR 7500 authorizing $3,542,-600,000 in fiscal 1960 funds for the Mutual Security Program. Before passage, the House rejected by voice vote a motion by Mrs. Church to recommit the bill to the Foreign Affairs Committee for further consideration. Debate on the measure began June 15 when the House adopted, by a 278-93 roll call, the rule (H Res 293) providing for its consideration. (For voting, see chart p. 370)

As passed by the House, the bill authorized $366,800,000 less than the President requested and shifted somewhat the program's traditional emphasis on military aid to economic assistance. The only cut voted on the House floor was a reduction of $100 million in the Development Loan Fund authorization. The amendment to cut the authorization back to $700 million, the amount the President asked, was accepted on a 164-86 teller vote.

The House adopted an amendment making all financial reports of the new Inspector General available to Congress and its "watchdog" agency, the General Accounting Office. The amendment was offered by Porter Hardy Jr. (D Va.), chairman of a Government Operations Subcommittee that for several years had investigated scandals in foreign aid operations in various countries.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, the funds authorized in HR 7500 were:

Military assistance	$1,440,000,000
Economic assistance
Defense support	750,000,000
Development Loan Fund	700,000,000
Technical assistance	179,500,000
Other programs	123,100,000
Special assistance	250,000,000
President's contingency fund	100,000,000
TOTAL	$3,542,600,000

The bill also:

Created a new office of Inspector General and Comptroller in the State Department to take major responsibility for audits and financial control of the program and made his records available to the General Accounting Office and Congress.

Required that future recommendations for defense support contain a detailed explanation, country by country, of the amount of military strength sought.

Required the U.S. ambassador in a country receiving military aid to "make sure the recommendations...are coordinated with political and economic considerations," and to attach his comments to the recommendations.

Set as standards for determining need for military assistance the needs to meet the danger of direct Communist armed aggression or infiltration or to meet agreements within collective defense arrangements.

Directed the President, in making fiscal 1961 requests for the program, to submit a detailed plan for progressive reduction of all bilateral grant assistance.

Provided that the use of foreign currencies received in repayment of loans be determined by Congress through appropriation bills.

Required that all overseas construction contracts be made by competitive bidding.

Abolished the International Development Advisory Board.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Alvin M. Bentley (R Mich.) -- Delete from the policy statement the word "abiding" in the section stating the U.S. has an abiding interest in helping people in underdeveloped countries; June 17. Standing vote, 64-54.

John W. McCormack (D Mass.) -- Amend the policy statement to assert U.S. interest in helping peoples of the world to gain "justice" as well as improved living standards; June 17. Voice.

Armistead I. Selden (D Ala.) -- Reduce from $800 million to $700 million the fiscal 1960 authorization for the Development Loan Fund; June 18. Teller, 164-86.

H.R. Gross (R Iowa) -- Abolish the International Development Advisory Board; June 18. Rejected, standing, 57-62; accepted,teller, 75-74.

J. Vaughan Gary (D Va.) -- Provide that the use of foreign currencies received in repayment of loans be determined by Congress through appropriation bills, rather than by the President; June 18. Voice.

Barratt O'Hara (D Ill.) -- Delete the section authorizing the Investment Guaranty Fund to insure against risks of insurrection and civil strife; June 18. Voice.

E. Ross Adair (R Ind.) -- Delete section giving the President authority to transfer up to 30 percent in military aid funds to non-military programs; June 18. Voice. (In effect, this retained the President's authority to transfer 10 percent of such funds.)

Lindley G. Beckworth (D Texas) -- Provide that all contracts under the bill be made through competitive bidding;June 18. Voice.

Porter Hardy Jr. (D Va.) -- Make all records and reports relating to the office of the Inspector General and Comptroller and to the International Cooperation Administration available to the GAO and to Congress for examination; June 18. Voice.

Paul G. Rogers (D Fla.) -- Direct the President,in making fiscal 1961 requests for the program, to submit a detailed program for progressive reduction of all bilateral grant assistance; June 18. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

John Dowdy (D Texas) -- Prohibit all appropriations under the Mutual Security Act of 1959 which would have the effect of increasing the public debt; June 17. Standing, 56-94.

John James Flynt Jr. (D Ga.) -- Prohibit any mutual security appropriations that would unbalance the Federal budget; June 17. Standing, 56-94.

H.R. Gross (R Iowa) -- Declare in the policy statement that the U.S. should have as little political connection with foreign nations as possible; June 17. Standing, 33-84.

Alvin M. Bentley (R Mich.) -- Reduce fiscal 1960 military assistance authorization from $1,440,000,000 to $1,300,000,000; June 17. Standing, 83-97, teller, 101-103.

Ross Bass (D Tenn.) -- Amend Bentley amendment to prohibit obligating any of the military aid authorization until the unexpended balance for that purpose was less than $500 million; June 17. Voice.

George S. McGovern (D S.D.) -- Amend Bentley amendment so as to cut military assistance to $1,240,-000,000; June 17. Standing, 87-107.

Charles O. Porter (D Ore.) -- Terminate military assistance to any American republic, except military personnel training; June 17. Standing, 1-105.

Porter -- Prohibit extension of military aid to the Republic of China so long as its armed forces number more than 200,000; June 17. Standing, 6-143.

Michael A. Feighan (D Ohio) -- Prohibit military assistance to Yugoslavia; June 17. Standing, 47-61.

Bentley -- Reduce defense support authorization from $750 million to $635 million; June 17. Standing, 29-78.

Bentley -- Delete from the bill the section authorizing the use of counterpart funds for educational purposes; June 17. Standing, 61-80.

Cleveland M. Bailey (D W.Va.) -- Delete the entire section dealing with the use of counterpart funds; June 17. Standing, 41-81.

John Dent (D Pa.) -- Prohibit loans from the Development Loan Fund for the construction or improvement of factories producing goods that, as imports to the U.S., compete with domestically produced goods; June 18. Teller, 79-170.

Bentley -- Reduce authorization for special assistance from $250,000,000 to $171,800,000; June 18. Standing, 40-101.

Leonard G. Wolf (D Iowa) -- Authorize the gift of up to $250 million worth of surplus food and fiber to the United Nations for distribution to needy nations; June 18. Standing, 47-96.

John D. Dingell (D Mich.) -- Amend Wolf amendment to prohibit products not available to needy in the U.S. from being shipped; June 18. Voice.

Harris B. McDowell Jr. (D Del.) -- Permit military assistance funds (under the 30 percent limit) to be transferred only to technical cooperation and special assistance; June 18. Voice.

Bentley -- Delete section providing that the President may waive conditions of completion of plans and cost estimates in connection with loans made by the Development Loan Fund; June 18. Standing, 43-81.

Gross -- Declare it U.S. policy to expect other UN member countries to take a "fair share" of support of the UN Emergency Force; June 18. Voice.

Porter -- Provide for terminating U.S. assistance that is misrepresented as to use or origin by foreign government officials; June 18. Standing, 3-131.

Richard H. Poff (R Va.) -- Terminate assistance to countries which reduce their income taxes; June 18. Voice.

J. Edward Roush (D Ind.) -- Require the ICA to submit a detailed budget presentation, country by country, of all funds requested; June 18. Standing, 47-111.

Gross -- Delete section increasing the insurance authority of the Investment Guaranty Fund from $500 million to $1 billion; June 18. Voice.

Porter -- Prohibit and set penalties for the giving of political tests to employees of ICA and the Inspector General's office; June 18. Standing, 7-129.

DEBATE -- June 17 -- Armistead I. Selden (D Ala.) -- With $800 million the Development Loan Fund would be in "danger of overcapitalization."

June 18 -- A.S.J. Carnahan (D Mo.) -- The Committee increased the item because of the shift in emphasis in the over-all program from military to economic and in order to help "get away from foreign aid by grants and shift to loans."

Thor C. Tollefson (R Wash.) -- "There is nothing in the hearings or in this debate...to justify this (the Committee's) increase in the budget request."

Senate

Increasing concern over the direction and guiding principles of the Mutual Security Program marked Senate consideration of the authorization bill in 1959. Two major lines of reform were suggested:

Sen. J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.), Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, first sounded the call for reform in a Senate speech April 24, proposing five amendments to the Mutual Security Act. Joining him as cosponsors were two Committee members regarded as potential rivals for the 1960 Democratic Presidential nomination -- Sens. Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.) and John F. Kennedy (Mass.).

"My colleagues and I," said Fulbright, "have been concerned that military considerations have played too great a part in the formulation of the program. This is not of course necessarily to say that the amounts requested for military assistance are too large, because modern weapons are very expensive. It is rather that the philosophy of the program is founded too much, we think, on the idea that the danger to the United States today is largely a military one, and that the threat from communism is largely a military threat. Many of us feel that in many parts of the world the most serious danger from communism cannot be met through military means. We are also of the opinion that there are serious problems for the United States arising from the economic and social revolutions in Asia and Africa which arise irrespective of communism and that there is a need today for a more adequate response on the part of the United States." To this end, Fulbright proposed:

1. A new statement of policy in the Mutual Security Act, declaring that Congress "perceives the identity of interest which exists between the people of the United States and the peoples of other lands who are striving to free themselves from foreign interference, to obtain or strengthen their national independence, to produce more goods and services and improve ways of living by methods which reflect popular will, and to establish responsible governments which cooperate with like-minded governments. The Congress declares it to be a primary objective and need of the United States to share these strivings by giving generously of our knowledge and substance to peoples willing to work energetically toward these ends."

2. A proviso that military aid to underdeveloped countries be programmed "according to the principle that economic development needs shall have first call on the resources of such countries." In justification, Fulbright cited Pakistan as a country which "has been burdened with a military effort so great that its economic development has been retarded and its relations with its neighbors poisoned."

3. An increase in capitalization of the Development Loan Fund to $1.5 billion a year for five years. Various estimates of "the need for capital flow into underdeveloped areas from all sources over and above present rates of investment," Fulbright said, "fall in the range of $2 billion to $5 billion annually," giving to his proposal "a firm basis in economic analysis."

4. An increase in the President's authority to transfer funds from one title to another, enabling him to shift up to 30 percent of military aid funds to non-military uses, at his discretion.

5. Specific authority for American ambassadors to "coordinate" military aid proposals with "political and economic considerations."

MANSFIELD'S PROPOSALS

A second approach to reform of the Mutual Security Program was suggested to the Senate May 15 by Sen. Mike Mansfield (D Mont.), Democratic Whip and a senior member of the Foreign Relations Committee. Summing up the doubts and misgivings of Congress (see next page), Mansfield warned that "time is running out on foreign aid." Stressing his support for technical assistance and the Development Loan Fund, he directed his fire at the military aid, defense support and special assistance programs, which together account for 70 percent of the funds.

"These are the areas of decay in foreign aid," said Mansfield. "These are the areas in which, over the years, a one-sided dependency has developed for which an end is not yet in sight. These are the areas in which the fissures of corruption have begun to appear. These are the areas of great waste and inefficiency. These are the areas of burgeoning hostility between the American people who must foot the bill and the peoples of the recipient nations who, sometimes, as distinct from their governments, see very little benefit from the hundreds of millions, the billions that have been poured into their lands." Mansfield then said he would offer amendments that would:

1. Abolish the International Cooperation Administration as a semiautonomous agency and transfer its functions to the Department of State. The Department of Defense would assume responsibility for military aid, under State Department policy direction.

2. Make public now-secret figures on the amount of military aid given to individual countries.

3. Require the Administration to work out detailed plans for the progressive reduction of all non-military grant aid to zero over a three-year period. The reduction, he said, could be achieved "by cutting excess military forces, and hence, the need for defense support, by a stepped-up effort to increase the productivity of the recipient nations, by shifting from grants to loans, by working out a coordinated aid program with other nations able to help, or by other means."

OUTCOME

Of Fulbright's five proposals, only one was incorporated without major change in the 1959 Mutual Security Act. This was the authorization for American ambassadors to "coordinate" military aid with "political and economic considerations." The policy statement proposed by Fulbright was included, but with one substantial change: The objective of "giving generously of our knowledge and substance" became in the final bill one of "providing assistance, with due regard for our other obligations." The proposal on programming of military aid to underdeveloped countries was reflected in a provision directing military assistance administrators to "encourage the use of foreign military forces in underdeveloped countries in the construction of public works and other activities helpful to economic development."

None of Mansfield's proposals was included in the final bill.

Hearings

COMMITTEE -- Foreign Relations.

HEARINGS -- May 4-25 on the Senate version of the Mutual Security Act of 1959 (S 1451).

TESTIMONY -- May 4 -- Under Secretary of State C. Douglas Dillon said "a stronger case can be made for increasing than decreasing" the program. Questioned on why the Administration had not proposed putting the Development Loan Fund on a long-term basis as proposed by Committee Chairman Fulbright, Dillon said another year was needed to see how the program fitted in with other similar loan operations. He said a longer-range DLF program would be requested for fiscal 1961.

May 6 -- Secretary of Defense Neil H. McElroy urged approval of the full $1.6 billion the President requested for military assistance. He emphasized the need for aid to NATO forces, for which $300 million for modern weapons was earmarked.

MANSFIELD EXPLAINS CONGRESSIONAL MISGIVINGS ON AID

The doubts and misgivings of Congress concerning the Mutual Security Program were described May 15 by Sen. Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) in these terms:

"Mr. President, it is the time of another foreign aid bill. Those of us who have been in Congress long enough have seen more than a decade of continuous organized programs of assistance. We have lived with four principal postwar aid agencies in succession -- the ECA, the MSA, the FOA, and now the ICA. (Economic Cooperation Administration, Mutual Security Agency, Foreign Operations Administration and International Cooperation Administration.) We have witnessed the annual level of appropriations go up, and we have witnessed it come down. We have watched the emphasis in these programs shift from economic aid during the days of the Marshall Plan, to military aid in subsequent years. If my perceptions are accurate, we are now at the beginning of a shift back to an era of economic emphasis.

"We have also observed a change in the principal focus of these programs, from Western Europe to the Far East and then the Middle East. Again, if my perceptions are accurate, the focus may now be shifting toward Africa and Latin America.

"It is common practice to say that we have put $60 billion or $70 billion into foreign aid since the close of World War II. I, myself, have used a round figure of that kind at times. In all honesty, however, I have used it as have others, as the roughest of measures. The fact is that the figure tells us very little, because it is a composite figure. Unless it is recognized as such, it is misleading.

"The $70 billion includes appropriations for many disparate undertakings. It includes outright grants and gifts, as well as loans on which we fully expect repayment with a good rate of interest.... Similarly, we list indiscriminately as foreign aid the cost of a squadron of fighter planes given to an unsteady government somewhere, and the cost of assigning a public health expert to a nation with a malaria problem. The effect of these actions on us and on others may be as different as night and day. The only thing they may really have in common is that they both cost us something.

"Having lumped these and a dozen other dissimilar undertakings together as the foreign aid program, we try to measure total effect in terms of success or failure. It cannot be done. It is like counting eggs and weighing sugar, adding them together, and stating the results in quarts.

"The simple fact is that some parts of foreign aid in certain circumstances have been beneficial to this Nation and helpful to other nations. The same parts in different circumstances, or other parts in the same circumstances, have not been helpful to others and have not been beneficial to us. But we shall never really know which is which, and what is what, so long as all the parts are hopelessly intermingled, as is now the case.

"For the total national effort which we label the 'foreign aid program,' or, more euphemistically, the Mutual Security Program, all that we can say is that we go on, year after year, doing a number of things abroad which we think have some connection, at least, with maintaining a decent image of the United States in the world, with safeguarding the Nation's security, and with advancing its interests. I use the phrase 'we think' because the only certainty in this entire business is that what we are doing requires money -- billions of dollars. Specifically, for the next fiscal year, the Administration asks $3.9 billion.

"Barring the unusual, I suspect that we shall act in this matter as we have acted in the past. We shall assume that the Administration has asked for too much money, as experience indicates that it invariably does; and this applies to both kinds of administration, Republican and Democratic. Therefore, we shall cut the amount requested, perhaps more deeply this year than in past years. The Administration will protest the size of the cut, however large or small it may be. One or the other house may be persuaded by the protest, and we shall restore a part of it. That is the pattern. That is what has been done year after year.

"Will the Senate really know whether the final amount appropriated is too much or too little or just right? Will the House? Indeed, will the Administration know? The fact is that no one will know because we do not have specific objectives, specific yardsticks against which to measure cost in any rational fashion. We have only generalizations....

"As I have already said, I have no doubt that foreign aid has done some good. Similarly, I have no doubt that it has done some harm. Whatever its impact, the fact is that there is hardly a Member of this body who is satisfied with this program as it now operates. Contrast the present general doubt and dissatisfaction with the broad acceptance and approval of the Marshall Plan a few years ago and the Point Four program of technical aid.

"Despite the doubt and dissatisfaction, we shall probably go along with foreign aid for another year. We shall do so because we are not prepared to dispute as nonessential what the President has labeled as essential to the Nation.

"But in all seriousness, Mr. President, I must ask, how much longer can we go on this way? The uneasiness with the foreign aid program which is evident in Congress is not a whim out of the blue. It is not political. It is not inexplicable. It is a reflection of a current of sentiment which is beginning to run very strongly through the Nation. The uneasiness is not over the concept of helping others. Nor do I believe that it represents a retreat from international realities and responsibilities. The uneasiness is over the way the concept of helping others and fulfilling our international responsibilities is being translated into action. It is an uneasiness over the administrative decadence with which foreign aid is now surrounded.

"I may be wrong, Mr. President, but I am persuaded that time is running out on foreign aid. We shall either begin to come to grips with the problems of this program during this session, or the next session may well see a tide of public reaction so strong that it will swamp the entire undertaking. It may well inundate both the good and the bad in foreign aid, the essential and the nonessential."

Committee member Frank Church (D Idaho) protested to McElroy the use of "the classification process" to prevent publication of country-by-country breakdowns of military aid. Sen. Wayne Morse (D Ore.) urged that military aid to Latin American countries "with dictators and totalitarian forms of government" be terminated in favor of economic assistance and a system of guaranteeing each nation against attack.

May 7-15 -- Administration officials and Averell Harriman testified on aspects of the program.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- May 12 -- The House Foreign Affairs Inter-American Affairs Subcommittee filed a report (H Rept 354) which recommended a gradual termination of U.S. arms aid to Latin America, and the substitution of a system permitting individual nations to buy arms needed for hemispheric defense. It also recommended study of a standing force to patrol situations threatening hemispheric peace, and a less cordial official attitude toward Latin American dictators. (A similar attitude was recommended by Dr. Milton Eisenhower, the President's brother, in a report released in January after a fact-finding trip, but he said any withdrawal of current U.S. programs in countries under dictatorship would "paralyze" foreign relations.)

TESTIMONY -- May 18 -- William H. Draper Jr., chairman of the Committee to Study the Military Assistance Program, said failure to provide the $400 million in additional arms aid recommended by his group "would involve an unacceptable risk to our own security." He said the President's foreign economic aid requests were "the minimum required," and that increases in such aid probably would be needed "in the years ahead."

MANSFIELD PLAN OPPOSED

May 20 -- Leonard J. Saccio, acting ICA director, said in closed session testimony made public by the Committee that Sen. Mansfield's May 15 proposal to halt all defense support and economic aid abroad, other than loans, within three years would: bring "the gravest peril to U.S. foreign policy objectives;" invite the Soviet bloc to "move forcefully into the vacuum with offers of economic aid;" threaten collapse of some countries heavily dependent on the aid; and undermine hopes of economic progress in many other countries.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- May 13 -- The House Foreign Affairs Committee made public Saccio's reply to April 7 criticism by the General Accounting Office of "serious deficiencies" in the aid program for Pakistan. Saccio said Comptroller General Joseph Campbell had ignored the economic and political facts of life in Pakistan, and, "by use of this refined criterion, the GAO is relieved of the unpleasant, difficult and continuing task" of making judgments on advancement of U.S. interests in an underdeveloped area.

TESTIMONY -- May 21 -- William C. Foster, a former Administrator of the Economic Cooperation Administration (1950-51) and a spokesman for the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S., said the Administration should use more "imagination and skill" in selling the foreign aid program to the American people. He recommended cuts totaling $289 million in Administration military and economic aid requests, and said the Chamber was disturbed by some of the "secrecy aspects" of military aid.

Walter Harnischfeger of Milwaukee, Wis., chairman of the Citizens Foreign Aid Committee, recommended gradual liquidation of foreign aid over a three-year period, and urged more private investments abroad.

Sen. Ernest Gruening (D Alaska) called for an end to "blank check" spending, and said the procedure should be "to require line item specific requests for every demanded expenditure."

May 22 -- Expansion of the Development Loan Fund, as proposed in April by Chairman J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.), received support from: Victor G. Reuther, for the United Automobile Workers; Bert Seidman, for the AFL-CIO; Wallace J. Campbell, for the Cooperative League, and Edward D. Hollander, for Americans for Democratic Action.

Cuts in foreign economic aid were asked by the American Farm Bureau Federation, but a National Farmers Union spokesman supported the Administration program and recommended expansion of technical aid.

May 25 -- Under Secretary of State C. Douglas Dillon, in closed session testimony released later by the Committee, said: the Administration strongly supported the principle of multi-year capitalization of the Development Loan Fund, as proposed by Fulbright, but had not yet decided how much would be needed yearly; he saw no objection to having a fund ceiling "of the general magnitude" of the Fulbright proposals ($1.5 billion yearly), but objected to any requirement to "commit such a figure each year -- or the full total in five years"; the fiscal agencies had "generally gone on record in favor of financing operations such as this through the appropriations process," and the State Department would recommend its own long-term capitalization program for the fund to the President later in the year.

Fulbright told newsmen after the hearing that Dillon's testimony was "equivocal," and that he was "going to write the President asking him to resolve these differences before the Committee begins voting on the bill." Fulbright said that without Presidential support, "the amendment cannot be adopted," and "without long-term Treasury financing the Development Loan Fund cannot function with any continuity or a real degree of success." Fulbright's proposal for by-passing the appropriations process stemmed in part from a belief that the House Appropriations Committee would continue to use a heavy hand in cutting annual budget requests for the DLF.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- May 28 -- Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) criticized the May 15 foreign aid proposals of Sen. Mike Mansfield (D Mont.). Javits said Mansfield's proposal to taper off economic assistance grants could "sound the death knell of the entire...program."

June 1 -- Mansfield introduced five amendments to the Senate's mutual security bill (S 1451) to implement his May 15 proposals.

PRESIDENT REJECTS FULBRIGHT PLAN

June 3 -- President Eisenhower at his press conference said he would not support Fulbright's proposal to grant Treasury Department borrowing authority to the DLF. The President said he did not "believe in borrowings for any purposes...in times of prosperity unless there is a great emergency facing us."

Fulbright said the President had advocated putting the DLF on a long-term basis in 1957, and that it was "very difficult to tell what his (the President's) premise is at any given time."

June 4 -- Mr. Eisenhower, in a letter to Fulbright, said he shared the Senator's wish to put the fund on a long-term basis but opposed the move to by-pass the regular appropriations procedure. He suggested instead "a long-term authorization of appropriations in reasonable amounts, together with the concurrent enactment in one appropriation bill of appropriations for each of the years for which the program is authorized."

As to the size of the DLF appropriation, the President said that to double the $700 million figure he had proposed for fiscal 1960 would be unwise, and that he hoped that in the future the other industrial countries of the world would "provide a growing volume of financing for the less-developed areas."

June 10 -- The Foreign Relations Committee adopted by an 11-4 vote an amendment to S 1451 authorizing Treasury borrowing of $5 billion for the DLF over a five-year period.

June 15 -- The House Government Operations Committee issued a 51-page report (H Rept 546) charging corruption and mismanagement of foreign aid to Laos. The report was the result of an investigation conducted by the Foreign Operations and Monetary Affairs Subcommittee, headed by Porter Hardy Jr. (D Va.).

A joint reply to the report's charges was issued June 15 by the State Department and the International Cooperation Administration. The report's allegations of bribery, maladministration and failures of the Laos aid program were described by the agencies as either untrue or exaggerated. In a separate statement, the State Department denied the Committee's charge that J. Graham Parsons, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for the Far East and former Ambassador to Laos, had helped to remove an ICA auditor from his post.

BILL REPORTED

ACTION -- The Foreign Relations Committee June 22 reported S 1451 (S Rept 412) authorizing $4,164,820,000 for the Mutual Security Program in fiscal 1960. The Committee had approved the bill June 15 by a 13-2 vote, with Sens. Wayne Morse (D Ore.) and William Langer (R N.D.) voting against it.

The Committee increased, for the first time in the program's history, the total requested by the Administration, but it provided that the $1 billion authorized for the Development Loan Fund in fiscal 1960 should come from Treasury borrowing, a financing method opposed by the Administration as "backdoor spending."

To put the DLF on a long-term basis, the Committee also authorized $1 billion a year for fiscal 1961 through 1964. Like the fiscal 1960 authorization, the money was to be borrowed from the Treasury.

The breakdown of fiscal 1960 funds approved by the Committee:

Military assistance	$1,600,000,000
Economic assistance
Defense support	835,000,000
Development Loan Fund	1,000,000,000*
Technical assistance	211,000,000
Other programs	94,200,000
Special assistance	244,620,000
President's contingency fund	180,000,000
TOTAL	$4,164,820,000

*Treasury borrowing authorization.

The report said the Committee bill reflected "the growing concern of the Committee in recent years...over shortcomings of certain phases of the Mutual Security Program." In shifting somewhat the program's emphasis from military aid to economic assistance, the report said the Committee had "done to the bill what it had hoped that its previous expressions would cause the Administration to do." It said that "in the absence of Administration initiative," it was "compelled to proceed unilaterally in order to present...a bill which is adequate to the task that confronts American foreign policy in 1959."

The report said the task was twofold: (1) to contribute to building up the military forces which were essential, primarily in Europe and the Far East, to continued deterrence of overt Soviet military aggression, and (2) to contribute to the economic development of the countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America "to induce a rate of growth which promises to become self-sustaining."

As reported, S 1451 amended the policy statement of the Mutual Security Act of 1958. The report said the new points added to the policy statement were designed to "indicate the Congressional view that programs of economic and political development are worthwhile in themselves, irrespective of the Communist threat, and that these programs reflect a mutuality of interest between the Unied States and the other peoples concerned."

In authorizing military assistance funds, the Committee met the Administration's request in amount -- $1.6 billion. However, in apportioning the $1.6 billion, the Committee increased from $877 million to $1.1 billion the Administration request for aid to NATO countries, while reducing to $500 million the share earmarked for military assistance to non-NATO nations. The $500 million, the Committee said, was "more than enough to take care of the Administration's proposals for the critical areas of Korea, Taiwan and Viet Nam." "The balance can be reprogramed...among the other countries," the report said. The Committee said the effect of the change would be to "put more military assistance where it can be effectively utilized without creating economic and political problems." The Committee bill also tightened standards for military aid to Latin American and to underdeveloped countries.

In minority views, Sen. Wayne Morse (D Ore.) said he had voted against reporting the bill because the Committee failed to eliminate "at least $400 million of military aid waste in the bill," had provided $245 million more than the Administration requested and because "the bill does a great injustice to the American taxpayers" by granting "great sums of money to many countries in which tax evasion and tax dodging are notorious." Morse said, "This bill is knowingly padded."

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- June 24 -- President Eisenhower asked Congress to grant the military assistance program a permanent authorization and to include appropriations for it, in the future, in the Defense Department appropriation bill instead of the mutual security appropriation bill. The request was made in a Presidential endorsement of the recommendations of the special Committee to Study the Military Assistance Program. Other Draper Committee proposals, the President said, would be carried out through Executive Branch action.

Floor Action

The Senate July 8 passed, by a 65-26 roll-call vote, an amended bill (HR 7500) authorizing $3,543,320,000 for the fiscal 1960 Mutual Security Program. The action, which sent the bill to conference with the House, was preceded by six days of debate and 12 roll calls on amendments. The total authorized in the bill was $366,080,000 less than the President's request for $3,909,400,000. (For voting, see charts p. 422-424)

A major controversy developed over the authorization for the Development Loan Fund. The Foreign Relations Committee's version of the bill (S 1451) provided $1 billion a year for five years in authority to borrow from the Treasury, a provision strongly opposed by the President on the grounds that the Treasury could not finance such heavy borrowing. The Senate July 1 refused, on a 42-48 roll call, to table an appeal by Francis Case (R S.D.) from the Presiding Officer's ruling that it was permissible, under Senate rules, to provide for withdrawing money from the Treasury outside of regular appropriation bills. (See box) The Case point of order was made against the $5 billion public debt transaction.

The next day the Case appeal was withdrawn and a compromise amendment, offered jointly by Senate Leaders Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) and Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas), was accepted by voice vote. It provided $2 billion in regular authorizations for the DLF, $750 million of which was for fiscal 1960 and $1,250,000,000 for fiscal 1961. The funds would be available only in an appropriation bill.

The Senate July 2 rejected, on a 30-50 roll-call vote, an amendment to provide a straight fiscal 1960 authorization of $700 million for the Fund, as originally requested by the President. Mr. Eisenhower, in his June 4 letter to Fulbright, had indicated he would drop his original proposal and support a "multiple-year authorization and appropriation" for the DLF.

Dirksen July 1, before Case raised his point of order, had offered, with the President's approval, an amendment authorizing appropriation of $1.5 billion over three years for the DLF. Dirksen later dropped that amendment in favor of the compromise worked out with Johnson.

The Senate July 7, on a 52-41 roll call, voted to cut the President's request for $1.6 billion in military assistance funds to $1.3 billion, after rejecting, 38-55, an attempt to cut them back to $1,050,000,000. The President, at his July 8 press conference, called his original request the "minimum" necessary for military aid and hinted a special session of Congress might be called if adequate funds were not provided. (See p. 947)

The Senate then rejected, 40-53, an amendment cutting the economic assistance authorization from $835 million to $600 million and instead agreed, 49-43, to reduce the funds 10 percent, to $751,500,000. It also voted, 56-37, to provide that future appropriations for military assistance were to be included in the regular Defense Department budget.

Further cuts were rejected July 8.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, HR 7500 authorized in fiscal 1960:

Military assistance	$1,300,000,000
Economic assistance
Defense support	751,500,000
Development Loan Fund	750,000,000
Technical assistance	211,000,000
Other programs	106,200,000
Special assistance	244,620,000
President's contingency fund	180,000,000
TOTAL	$3,543,320,000

The bill also:

Authorized $1,250,000,000 in fiscal 1961 for the Development Loan Fund.

Set a ceiling of $893,750,000 on the military aid funds that could go to NATO countries.

Provided that, beginning in fiscal 1961, military assistance appropriations be included in the Defense Department budget.

Permitted the President to transfer up to 30 percent of military assistance funds to technical and special assistance programs.

Required the President, in making fiscal 1961 requests for the program, to submit a detailed plan for the progressive reduction of all bilateral grant assistance.

Required the International Cooperation Administration to make available to Congress and the General Accounting Office, on request, all reports and audits.

Tightened standards for military aid to Latin America and to underdeveloped countries.

Required the U.S. ambassador in a country receiving military aid to make sure the recommendations were "coordinated with political and economic considerations."

'Backdoor Spending' Issue

Senate leaders Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) and Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) July 2 said they would ask the Senate Rules and Administration Committee to consider the question of whether the Senate is acting within its rules when it authorizes Federal agencies to borrow from the Treasury without the direct approval of the Appropriations Committee. This issue of "backdoor spending" which was raised during Senate debate on the Mutual Security bill also has been of prime interest to the House in considering other bills.

Sen. George D. Aiken (R Vt.) July 1 said that if the Foreign Relations Committee's "proposal to borrow from the Treasury for the Development Loan Fund is an unsound method of financing, we have been awfully unsound for the last 20 years...." Aiken read to the Senate a list of 15 agencies that were authorized to borrow from the Treasury, with the amount of money each still owed the Treasury:

COMMODITY CREDIT CORP. -- $13.7 billion

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION ADMINISTRATION -- almost $3 billion

FARMERS HOME ADMINISTRATION -- $403 million

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK -- $1.9 billion

HOUSING AND HOME FINANCE AGENCY -- $2.8 billion

INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION ADMINISTRATION -- $1.2 billion

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORP. -- now liquidated

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY DEVELOPMENT CORP. -- $112 million

VETERANS ADMINISTRATION -- $930 million

GENERAL SERVICES ADMINISTRATION -- $1.9 billion

U.S. INFORMATION AGENCY, NATURAL FIBERS REVOLVING FUND (ARMY), FEDERAL SHIP MORTGAGE FUND (COMMERCE), SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION -- total of $21 million

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY -- authority to borrow now rescinded.

Strengthened the Secretary of State's authority over the program by providing for his "continuous supervision and general direction."

Required annual studies of the role of private enterprise in foreign policy and of the balance of trade of the U.S. in relation to other countries and provided that the State Department and other agencies study methods to strengthen the economies of free nations.

Increased from $500 million to $1 billion the authority of the Investment Guaranty Fund but limited the guarantees to firms in underdeveloped countries.

Suspended aid to any country which the President determined to be expropriating U.S.-owned property without adequate compensation but permitted resumption of aid when the situation has been corrected.

Authorized an East-West cultural and technical interchange center in Hawaii and directed the Secretary of State to submit plans for the center by Jan. 3, 1960.

Earmarked $10 million from the Contingency Fund for U.S. participation in the World Refugee Year.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) -- Establish in Hawaii an East-West cultural and technical interchange center and direct the Secretary of State to submit to Congress a plan for the center by Jan. 3, 1960; July 1. Voice vote.

Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.), as modified by Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) -- Authorize for the Development Loan Fund $750 million for fiscal 1960 and $1,250,000,000 for fiscal 1961; July 2. Voice vote.

A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) -- Require the ICA, upon request, to make available to the General Accounting Office and to Congress all records and audits; July 2. Voice.

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) -- Authorize $10 million for Federal participation in the World Refugee Year; July 2. Voice.

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- Require annual studies of the role of private enterprise in foreign policy and of the U.S. balance of trade; July 2. Voice.

Philip A. Hart (D Mich.) -- Add to the policy statement the word "abiding" in the section stating the U.S. "perceives the abiding identity of interest" between the peoples of the U.S. and of other countries; July 2. Voice.

Humphrey -- Permit surplus commodities to be distributed to the needy of the U.S. on the same basis as to the needy of other countries; July 2. Voice.

Allen J. Ellender (D La.) -- Reduce military assistance authorization from $1.6 billion to $1.3 billion; July 7. Roll call, 52-41.

Ellender -- Reduce from $1,100,000,000 to $893,750,000 the amount available for military assistance to NATO countries; July 7. Voice.

Thomas J. Dodd (D Conn.), as modified by Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) -- Provide that, beginning in fiscal 1961, military assistance appropriations be included in the Defense Department budget; July 7. Roll call, 56-37.

Javits -- Authorize study by the State Department and other agencies of methods to formulate programs to strengthen the economics of free nations; July 7. Voice.

Frank Church (D Idaho) -- Reduce defense support authorization from $835 million to $751.5 million; July 7. Roll call, 49-43.

Humphrey -- Amend existing law permitting use of foreign currencies for scientific research purposes to specify that appropriation of such currencies would be in addition to dollar appropriations; July 7. Voice.

Humphrey -- Authorize $2 million for international health research and disease control; July 7. Voice.

Styles Bridges (R N.H.), Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) -- Suspend aid to any country which the President determines to be expropriating U.S.-owned property without adequate compensation until the situation is corrected; July 8. Roll call, 59-32. (A similar amendment, by Johnston, was rejected, 39-44, July 2; see below.)

John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.) -- Add to the policy statement a section declaring as a primary U.S. objective the encouragement of political and economic freedom and advancement of living standards of other countries through generous giving and cultural exchanges; July 8. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) -- Require the President, in submitting his fiscal 1961 recommendations for the program, to include plans to reduce progressively, and terminate within three years, the grant assistance program; July 2. Standing vote.

Mansfield -- Abolish the ICA and merge its functions and personnel with the State Department; July 2. Standing.

Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) -- Prohibit aid to any country which the President determines to be expropriating United States-owned property without adequate compensation; July 2. Roll call, 39-44. (A similar amendment was agreed to, 59-32, July 8.)

Ellender, substitute for Dirksen-Johnson amendment (above) -- Authorize appropriation of $700 million for the Development Loan Fund; July 2. Roll call, 30-50.

Ellender -- Retain administrative duties in connection with DLF loans in the Export-Import Bank instead of transferring them to the ICA; July 2. Standing.

Ellender -- Delete section providing that unused foreign currencies received from sale of surplus commodities be credited to the DLF; July 2. Voice.

Ellender -- Cut military assistance from $1,600,000,000 to $1,050,000,000; July 7. Roll call, 38-55.

Ellender -- Reduce defense support authorization from $835 million to $600 million; July 7. Roll call, 40-53.

Ernest Gruening (D Alaska) -- Require that, effective with the fiscal 1961 mutual security authorization and appropriation bills, detailed budgets on a country-by-country basis must be submitted to the Congressional committees concerned; July 7. Roll call, 37-53.

Ellender -- Reduce special assistance authorization from $244,620,000 to $100 million; July 8. Standing.

Wayne Morse (D Ore.) -- Substitute for Ellender amendment (immediately above) an amendment cutting special assistance funds to $200 million; July 8. Roll call, 40-51.

Ellender, as modified by Church -- Reduce authorization for the President's contingency fund from $180 million to $150 million; July 8. Roll call, 38-52.

Ellender -- Require that 75 percent of funds for purchase of commodities, equipment or services must be expended within the U.S. unless the President determines it is not in the best interests of the U.S.; July 8. Voice.

Morse, as modified by John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) -- Declare it to be the sense of Congress that aid should be denied to countries practicing racial or religious discrimination against Americans unless the President determines such a denial would adversely affect national security; July 8. Roll call, 43-47.

Richard L. Neuberger (D Ore.) -- Amend Morse amendment (above) to declare it also to be the sense of Congress that aid should be denied to any country censoring dispatches of American correspondents; July 8. Voice.

Morse -- Prohibit aid to any Latin American country which the President determines has a totalitarian form of government; July 8. Standing.

NEW DIRECTION NEEDED

DEBATE -- June 30 -- J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.), floor manager of the bill -- The bill "changes the direction" of previous legislation by "eliminating grant aid and putting our assistance on a self-liquidating, loan basis." By continuing the annual appropriation process for the Development Loan Fund, "we will assure its eventual failure."

July 1 -- Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) -- In Committee he did not vote to approve the bill, although "I did not oppose reporting" it to the Senate. The bill "still does not go far enough" because it does not "require decisive action to end massive grants of aid -- as distinct from loans -- within a reasonable time."

Francis Case (R S.D.) -- The loan fund provision "is the most flagrant abuse of the idea (of direct borrowing from the Treasury) that has come to my attention."

July 2 -- Fulbright -- The Administration "has permitted the Secretary of the Treasury to override the Secretary of State" and his Department on a foreign policy matter -- the financing of the loan fund. The Treasury and Budget Bureau have "dominant influence" on the program.

Stuart Symington (D Mo.) -- The President has reversed his position on the long-range authorization plan for the DLF "180 degrees in the past two years."

Dirksen -- The decision to compromise "did not involve the question of foreign aid, as such, or the policy." The amendment gives Congress an opportunity to "follow every dollar from its source to the incidence of expenditure, in the interest of the public treasury."

George D. Aiken (R Vt.) -- "We are still not providing the most flexible way for operating the Development Loan Fund." It is not good policy for the DLF to have to "close its doors once a year with no sure knowledge they will be open the next day."

Conference

REPORT -- Senate and House conferees July 21 reported a compromise version of HR 7500 (H Rept 695) authorizing $3,556,200,000 for the Mutual Security Program in fiscal 1960. The total was $353,200,000 less than the President requested, $13,600,000 more than the House had voted and $12,880,000 more than the Senate figure.

Conferees on the measure agreed to a $700 million fiscal 1960 authorization for the Development Loan Fund but also authorized $1.1 billion for the DLF in fiscal 1961. The Senate originally voted a $750 million fiscal 1960 authorization for the fund and $1,250,000,000 for fiscal 1961. The House provided $700 million in fiscal 1960 only, as originally requested by President Eisenhower. The President later, however, indicated he would support a longer-range authorization for the DLF. (See above, p. 185-86)

The conferees also accepted, in part, a Senate provision placing future military assistance appropriations in the Defense Department budget. No such provision was contained in the House version and, in deference to the House, the conference report said the plan would be put on an "experimental" basis for fiscal years 1961 and 1962.

Conferees struck out Senate provisions designating a limit of $893,750,000 on military assistance funds for NATO countries, earmarking $31.5 million for an international military force under the Organization of American States and permitting the President to transfer up to 30 percent of military aid funds to other assistance programs. They retained, however, Senate provisions tightening military aid requirements for Latin American and underdeveloped countries and deleted House provisions setting specific standards for determining a country's need for military assistance.

The bill carried a military assistance authorization of $1.4 billion, $200 million less than the President requested.

ACTION -- Congress July 22 cleared HR 7500 for the President's signature when the House, by a 258-153 roll-call vote, and the Senate, by voice vote, adopted the conference report on the measure. (For House voting, see chart p. 378)

HOUSE DEBATE -- July 22 -- Alvin M. Bentley (R Mich.) -- "It is rather remarkable" that the conferees increased the authorization figures from both the House and the Senate versions.

Thomas E. Morgan (D Pa.), floor manager -- The major differences in the two bills did not involve money, but rather "Congressional control over the...program."

SENATE DEBATE -- July 22 -- J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.), -- This bill is "in many respects...better than that requested by the Administration."

MEASURE SIGNED

President Eisenhower July 24 signed HR 7500 into PL 86-108 and issued a statement calling attention to three amendments concerning "disclosure by the Executive Branch of information, documents and materials relating to the Mutual Security Program or certain of its aspects."

"I have signed this bill," he said, "on the express premise that the three amendments relating to disclosure are not intended to alter and cannot alter the recognized constitutional duty and power of the Executive with respect to the disclosure of information, documents and other materials. Indeed, any other construction of these amendments would raise grave constitutional questions under the historic separation of powers doctrine.

"In this connection, I am constrained to emphasize once again that it is established policy of the Executive Branch to provide the Congress and the public with the fullest possible information consistent with the public interest. This policy will continue to guide the Executive Branch...."

Draper Committee Studies

Reports of the President's Special Committee to Study the Military Assistance Program figured prominently in Congress' consideration of the 1959 foreign aid bill.

The committee was appointed by President Eisenhower Nov. 24, 1958 to make an independent study of the Mutual Security Program and to determine "the relative emphasis which should be given to military and economic programs, particularly in the less developed areas." Eight members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee Aug. 25 had asked President Eisenhower for a reappraisal of the relative weight given to military aid in the program.

William H. Draper Jr., board chairman of Mexican Light & Power Co. and one-time Under Secretary of the Army, was named chairman of the group of nine former military commanders and civilian officials.

The Draper Committee's first two reports were issued March 17 and June 24, while the foreign aid bill was before Congress. The first report recommended a $400 million increase in the President's $1.6 billion military assistance request; Mr. Eisenhower April 29 said he would defer until 1960 a decision on whether to ask Congress to approve the increase. The second report recommended a continuing authorization for military assistance and inclusion of military aid funds in the Defense Department budget; President Eisenhower endorsed these proposals, and Congress wrote them into the bill on a two-year "experimental" basis. (See above)

The committee's last two reports were released after Congress had completed action on HR 7500.

In transmitting the committee's third interim report to Congress July 23, President Eisenhower made no recommendations but asked that it be "carefully considered and, where appropriate, taken into account" in formulating fiscal 1961 programs.

The committee said the military and economic aid programs "are neither alternatives nor competitors." It said economic aid "must continue for as long as the Communist threat exists;" the program should be "better administered, not emasculated or abandoned."

The report's principal recommendations:

- Creation of a single agency to administer major economic programs, under State Department policy direction and preferably "located outside the Department." The committee said there was "no question" that some criticisms of waste and maladministration in economic aid were "justified," and it believed the "central weakness" was in inadequate coordination of various activities into integrated programs.
- Long-range, rather than year-to-year, financing of the Development Loan Fund at the rate of "at least" $1 billion a year starting in fiscal 1961.
- More emphasis "on the predominant responsibility of the countries being aided" to solve their own economic problems, with "reasonable self-help efforts" as a condition of aid.
- Legislative and administrative steps to insure more effective use of surplus agricultural commodities.
- Stimulation of increased private investments abroad.
- Increased emphasis on a multilateral approach to development aid.
- Assistance, to nations requesting it, in formulating programs "designed to deal with the problem of rapid population growth."

FINAL REPORT

President Eisenhower Aug. 20 sent to Congress the Draper Committee's final report, detailing the committee's "unanimous conclusions" on foreign aid.

In his letter of transmittal, the President said the cuts made by Congress had reduced military assistance authorizations to a "dangerously low level." He said he agreed with the analysis by the Draper Committee and that he would review in the fall the effect of the foreign aid program finally approved by Congress and "make appropriate recommendations."

The committee's report to the President said the need for public understanding and acceptance of the Mutual Security Program was "now so great as to warrant Presidential instructions to the interested executive agencies to institute vigorous measures to correct the present weaknesses and to allocate sufficient funds and personnel to inform the public fully and fairly." The Draper Committee again strongly recommended a $2 billion-a-year military assistance program and urged that the level of lending for economic development be increased to at least $1 billion a year.

The report said the U.S. faced not only a military threat, "but also an industrial, political, subversive and ideological threat." "If now, together with the other free nations, we strengthen our defenses and vigorously cope with the problems of the less developed areas of the world, they will not fall into the Communist camp," the committee said. It said the U.S. and its allies have a "far greater capacity to contribute to their programs and we place no restrictions on their basic liberties."

While constructive criticisms of the aid program were valuable, the committee said, "many current criticisms are not justified and their wide publication presents a serious handicap" to public understanding. It said the major cause underlying the difficulties was "the wide dispersion of authority throughout the Government for the administration of the programs." The report commended the President and Congress for their prompt action in putting the military aid appropriations in the Defense Department budget and giving the military aid program a continuing authorization for more than one year.

The committee said it believed that the lower amounts likely to be appropriated by Congress for fiscal 1960 involved "a serious security danger" for the U.S. and the free world. It said continued reductions in military assistance funds would "inevitably result in a major deterioration of military strength in forward areas and a clearly apparent withdrawal of effective support from many of our allies." This could require basic changes in current military strategy and the alliance system, the report said.

Earlier recommendations for strengthening the State Department's policy direction, with an independent agency to administer economic aid and the Defense Department to handle military operations, were repeated.

AID CUTS THREATENED

Possible curtailment of U.S. foreign aid and military spending abroad was suggested Sept. 29 by Treasury Secretary Robert B. Anderson in a plea to other countries for more favorable treatment of U.S. exports.

Anderson told the annual meetings of the World Bank and International Monetary Fund that the U.S. balance of payments was running at a deficit of about $4.5 billion yearly. He indicated the U.S. would have to curtail its foreign military expenditures and aid programs unless other countries removed barriers to expanded U.S. exports.

Subsequently, the Development Loan Fund Oct. 19 announced it would require that most future loan money be spent in the U.S. DLF Managing Director Vance Brand said the decision was taken in view of the "steadily increasing ability" of other industrialized nations to assist less developed countries and in view of "the changes which have taken place in the world payments situation." This presumably was a reference to the U.S. balance of payments deficit.

MUTUAL SECURITY FUNDS

HR 8385 -- Reported by House Appropriations Committee July 24, 1959 (H Rept 712). Recommended appropriation: $3,186,500,000 for the Mutual Security Program and $23,282,000 for other programs.

- Passed by the House July 29, amended, by a 279-136 roll-call vote (See p. 380) Voted: $3,186,500,000, mutual security; $5,282,000, other.
- Reported, amended, by Senate Appropriations Committee Sept. 8 (S Rept 981). Recommended: $3,281,813,000, mutual security; $409,456,508, other.
- Passed, amended, by the Senate Sept. 14 by a 64-25 roll-call vote. (See p. 446) Voted: $3,281,813,000, mutual security; $410,449,137, other.
- Conference report (H Rept 1190) agreed to Sept. 15 by voice vote of the Senate and by a 194-109 roll-call vote of the House. (See p. 396)

P. L. 86-363 -- Signed into law Sept. 28. Final appropriation: $3,225,813,000, mutual security; $400,905,137, other.

In its last legislative action of the 1959 session, Congress sent to the President a catch-all bill appropriating $3,225,813,000 for the fiscal 1960 Mutual Security Program and $400,905,137 in fiscal 1960 appropriations for various other Federal agencies and programs. The bill also carried a rider extending until Nov. 8, 1961 the life of the Civil Rights Commission -- the only civil rights legislation on which Congress completed action during the session. (See story p. 291)

The final appropriation for the Mutual Security Program in fiscal 1960 was $704,182,000 less than President Eisenhower's original $3,929,995,000 request. In addition, Mr. Eisenhower July 24 asked Congress to appropriate $500 million for the Development Loan Fund, to be granted in the fiscal 1960 bill but not to be spent until fiscal 1961. Congress turned down this request.

The $704 million cut in President Eisenhower's MSP request fell in size between the $652 million cut in the 1958 fund bill and $1.1 billion in the 1957 bill. (For a comparison of the President's requests with the amounts authorized and appropriated by Congress for foreign aid in fiscal 1960, see preceding story.)

PROVISIONS -- As signed by the President, HR 8385 appropriated:

MUTUAL SECURITY PROGRAM

Military assistance	$1,300,000,000

Claims and judgments	708,137
Subtotal	$ 400,905,137
TOTAL	$3,626,718,137

In addition, the bill:

Required the President, within 60 days, to submit to the Appropriations Committees a full report on the allotment of funds provided in the bill; directed that, within 30 days after the approval of any further change in the program which amounted to more than $1 million or 5 percent of the amount appropriated for any part of the program, whichever was less, the President must submit to the Committees a full report on the change and the reasons for it.

Prohibited the spending of any mutual security funds, except those for military assistance, if the International Cooperation Administration failed, within 35 days, to furnish documents requested by Congressional committees or the GAO unless the President has forbidden their disclosure.

Earmarked $45 million in defense support funds for Spain.

Provided that no mutual security funds could be used for special education or training programs, foreign small business machine tools, or international health field programs.

Prohibited use of mutual security funds for any new flood control or related resources project which does not meet the standards for U.S. public works.

Reiterated Congress' opposition to the seating of Communist China in the United Nations, but, in the event it were seated, directed the President to inform Congress on foreign policy implications involved.

Declared it was the sense of Congress that any discrimination in foreign countries against U.S. citizens because of their race or religion "generally is repugnant to (its) principles."

Extended until Nov. 8, 1961 the life of the Civil Rights Commission.

Background

The Mutual Security Act of 1959, signed into law July 24, authorized $3,556,200,000 in new foreign aid spending in fiscal 1960. An additional $20,595,000 already was authorized by previous laws. (For authorization, see preceding story)

House

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations, Foreign Operations Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- May 19-June 24.

ACTION -- The full Appropriations Committee July 24 reported a bill (HR 8385 -- H Rept 712) appropriating $3,186,500,000 for the Mutual Security Program in fiscal 1960. In addition the bill appropriated $23,282,000 for Army administration of the Ryukyu Islands. The mutual security total was $743,495,000 less than the President's original request and did not include his July 24 DLF request for $500 million, which the Committee said it did not have time to consider.

The Committee made these major cuts in President Eisenhower's mutual security requests for fiscal 1960: $300 million less than was requested for military assistance, $100 million less than was authorized; $135 million less than was sought for defense support, $51 million less than was authorized; $150 million less than was requested and authorized for the DLF in fiscal 1960 and no money for fiscal 1961; $29.5 million less than was requested and authorized for technical assistance; $71.8 million less than was requested for special assistance and $47.5 million less than was authorized; $45 million less than was requested for the President's contingency fund but the same amount as was authorized.

The Committee expressly prohibited use of funds in the bill to initiate or expand certain programs recommended in the authorization bill: special education and training; foreign small business; international cooperation in health; an East-West cultural exchange center in Hawaii; and support of the World Refugee Year.

A provision was inserted forbidding contracts with any company that offered compensation to an ICA employee or hired an employee within two years of his leaving ICA. A similar ban covering Pentagon personnel was under consideration in a House Armed Services subcommittee.

The Committee rejected, by an 11-19 vote, a motion by Rep. Jamie L. Whitten (D Miss.) for a formal investigation of "all phases of the Mutual Security Program." The motion was defeated after Rep. Otto E. Passman (D La.), chairman of the Foreign Operations Subcommittee, said his group had been conducting a continuing investigation of the program for years.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- July 23 -- The Committee released closed-session testimony by Comptroller General Joseph Campbell charging that a "pattern of loose, lax administration runs through the entire complex" of the foreign aid program. One of Campbell's chief criticisms was directed against the Defense Department and International Cooperation Administration for keeping reports secret from his agency.

Floor Action

The House July 29 passed HR 8385 by a 279-136 roll-call vote and sent it to the Senate. As passed by the House, the bill carried the same mutual security total -- $3,186,500,000 -- approved by the Appropriations Committee. In addition, the bill appropriated $5,282,000 for Army administration of the Ryukyu Islands. (For voting, see chart p. 380)

Mr. Eisenhower July 24 and at his press conference July 29 protested the House cuts as damaging to the national security and the free world. He expressed hope that the Senate would appropriate the full amount authorized.

No attempts were made on the House floor to increase the Committee-recommended appropriations. The strategy, as explained by Minority Leader Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.), was to "hold the line" against any further cuts. Several amendments to decrease appropriations were defeated by voice votes when the bill was debated July 28.

Two provisions were stricken from the bill on points of order. One would have appropriated $18 million for Army construction of an enlarged power system in the Ryukyu Islands, largely on Okinawa. The other, struck by Rep. Charles O. Porter (D Ore.), would have reiterated Congress' opposition to the seating of Red China in the United Nations.

Added on the House floor was an amendment prohibiting the spending of any mutual security funds, except those for military assistance, if the International Cooperation Administration failed, within 20 days, to furnish documents requested by Congressional committees or the General Accounting Office. A requirement that ICA furnish information on the administration of foreign aid programs was written into the mutual security authorization bill (HR 7500 -- PL 86-108).

In signing the bill July 24 the President took exception to the provision, by implication. He said he assumed it "cannot alter" the President's "recognized constitutional duty and power" to withhold confidential matters originating in the Executive Branch.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 8385 appropriated:

Military assistance	$1,300,000,000
Defense support	700,000,000
Development Loan Fund	550,000,000
Technical assistance	181,500,000
Special assistance	200,000,000
Other programs	100,000,000
President's contingency fund	155,000,000
Subtotal, mutual security	$3,186,500,000
Ryukyu Islands, Army operations	5,282,000
TOTAL	$3,191,782,000

In addition, the bill:

Prohibited spending of any mutual security funds, except those for military assistance; if the ICA failed, within 20 days, to furnish documents requested by Congressional committees or the GAO; or for non-military projects that do not meet the standards for U.S. public works.

Prohibited the spending of any funds in the bill for programs authorized in the 1959 act (PL 86-108) dealing with special education and training, foreign small business, international cooperation in health and an East-West cultural center.

Prohibited use of any funds in the bill to make contracts with any individual or company that offered compensation to an ICA employee or hired an employee within two years of his leaving ICA.

Except for the President's contingency fund and the DLF, prohibited the obligating of more than 20 percent of any appropriation in the last month of the period for which it was made available.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

H.R. Gross (R Iowa) -- Delete provision earmarking $50 million of defense support funds for Spain; July 28. Standing vote, 88-38.

Keith Thomson (R Wyo.) -- Prohibit spending of funds, except those in the military assistance program, for non-military projects that do not meet the standards required for U.S. public works; July 28. Voice.

Porter Hardy Jr. (D Va.) -- Prohibit spending of funds, except those for military assistance, if the ICA fails, within 20 days, to furnish documents requested by Congressional committees or the General Accounting Office; July 28. Voice.

Silvio O. Conte (R Mass.) -- Delete provision prohibiting the spending of $10 million from the President's contingency fund as the U.S. share of the World Refugee Year; July 28. Standing, 127-111; teller, 144-113.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Hugh Alexander (D N.C.) -- Cut funds for the Development Loan Fund by $50 million; July 28. Voice.

Gross -- Cut funds for general administrative expenses by $198,700; July 28. Voice.

Alexander -- Cut President's contingency fund by $55 million; July 28. Voice.

John Dowdy (D Texas) -- Prohibit any spending for mutual security that would increase the U.S. national debt; July 28. Standing, 53-125.

Charles E. Bennett (D Fla.) -- Prohibit spending of any funds in the bill to carry out agreements for the exchange of nuclear information of military use; July 28. Standing, 61-137. (Rep. Passman said the bill contained no funds for such a purpose.)

DEBATE -- July 28 -- Otto E. Passman (D La.) -- Criticized the "haphazard operations" and mismanagement of the mutual security program.

Hardy -- Emphasized the importance of getting information on "what the ICA is doing" so that Congress can "bring some common sense" into its administration.

Silvio O. Conte (R Mass.) -- "I am shocked, amazed and appalled by the arbitrary, almost capricious manner" in which cuts were made by the Committee.

Alfred E. Santangelo (D N.Y.) -- His amendment banning the hiring of ICA employees by companies involved in the program was designed "to do away with the 'feather your nest' practices of ICA officials."

John J. Rhodes (R Ariz.) -- Supported the bill and regretted that the program attracts more "brickbats" than any other.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- Aug. 6 -- ICA Director James W. Riddleberger rejected a request of the House Government Operations Foreign Operations and Monetary Affairs Subcommittee for information on the foreign aid program. The Subcommittee, of which Rep. Porter Hardy Jr. (D Va.) was chairman, sought the information July 24, the day the President signed the Mutual Security Act of 1959.

Riddleberger told the Senate Appropriations Committee he would not withhold "damaging" facts but opposed Hardy's appropriation bill provision which would require a cut-off of economic aid in any country where the Administration withheld its evaluation reports on the progress of the program.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

HEARINGS -- Aug. 4-26.

ACTION -- Sept. 8 reported an amended version of HR 8385 (S Rept 981) recommending $3,281,813,000 for mutual security, $23,282,000 for the Ryukyu Islands, $385,790,000 in supplemental appropriations for Federal departments and agencies and $384,508 for claims and judgments -- a total of $3,691,269,508. Like the House, the Senate denied the President's fiscal 1961 Development Loan Fund request.

CIVIL RIGHTS RIDER

Before reporting the bill, the Committee voted 13-7 to instruct Chairman Carl Hayden (D Ariz.) to seek suspension of Senate rules so that a provision to extend the Civil Rights Commission for two years and give it $500,000 in fiscal 1960 could be added to the bill on the Senate floor.

The Committee struck out Rep. Hardy's "right-to-know" provision and provided instead that the President must submit a full report on the allotment of funds in the bill and of any subsequent major changes.

The Committee bill exempted non-profit groups from a House provision prohibiting the use of any funds in the bill to make contracts with any individual or company offering compensation to an ICA employee or hiring an employee within two years of his leaving ICA.

The Senate Committee concurred in House provisions prohibiting the spending of any mutual security funds authorized in the 1959 act dealing with special education and training, foreign small businesses and international health, but deleted a House provision prohibiting spending of funds for an East-West cultural center.

Floor Action

The Senate Sept. 14 passed HR 8385 by a 64-25 roll-call vote, approving the $3,281,813,000 mutual security total recommended by the Appropriations Committee. The bill also appropriated $410,449,137 for various Federal agencies and the Ryukyu Islands. (For voting, see chart p. 396)

The Senate rejected, on a 37-53 roll call, an amendment to cut military assistance funds by $100 million -- to $1.2 billion. It accepted, by a 49-38 roll-call vote, an amendment by Styles Bridges (R N.H.) earmarking $50 million in defense support funds for Spain. The section was included in the Appropriations Committee bill but was stricken on the floor by a point of order. Acceptance of the Bridges amendment restored the effect of the provision.

By a voice vote, the Senate accepted a modified amendment by A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) prohibiting the spending of non-military mutual security funds if the ICA failed, within 35 days, to furnish requested documents to Congress or the GAO, unless the President had forbidden it to do so in the public interest. The Senate also accepted by voice votes amendments to delete sections of the bill prohibiting the spending of any mutual security funds for educational training programs, foreign small businesses or international health. All three programs received authorizations under the Mutual Security Act of 1959.

The Senate also agreed by two 71-18 roll calls to suspend its rules and include in the bill a provision extending the life of the Civil Rights Commission and appropriating $500,000 for its fiscal 1960 activities. (For details, see p. 291)

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate and sent to conference, HR 8385 appropriated:

Military assistance	$1,300,000,000
Defense support	700,000,000
Development Loan Fund	590,000,000
Technical cooperation	191,200,000
Special assistance	245,000,000
Other programs	100,613,000
President's contingency fund	155,000,000
Mutual security subtotal	$3,281,813,000
Other items in bill	410,449,137
TOTAL	$3,692,262,137

In addition, the bill:

Required the President to submit a full report on allotment of funds provided in the bill and on subsequent program changes.

Prohibited the spending of any mutual security funds, except those for military assistance, if the ICA failed, within 35 days, to furnish documents requested by Congressional committees or the GAO unless the President has forbidden their being furnished in the public interest.

Earmarked $50 million in defense support funds for Spain.

Deplored discrimination by foreign countries against U.S. citizens because of their race or religion.

Prohibited the spending of mutual security funds for construction of any new flood control or related resource project unless a detailed evaluation showed that its benefits would be at least equivalent to its cost.

Provided that no funds in the bill could be used to provide facilities for, or to increase the production of, any agricultural commodity which is in surplus in the U.S.

Reiterated Congress' opposition to the seating of Communist China in the United Nations.

Extended until Nov. 8, 1961, the life of the Civil Rights Commission.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

A. Willis Robertson (D Va.), as modified -- Require foreign aid documents to be supplied unless forbidden by the President; Sept. 12. Voice vote.

Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) -- Delete from the bill a section prohibiting spending of any mutual security funds to make contracts with any individual or company (other than a non-profit organization) that offered compensation to an ICA employee or hired an employee within two years of his leaving ICA; Sept. 12. Voice.

Edmund S. Muskie (D Maine) -- Appropriate $100,000 for an Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, if established by law; Sept. 12. Voice. (See p. 256)

Carl Hayden (D Ariz.) -- Increase by $323,629 appropriations for claims and judgments; Sept. 12. Voice.

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- Provide $35,000 for the Hudson-Champlain Celebration Commission; Sept. 12. Voice.

Thomas J. Dodd (D Conn.) -- Appropriate $34,000 for the Commission on International Rules of Judicial Procedure; Sept. 12. Voice.

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) -- Strike out sections prohibiting the use of mutual security funds for international health field programs; Sept. 12. Voice.

Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) -- Provide $359 million for repayable advances to the Highway Trust Fund, as recommended by the Committee, but delete a section specifying the date by which the funds were to be repaid -- against which Albert Gore (D Tenn.) had raised a point of order; Sept. 12. Voice.

J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) -- Delete sections prohibiting use of funds for educational and training programs or for machine tools for foreign small businesses; Sept. 12. Voice.

Bridges -- Earmark $50 million in defense support funds for Spain; Sept. 12. Roll call, 49-38.

Carl Hayden (D Ariz.) -- Extend for two years the life of the Civil Rights Commission and appropriate $500,000 to it; Sept. 14. Roll call, 71-18.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Javits -- Appropriate $500 million for the Development Loan Fund's use in fiscal 1961; Sept. 12. Standing.

Humphrey -- Grant $400,000 for the State Department to contract for disarmament studies; Sept. 12. Voice.

Allen J. Ellender (D La.) -- Cut $100 million from military assistance funds; Sept. 12. Roll-call, 37-53.

Ellender -- Cut to $650 million the appropriation for defense support; Sept. 12. Standing.

Conference

REPORT -- A Senate-House conference committee Sept. 15 reported a compromise version of HR 8385 (H Rept 1190) appropriating $3,225,813,000 for mutual security and $400,905,137 for various Federal agencies and programs.

The compromise version appropriated the House figure of $550 million for the Development Loan Fund in fiscal 1960. The Senate voted $590 million for the fund; the President's original request was for $700 million, the amount carried in the authorization bill. The President also requested $500 million for the DLF's use in fiscal 1961, but neither chamber granted the request. The 1959 Mutual Security Act authorized $1.1 billion in fiscal 1961 for the fund.

Both House and Senate versions appropriated $1.3 billion for military assistance. The President had called his request for $1.6 billion the "minimum" required for the national security.

The House conferees accepted the Senate's provision, with an amendment, requiring the furnishing of mutual security information to Congress and the General Accounting Office unless the President forbade it.

ACTION -- The Senate early Sept. 15 adopted the conference report by voice vote. The House adopted it by a 194-109 roll-call vote, and, by a 221-81 roll call, agreed to the Senate provision extending the life of the Civil Rights Commission. (For voting, see chart p. 396)

President Eisenhower signed the bill Sept. 28 (PL 86-383).

WORLD BANK INCREASE

HR 4452 -- Reported by House Banking and Currency Committee (H Rept 225) March 18, 1959.

S 1094 -- Reported by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (S Rept 109) March 18, 1959.

● Passed by the Senate March 19 by a 73-10 roll-call vote. (See p. 402)

HR 4452 -- Passed by the House March 25 by a 315-57 roll-call vote. (See p. 354)

S 1094 -- Conference report (H Rept 435) agreed to by voice votes of the House and Senate June 5.

P. L. 86-48 -- Signed into law June 17.

Congress in 1959 acceded to President Eisenhower's request to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act of 1945 by voting an increase in the United States subscriptions to the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (World Bank). The final bill authorized $1,375,000,000 for the Monetary Fund in fiscal 1959 and provided a $3,175,000,000 increase for the World Bank.

The World Bank authorization, as a stand-by guarantee authority, did not require a budget expenditure. The increase for the Monetary Fund, however, took the form of an immediate cash expenditure of $344 million in gold, and $1,031,000,000 in non-interest bearing demand notes. Although the notes would not require a Treasury outlay until cashed by the fund, the entire $1,375,000,000 was charged against the Federal budget for fiscal 1959, which ended June 30.

Few Congressmen took issue with the purpose of the bill itself, but President Eisenhower's request that the money for the Monetary Fund be charged to the already unbalanced budget for fiscal 1959 became a partisan issue. Senate Democrats led their chamber in a vote to charge the amount to the budget for fiscal 1960, an action that would have placed the President's precariously balanced budget in the red. The House went along with the President's accounting request and the Senate ultimately gave in.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, S 1094:

Amended the Bretton Woods Agreements Act of 1945 to authorize the U.S. Governor of the International Monetary Fund to request and consent to an increase of $1,375,000,000 in the quota of the U.S., and authorized this amount in fiscal 1959.

Amended the Act to permit the U.S. Governor of the World Bank to vote increases in capital stock of the Bank and to subscribe on behalf of the U.S. up to 31,750 additional shares of stock at $100,000 per share.

Background

The Bretton Woods Agreements Act of 1945 authorized the participation of the United States in the International Monetary Fund and in the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. The Monetary Fund makes short-term loans to countries temporarily short of foreign exchange, enabling the countries to continue importing goods. Otherwise, they might be forced to impose temporary controls that would impede the flow of trade. Since the beginning of its operations, the fund has made available about $4.1 billion to 36 countries. The World Bank makes development loans, primarily for projects in underdeveloped areas; loans by the bank currently run at the rate of about $700 million per year.

In a Feb. 12 message to Congress, President Eisenhower asked for an increase of 50 percent in the quota of the United States in the International Monetary Fund (an increase of $1,375,000,000). He also proposed that the U.S. double its subscription in the World Bank, underwriting up to 31,750 additional shares of stock at $100,000 per share. (For text of message see p. 652) In his Jan. 19 Budget Message the President had already requested that Congress authorize the increase for the Monetary Fund in fiscal 1959.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Foreign Relations.

HEARINGS -- March 9, 12 and 17 on S 1094, a bill to carry out the President's requests.

TESTIMONY -- March 9 -- Sen. J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) questioned Treasury Secretary Robert B. Anderson about the Administration proposal to charge the fund increase to the unbalanced fiscal 1959 budget although the money would not be needed until fiscal 1960. Anderson said it was "of great importance" that "we raise no doubts or problems in the mind of others but say to them simply that we in the United States are immediately putting in our fund with the hope and belief that other countries will do the same with dispatch."

March 12 -- Under Secretary of State C. Douglas Dillon, testifying for the bill, cited Turkey as an example of a country whose economy was being saved from inflation through the help of the fund.

March 17 -- An American Bankers Assn. spokesman gave testimony favorable to the bill.

ACTION -- The Committee voted to report S 1094, amended to charge the Monetary Fund authorization to fiscal 1960. Sen. William Langer (R N.D.) went on record against the bill. Sen. George D. Aiken (R Vt.) said hearings had produced "no evidence to show that this (money) is needed" before fiscal 1960. "There may have been some politics" in the Committee's amendment charging the Monetary Fund subscription to fiscal 1960 but, Aiken said, "there may have been some politics on the other side, too."

The bill was reported March 18 (S Rept 109).

Floor Action

The Senate March 19 passed, by a 73-10 roll-call vote, the bill (S 1094) to increase the United States subscriptions to the Monetary Fund and the World Bank. Before passing the bill the Senate accepted, on a 58-25 roll-call vote, the committee amendment making the $1,375,000,000 authorization for the International Monetary Fund available in fiscal 1960. (For voting, see chart p. 402)

DEBATE -- March 19 -- Fulbright -- The Administration had not demonstrated that the authorization was needed before July 1 (the start of fiscal 1960). It would be "unreasonable" to add the money to the fiscal 1959 budget, "which is already at least $12 billion in deficit."

Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) -- Opposed the committee amendment, said the funds were needed as a matter of urgency.

House

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency, Subcommittee No. 1.

HEARINGS -- March 3-6 on HR 4452-53, to increase U.S. participation in the fund and bank.

Witnesses were Secretary Anderson, other Treasury Department officials, Under Secretary of State Dillon and John J. McCloy, former president of the World Bank. Committee Chairman Brent Spence (D Ky.) and the United States Council of the International Chamber of Commerce also made statements favorable to the bills.

ACTION -- The Committee March 18, reporting HR 4452 (H Rept 225), voted to charge the Monetary Fund money against the fiscal 1959 budget, in accordance with President Eisenhower's proposal.

Floor Action

The House March 25, by a 315-57 roll-call vote, passed HR 4452. Subsequently it vacated passage of its bill and passed the Senate bill (S 1094) with the House text substituted for the Senate-approved provisions. (For voting, see chart p. 354)

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

H.R. Gross (R Iowa) -- Bar the Monetary Fund increase until the fund's other 67 members increase their subscriptions; March 25. Standing vote, 22-72.

Wayne L. Hays (D Ohio) -- Make the $1,375,000,000 authorization to increase the International Monetary Fund subscription available in fiscal 1960, rather than fiscal 1959; March 25. Standing, 36-86.

Conference

REPORT -- Senate and House conferees June 4 met and reported a compromise version of S 1094 (H Rept 435). The conference bill went along with President Eisenhower's request to charge the Monetary Fund authorization to fiscal 1959. House conferees accepted a provision of the Senate's bill specifying that the entire $4.5 billion for the fund and bank was to be charged as a public debt transaction.

ACTION -- The House and Senate June 5, by voice votes, adopted the conference report.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- On Oct. 1 the directors of the World Bank ordered the establishment of an International Development Assn. (IDA) as an affiliate of the bank. The directors and finance ministers of 68 nations were in Washington attending the annual meetings of the World Bank, the Monetary Fund and the International Finance Corporation.

IDA would have a capital of $1 billion, with the U.S. subscribing $320 million and other countries putting in proportionate contributions. It would make long-term, low-interest loans to underdeveloped countries, repayable in part in the local currencies of those countries. The Senate in 1958 asked the Administration to study the IDA proposal, advanced by Sen. A.S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.). (1958 Almanac p. 256)

The United States National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Problems, of which Secretary Anderson is chairman, Aug. 15, recommended establishment of IDA and President Eisenhower supported it Sept. 28. "In our view," he told delegates to the three financial organizations, "no other mechanism can perform this task for the free world as well as" IDA.

BATTLE ACT AMENDMENT

S 1697 -- Reported by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (S Rept 599) Aug. 3, 1959.

● Passed by the Senate by voice vote Sept. 10; passed by a 49-40 roll-call vote Sept. 12 after a motion to reconsider the earlier vote was adopted. (See p. 445)

S 1697 would amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Control Act of 1951 (Battle Act) to give the President authority to approve economic aid to certain Communist-dominated countries if he deemed it important to national security. Following Senate passage the bill was referred to the House Foreign Affairs Committee, but it received no further action before Congress adjourned.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, S 1697:

Amended the Battle Act to permit the President, if he deemed it important to national security, to extend economic and financial aid under the Mutual Security Program, the lending operations of the Export-Import Bank, or the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act (PL 480) to any nation or area, other than the Soviet Union and Communist-held areas of the Far East, which exports armaments or strategic items to the Sino-Soviet bloc.

Background

The Battle Act, enacted during the Korean war, declared that "no military, economic or financial assistance shall be supplied to any nation unless it applies an embargo" on shipments of arms and strategic materials to all Soviet-dominated countries. Under the Act the United States and cooperating countries draw up lists of items which are placed under strategic trade controls. (1951 Almanac p. 211)

The Mutual Security Act of 1958, as sent to the Senate floor from the Foreign Relations Committee, contained a provision similar to S 1697. The provision was supported by the Administration until a few days before it was brought to a vote. Senate Minority Leader William F. Knowland (R Calif. 1946-59), however, opposed the provision and, following a GOP leadership conference with the President, told the Senate the Administration favored a separate bill to amend the Battle Act. Knowland then offered a successful floor amendment to delete the section. (1958 Almanac p. 186)

The Administration, both at the close of 1958 and early in 1959, indicated there was need for more leeway in giving foreign aid to Communist satellites "that are resisting Soviet domination." Although both Yugoslavia and Poland had been declared friendly nations eligible for limited aid under the surplus disposal program (PL 480) and the Mutual Security Program, Acting Secretary of State Christian A. Herter April 6 said "greater flexibility" was needed. He said the Battle Act should be amended to permit countries of the Soviet bloc to receive "financial assistance which cannot now be furnished," such as loans from the Export-Import Bank and from U.S.-owned balances of foreign currencies received under PL 480.

Herter's draft bill was introduced April 15 as S 1697 by Sens. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) and George D. Aiken (R Vt.).

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Foreign Relations.

ACTION -- Aug. 3 reported S 1697 (S Rept 599) and said although it was "fully aware of the importance of the policy change" underlying the amendment, it believed "any risks involved...will be far outweighed by the opportunities it opens to assist Communist-dominated nations peacefully to gain greater independence of action." It said the Battle Act was "still a necessary defensive measure" but that it "unduly restricts the ability of the United States to take useful actions in the complex struggle with world communism."

Floor Action

The Senate Sept. 12 passed S 1697 by a 49-40 roll-call vote. The bill had been passed Sept. 10 by voice vote, but subsequently a motion to reconsider the vote was filed at the request of Sen. Styles Bridges (R N.H.), a strong opponent of the measure. (For voting, see chart p. 445)

DEBATE -- Sept. 12 -- Bridges -- The bill deviated from the stated purposes of mutual security and is another example of Congress stripping itself of the control given it by the Constitution. Further repeal of the Battle Act could lead to a repetition of the pre-World War II situation in which the United States shipped steel and scrap iron to Japan.

George D. Aiken (R Vt.) -- The bill was requested by the President and would give the satellite countries of Eastern Europe "assurance that they would have a friend in the United States should they seek to divorce themselves from the Soviet orbit."

SOUTH ASIA MISSION

S Con Res 11 -- Reported, amended, by Senate Foreign Relations Committee July 28, 1959 (S Rept 594).

- Adopted by the Senate Sept. 11 by voice vote.

As sent to the House, S Con Res 11 expressed the sense of Congress that President Eisenhower should explore with other free nations the advisability of establishing an international mission to consult with South Asian governments on their economic problems.

The proposed mission would deal with economic development programs over the next five years in India, Pakistan, Burma, Afghanistan, Nepal and Ceylon. As originally introduced Feb. 19 by Sens. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) and John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.), the resolution pertained only to India. It was amended in Committee to cover other South Asian countries on the recommendation of the State Department, which felt that specifying India as an object of special concern might impose strains on India's relations with neighboring countries.

The resolution was referred to the House Foreign Affairs Committee Sept. 12. The Committee did not act on the measure in 1959.

BACKGROUND -- In its report on S Con Res 11 (S Rept 594) the Foreign Relations Committee said it felt the South Asian area "clearly merits a review of its economic requirements, because developments there in the next decade are likely to have a profound effect on the concept of individual freedom and hence they will be of vital concern to the United States."

The report emphasized that the proposed mission was not to be a permanent institution, that the resolution was "entirely free of any moral commitment that would oblige the United States to contribute large sums of money," and that the economic study should be participated in by "many of the free world's industrially advanced nations." The report said it was felt the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development also should participate, and that consideration should be given to "a possible role" for the United Nations Special Projects Fund.

HEALTH FOR PEACE

S J Res 41 -- Reported by Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee (S Rept 243) May 11, 1959.

- Passed, amended, by the Senate on a 63-17 roll-call vote May 20. (See p. 411)

The proposed "Health for Peace Act," introduced by Sen. Lister Hill (D Ala.) and 63 co-sponsors, called for establishment of an international medical research program, with a $50 million annual authorization. The program would be placed under the Public Health Service, headed by the Surgeon General, with the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare in general charge.

The measure received only limited Administration support, and the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee postponed any action on the bill until the 1960 session of Congress.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, the International Health and Medical Research Act of 1959:

Established a National Institute of International Health and Medical Research within the National Institutes of Health, and an 18-member National Advisory Council for the program, appointed by the HEW Secretary and under chairmanship of the Surgeon General.

Authorized administration of the program by the Surgeon General, under supervision of the HEW Secretary, and with the cooperation of other Government agencies.

Authorized an annual $50 million appropriation for the program.

Authorized the Advisory Council to make recommendations and review applications for financial grants.

Authorized the Surgeon General to encourage programs on causes, diagnosis, treatment, control and prevention of physical and mental diseases, and on rehabilitation of the handicapped, furthering them with financial grants to hospitals, universities and laboratories, loans of equipment, improvement of facilities and cooperation with world health groups.

Directed that the program be administered consistently with U.S. foreign policy, and that the Surgeon General submit to Congress a report at the beginning of each session.

Background

In introducing S J Res 41 on Feb. 2, Hill said its purpose was to implement domestically a policy statement in the Mutual Security Act of 1958 which said the United States should continue and strengthen "mutual efforts among the nations for research against diseases such as heart disease and cancer." The 1958 statement also invited the World Health Organization to initiate studies

"looking toward the strengthening of research and related programs...."

Hill introduced a resolution similar to S J Res 41 in the closing days of the 1958 session to give interested groups an opportunity to study the proposal and make suggestions for modifications.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Labor and Public Welfare.

HEARINGS -- Feb. 25-27, March 4 and March 10 on S J Res 41.

TESTIMONY -- March 10 -- HEW Secretary Arthur S. Flemming proposed dropping the $50 million authorization in favor of an "open end" authorization, under which Congress would provide whatever funds it considered necessary. Flemming said a specific $50 million authorization might create false hopes that the full sum would actually be appropriated each year.

He proposed that the funds go to the President as part of the special assistance section of the Mutual Security appropriation. Flemming said basic authority for the program should be vested in the President, not in HEW, since foreign policy was involved. He also said creation of a new NIH institute would "introduce undue rigidity into the structure of the program," and that some other administrative pattern might be more desirable. But Flemming said the Administration was "in accord with the purposes and objectives of this bill."

Backers of S J Res 41 opposed Flemming's proposals. Hill said it was a "matter of scientist-to-scientist, not government-to-government" and that he would "do everything in my power to make certain the institute (NIH) stays right in the bill."

Among those endorsing S J Res 41 were: Dr. Detlev W. Bronk, president of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research; Dr. Paul Dudley White, Boston, Mass., heart specialist; Dr. Howard A. Rusk, chairman of the rehabilitation department of New York University-Bellevue Medical Center; Dr. Gunnar Gundersen, president of the AMA; and Gen. Omar Bradley, representing a citizens' Committee on Health for Peace.

Advocating beginning the program on a small scale was John T. Conner, president of Merck & Co., New Jersey drug manufacturing firm.

ACTION -- The Committee May 11 reported S J Res 41 (S Rept 243) with amendments clarifying the program's administration. The report noted that during the hearings no one testified against the program and that support came from leading health associations and spokesmen for industry, public affairs and the health sciences. It said "an unselfish effort" by the United States to advance health sciences internationally "can be a potent instrument of peace and good will," but that the program "should not become obscured and confused with international policies."

Floor Action

The Senate May 20 passed S J Res 41 by a 63-17 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 411)

DEBATE -- May 20 -- Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) -- Opposed S J Res 41 because it "bypassed" the President and he feared the program would "grow like Jack's bean-stalk."

Allen J. Ellender (D La.) -- Would vote against the bill because, although its underlying purposes were good, its provisions were "too broad."

Hubert H. Humprey (D Minn.) -- The Administration is "myopically more concerned with low but neat figures in the budget" than with "the high costs of disease."

House

COMMITTEE -- Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

HEARINGS -- July 21-23 on bills similar to S J Res 41 (H J Res 361, 370). The House bills clarified and pointed up the intentions of the original Hill bill but did not comply with Administration requests that basic authority for the program be vested directly in the President and that an "open end authorization" be provided.

ACTION POSTPONED -- Chairman Oren Harris (D Ark.) Aug. 28 announced that the Committee would take no further action on the bills during the 1959 session, in keeping with its policy of taking up only emergency legislation as Congress neared adjournment. Harris Sept. 3 said the major problems were the cost of the program and the State Department's contention that it should be given control of the program.

ADMISSION OF ORPHANS

HR 6118 -- Reported by House Judiciary Committee (H Rept 291) April 23, 1959.
- Passed by the House by voice vote May 4.
- Reported, amended, by Senate Judiciary Committee (S Rept 475) July 7.
- Passed by the Senate by voice vote July 15.
- House agreed to Senate amendment, with an additional amendment, by voice vote July 16.
- Senate agreed by voice vote to House amendment Aug. 27.

PL 86-253 -- Signed into law Sept. 9.

HR 6118 extended Government programs for admission of tubercular aliens and certain alien orphans adopted by United States citizens. Congress added provisions to require investigation of adoptive parents with the intent of eliminating what Members termed "reprehensible practices" of black marketeering and misrepresentation in such adoptions.

PROVISIONS -- As it became law, HR 6118:

Extended through June 30, 1961 the Government's discretionary authority to admit tubercular aliens.

Extended through June 30, 1960 a program for non-quota admission of certain alien orphans adopted by U.S. citizens.

Required filing of a petition by prospective parents with the Attorney General, and his investigation of parental suitability before approval of adoption.

Background

Both the tubercular alien and alien orphan programs were authorized for two years by Congress in 1957 amendments to the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952. (1957 Almanac p. 670)

President Eisenhower in his January 1959 Budget Message recommended extending the programs, and the Justice Department recommended making the tubercular alien program permanent. The Department said it had operated satisfactorily and was both "humanitarian in nature and of aid in keeping family units together in meritorious cases."

Secretary Arthur S. Flemming of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare May 18 asked Congress to shift supervision of the alien orphans program from the Immigration Service (in Justice) to the Children's Bureau (in HEW) so adoption practices could be brought more into line with national adoption policies. Permanent extension of the program was urged May 20 by Assistant HEW Secretary Elliot L. Richardson and Katherine B. Oettinger, chief of the Children's Bureau, when they testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee's Immigration and Naturalization Subcommittee on various immigration proposals.

House

COMMITTEE -- Judiciary.

ACTION -- April 23 reported a bill (HR 6118 -- H Rept 291) authorizing a two-year extension of the tubercular alien program, with amendments modifying the 1957 authorization. The Committee said it preferred to give the program a longer trial period before making it permanent. Modifications authorized family units to travel together to the United States, instead of first requiring one member to establish permanent residence, and eliminated a 1957 requirement that the Attorney General report to Congress on each admission.

Floor Action

The House May 4 passed HR 6118 by voice vote, without debate, extending the tubercular alien admission program through June 30, 1961.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Judiciary.

ACTION -- July 7 reported HR 6118 with an amendment (S Rept 475) extending for one year, through June 30, 1960, the program for admission of alien orphans.

Floor Action

The Senate July 15 passed HR 6118 by voice vote, with the Committee amendment.

DEBATE -- July 15 -- Sens. Thomas C. Hennings Jr. (D Mo.), Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) and John A. Carroll (D Colo.) said Congress should establish some safeguards over the orphan program, especially against international black marketeering, before the one-year extension expired.

HOUSE, SENATE CONCURRENCE

The House July 16 agreed by voice vote to the Senate version of HR 6118, with an additional amendment requiring the Attorney General to investigate the suitability of adoptive parents and of their homes.

DEBATE -- July 16 -- Francis E. Walter (D Pa.) -- The House amendment should help "eradicate the malpractices which disturb us all." Without the "necessary safeguards," the Judiciary Committee believed the program should not be continued at all.

The Senate Aug. 27 agreed by voice vote to the House amendment, sending the bill to the White House.

Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) told the Senate the House amendment raised the question of whether the Attorney General's investigation should be carried out by the Justice Department's Immigration and Naturalization Service or the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, but that legally the Attorney General could utilize the services of any department he deemed appropriate. Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) said it was hoped "our remarks will have some effect and influence" on the Attorney General's office, leading to use of HEW and voluntary agencies.

SELF-EMPLOYED RETIREMENT

HR 10 -- Reported by House Ways and Means Committee (H Rept 64) Feb. 24, 1959.

- Passed by voice vote of the House March 16.

HR 10, which was rejected by the 85th Congress, worked its way half way through the 86th Congress by the end of the 1st session. When Congress adjourned, the measure rested with the Senate Finance Committee, which completed hearings on Aug. 11.

The bill would permit self-employed persons to defer payment of income taxes on portions of their income put into retirement funds. It was supported by such professional groups as the American Institute of Architects and the American Bar Assn. but opposed by the Administration on the grounds that it would result in a yearly revenue loss of $365 million.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 10:

Provided that a self-employed individual could deposit 10 percent of his income, or $2,500, whichever was less, into a retirement fund and deduct this amount from his taxable income.

Deferred payment of income tax on income put into a retirement fund until retirement.

Limited to $50,000 the total amount deductible for retirement purposes.

Provided that the individual must retire no earlier than age 65 and no later than age 70, thus permitting no deduction after age 70.

Required that payments (with certain exceptions) received from a retirement fund be included in the recipient's gross income for the taxable year in which received.

Background

The plan was advocated by the American Thrift Assn., a federation of business and professional organizations including the American Bar Assn., the American Institute of Accountants, the American Institute of Architects, the National Assn. of Real Estate Boards, the National Small Business Assn., the American Medical Assn. and other groups with a total combined membership of more than 500,000.

The 1959 bill was identical to a measure passed by the House in 1958 but rejected by the Senate when offered as an amendment to another bill. (1958 Almanac p. 159)

Supporters of the bill maintained HR 10 would:

- End the discrimination between employees who could join employer pension plans and self-employed persons who could not.
- Enable the self-employed to put aside money that ordinarily would be taxed away.

- Encourage professional men and other self-employed persons to operate individually instead of joining corporations because of pension advantages.
- Channel retirement payments into such savings institutions as banks, thereby making more money available for the Government and others to borrow.

However, the Treasury Department held that HR 10 would:

- Result in special tax privileges to a select high-income group (80 percent of the potential beneficiaries earn over $10,000 yearly, the Treasury said).
- Cost the Federal Government $365 million yearly in lost revenue.
- Enable such self-employed persons as doctors to subject part of their income to lower tax rates by postponing payment on it until after their earnings decreased.
- Ignore the advantage self-employed persons had in not being forced into early retirement by company rules.
- Discriminate against some 30 million employees who were not eligible for employer pension plans.

House

COMMITTEE -- Ways and Means.

ACTION -- Feb. 24 reported HR 10 (H Rept 64).

Secretary of the Treasury Robert B. Anderson March 14 urged rejection of the bill.

Floor Action

The House March 16 passed HR 10 by voice vote.

DEBATE -- March 16 -- Eugene J. Keogh (D N.Y.), chief sponsor of the bill -- Denied HR 10 would open a tax loophole for the well-to-do. Said it was a long-delayed effort to help approximately 7.1 million self-employed and would put such persons on an equal footing with 18 million workers covered by private pension plans financed by tax-exempt contributions from employers.

John W. Byrnes (R Wis.) -- Opposed the bill, said it would provide no relief for millions of other persons who contributed to the Social Security System and were not permitted to deduct such contributions from income taxes.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Finance.

HEARINGS -- June 17, 18, July 15, Aug. 11.

TESTIMONY -- June 17 -- David A. Lindsay, assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury, said approval of HR 10 would lead to attempts to get similar tax privileges for employees who are not covered by company pension plans or who are inadequately covered by them. He said the Government could ill afford the estimated yearly revenue loss of $365 million.

Peter Henle, research director of the AFL-CIO, said HR 10 represented "special interest legislation providing tax benefits for a relatively few."

Ross L. Malone, president of the American Bar Assn., said the number of lawyers employed by companies had been increasing steadily because of retirement advantages and other fringe benefits provided by corporations.

Aug. 11 -- Sen. Frank E. Moss (D Utah) said he had received letters supporting the legislation from "self-employed farm folks, small retailers, lawyers, dentists, doctors and many others."

CORPORATE, EXCISE TAXES

HR 7523 -- Reported June 4, 1959 by House Ways and Means Committee (H Rept 436).
- Passed by the House June 8 by voice vote.
- Reported, amended, June 24 by Senate Finance Committee (S Rept 427).
- Passed, amended, by the Senate June 25 by a 79-0 roll-call vote. (See p. 420)
- Conference report (H Rept 587) agreed to June 29 by voice vote of the House and by a 57-35 Senate roll-call vote. (See p. 421)

PL 86-75 -- Signed into law June 30.

HR 7523, the Tax Rate Extension Act of 1959, extended for another year corporate, liquor, cigarette and automobile excise tax rates. It also reduced the tax on passenger transportation and repealed the tax on local telephone service, both effective July 1, 1960 -- barring a change of mind by Congress. Adoption of the conference report by both houses on June 29 enabled the President to sign the bill into law June 30, one day before the tax rates would have dropped.

Controversy arose between the House and Senate, not over the tax extensions, which were requested by President Eisenhower, but over Senate amendments to the bill. Two of these, as recommended by the Senate Finance Committee, would have repealed the 10 percent tax on passenger transportation, effective Aug. 1, 1959, and on telephone, telegraph and related communications services, effective July 1, 1960. A subsequent House-Senate compromise reduced the transportation tax to 5 percent and limited the communications tax cut to local telephone service taxes only; in the final bill neither cut was to take effect until July 1, 1960.

Several other amendments designed to change the Government's tax structure were proposed by a group of liberal Democrats during Senate consideration of the bill. The only one accepted by the Senate was an amendment by Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.) to repeal the 4 percent tax credit on dividend income. It later was dropped by the conference committee. The tax credit was proposed by President Eisenhower and enacted by Congress, over considerable opposition, as part of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. (1954 Almanac, p. 476)

The rejected Senate amendments would have: denied income tax deductions for entertainment expenses exceeding $1,000 (Joseph S. Clark -- D Pa.); reduced oil and gas depletion allowances (Paul H. Douglas -- D Ill.); diverted certain highway user taxes from the general revenues into the Highway Trust Fund (Albert Gore -- D Tenn.); raised gasoline taxes (Richard L. Neuberger -- D Ore.). The gasoline tax increase was later provided in the Highway Construction Bill. (See story p. 285)

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, HR 7523:

Continued until July 1, 1960, the 52 percent tax rate on corporations and certain mutual insurance companies.

Continued until July 1, 1960, the excise rates set by the Revenue Act of 1951 on distilled spirits, beer, wine, cigarettes, passenger cars and auto accessories.

Reduced from 10 percent to 5 percent the tax on passenger transportation, effective July 1, 1960.

Repealed, effective July 1, 1960, the 10 percent tax on local telephone service.

Background

Extension of the tax rates, first imposed during the Korean War in 1951, was requested by the President in his January 1959 Budget Message. Congress had extended the rates on a year-to-year basis since March 31, 1954, when they were first due to expire.

Without the extension of the corporate, automobile, cigarette and liquor taxes, the Government would have faced a revenue loss of $3.1 billion on a full-year basis. Corporation taxes would have dropped to 47 percent; the 10 percent Federal excise tax on new cars and the 8 percent tax on auto parts and accessories would have dropped to 7 percent and 5 percent, respectively; tax on cigarettes would have dropped one cent per pack; on liquor $1.50 a gallon; on beer, $1 a barrel.

TRANSPORTATION, PHONE REVENUES

The tax cuts on transportation and telephone service finally agreed to would not affect the budget until fiscal 1961. In fiscal 1958 local telephone service taxes brought in $370,810,000 and the 10 percent tax was estimated to bring in $430 million in fiscal 1960. Passenger transportation taxes brought in $225,809,000 in fiscal 1958 and were expected to amount to $235 million in fiscal 1960.

The Tax Rate Extension Act of 1958 included a provision which repealed excise taxes on freight transportation, including oil by pipeline. The Senate in 1958 also voted to repeal the 10 percent tax on passenger travel, but this amendment was rejected by the Senate-House conference committee. (1958 Almanac p. 145)

House

COMMITTEE -- Ways and Means.

HEARINGS -- No hearings on the bill were held, but Administration officials testified in executive session.

ACTION -- June 4 reported HR 7523 (H Rept 436).

The Committee's report said the extension of current tax rates was "essential because of the budgetary situation in the fiscal year 1960." The President's Budget had forecast a $70 million surplus. The Committee report said the latest estimates of the Treasury Department showed that tax receipts for fiscal 1960 would amount to $77.7 billion, or approximately $500 million more than January budget estimates. The Department had increased by $900 million its estimate of corporate revenue but decreased by $400 million its expected individual income tax payments. Revenue estimates, however, still included an expected $690 million from the proposed 1½-cent motor fuel tax increase and $350 million from proposed postal rate increases. (Congress later voted a 1-cent gasoline tax increase but took no action on the postal request.)

The Committee reportedly voted 22-3 in favor of the bill, with Reps. Thaddeus M. Machrowicz (D Mich.), Noah M. Mason (R Ill.) and James B. Utt (R Calif.) opposed.

Floor Action

The House June 8 passed HR 7523 by voice vote after rejecting, also by voice vote, a motion by Rep. Noah M. Mason (R Ill.) to recommit the bill. HR 7523 was considered under a rule prohibiting amendments from the floor.

PROVISIONS -- As sent to the Senate, HR 7523:

Continued until July 1, 1960, the 52 percent tax rate on corporations and mutual insurance companies.

Continued until the same date the excise rates set by the Revenue Act of 1951 on distilled spirits, beer, wine, cigarettes, passenger cars and auto accessories.

DEBATE -- June 8 -- Mason -- These taxes, as was "stated in the contract made with our taxpayers, were to be but temporary; they should be wartime taxes...but have just simply run on and on and on forever."

Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.), chairman of the Ways and Means Committee -- "We should not reduce taxes...at the expense of further deficit financing or the creation of more (public) debt." Tax reductions should come when there has been "an accumulation of surpluses by reducing (Federal) expenditures...."

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Finance.

HEARING -- June 23, at which Sens. Douglas, Clark, McCarthy, William Proxmire (D Wis.), Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.), and George A. Smathers (D Fla.), Maurice Stans, director of the Budget Bureau, and Donald A. Lindsay, assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury, testified.

ACTION -- June 24 reported HR 7523 (S Rept 427). The Committee added to the bill amendments to repeal the 10 percent tax on passenger transportation, effective Aug. 1, 1959, and to repeal the 10 percent tax on communications services, effective July 1, 1960.

Floor Action

The Senate June 25 passed HR 7523, with amendments, by a 79-0 roll-call vote. An amendment by Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.) to repeal the 4 percent tax credit on dividend income was agreed to on a 47-31 roll-call vote. The Senate also accepted, by a 42-36 roll call, an amendment by Russell B. Long (D La.) to increase Federal public assistance payments to the states, at an estimated cost to the Federal Government of $142 million yearly. By a 52-26 roll call, the Senate tabled a motion by Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) to reconsider the earlier voice vote by which it accepted a committee amendment repealing the 10 percent transportation tax.

On other roll calls, the Senate rejected: 34-44, an amendment to deny income tax deductions for entertainment expenses exceeding $1,000; 21-54, an amendment reducing, on a graduated scale, oil and gas depletion allowances; 32-47, an amendment to divert certain highway user taxes from the general revenues into the Highway Trust Fund; 33-46, an amendment to raise the motor fuel tax to 4½ cents per gallon until July 1961. (For voting see charts p. 420, 421)

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.) -- Repeal the 4 percent tax credit on dividend income from domestic corporations; June 25. Roll-call vote, 47-31.

Russell B. Long (D La.) -- Increase the Federal share in public assistance payments to the states; June 25. Roll call, 42-36.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) -- Deny deductions for certain entertainment, gift and travel expenses in connection with a trade or business; June 25. Roll call, 34-44.

William Proxmire (D Wis.) -- Provide for withholding at their source, income taxes on interest and dividends; June 25. Voice.

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) -- Reduce, on a graduated scale ranging from 27.5 percent to 15 percent, depletion allowances on oil and gas wells; June 25. Roll call, 21-54.

Ralph W. Yarborough (D Texas) -- Substitute for Douglas amendment (above) a modified amendment imposing import taxes on petroleum and petroleum products except those imported from Canada and Mexico; June 25. Standing.

Albert Gore (D Tenn.) -- Divert from the general revenues to the Highway Trust Fund certain percentages of taxes on trucks, buses, trailers, lubricating oils and automobile parts; June 25. Roll call, 32-47.

Richard L. Neuberger (D Ore.) -- Substitute for Gore amendment (above) an amendment to raise the motor fuel tax from 3 cents to 4½ cents per gallon until July 1, 1961; June 25. Roll call, 33-46.

Philip A. Hart (D Mich.) -- Remove the 3 percent surtax on automobiles imposed during the Korean war, leaving the auto tax at 7 percent; June 25. Standing.

DEBATE -- June 25 -- Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.) -- The current 4 percent tax credit for dividend income "gives special favor to those in the higher income tax brackets. I have no question this was in the mind of the Secretary of the Treasury (George M. Humphrey) when he proposed it."

Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) -- Repeal of the passenger transportation tax will entail a revenue loss of $250 million. If the tax is repealed, "next year Congress will be asked to repeal...all the other excise taxes" imposed during the Korean war. With a defense budget of $40 billion, "no one can convince me we are living under the conditions...that prevail in peacetime."

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) -- If the oil and gas industry does not accept a moderate amendment reducing depletion allowances on a graduated scale, "it may in the future be compelled to take a more rigorous amendment."

Albert Gore (D Tenn.) -- His amendment to divert to the Highway Trust Fund some additional highway user taxes "would provide that $964 million -- of the more than $1.5 billion" in highway user taxes currently not being used for highways -- could be used for interstate highway construction.

Richard L. Neuberger (D Ore.) -- To adopt Gore's amendment would "be robbing Peter to pay Paul.... In this particular situation the President has been correct in his recommendation" for a temporary increase in the motor fuel tax to pay for highway construction.

Conference

A Senate-House conference committee June 26 reported a compromise version of HR 7523 (H Rept 587).

Conferees rejected Senate-approved amendments that would have removed, beginning Aug. 1, the 10 percent passenger travel tax and repealed, effective July 1, 1960, the 10 percent tax on communications services. They also rejected Senate provisions repealing the 4 percent tax credit on dividend income and increasing Federal public assistance payments to the states. Instead, the conference version provided that, effective July 1, 1960, the passenger tax rate would be cut to 5 percent and the tax on local telephone service repealed, unless extension of current rates were voted before then.

HOUSE AND SENATE ACTION

The House June 29 agreed to the conference report by voice vote. The Senate June 29, after six hours of debate, accepted the conference report on a 57-35 roll call. (For voting, see chart p. 421)

HOUSE DEBATE -- June 29 -- Thomas B. Curtis (R Mo.) -- The Senate amendments to the bill, though revised, are not germane. "The Constitution provides that the House is the only place where a tax measure can originate." "Sometime,...if we are going to protect this very basic prerogative...we are just going to have to... refuse to agree even if it takes until the snow flies...to establish this point."

David S. King (D Utah) -- "I object to the manner in which the proposal (to cut certain taxes in 1960) comes to us." There were no hearings and "I feel that this is hardly the time to start talking about reduced taxes."

SENATE DEBATE -- June 29 -- Russell B. Long (D La.), the only conferee who did not sign the report -- Senate adoption of the report "would set a precedent which would plague the Senate for many years to come.... The House has a right to deny themselves the right to offer amendments...but (it) has no right to do that to the Senate.... The House conferees would not consider, even in a spirit of compromise, any of the amendments the Senate had adopted."

Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) -- The Senate managers fought hard for the Senate version but the House conferees remained "adamant."

George A. Smathers (D Fla.) -- By rejecting repeal of the 10 percent passenger transportation tax, and instead reducing it to 5 percent on July 1, 1960, the conferees in effect told the Senate: "Instead of giving you the whole bag of candy now, we will give you a lollipop next year." But the choice was either to accept their terms or to get no tax cut at all.

Cabaret Tax

The House Ways and Means Committee Aug. 10 reported (H Rept 817) and the House Sept. 1 passed, by a 209-4 teller vote, a bill (HR 2164) to reduce the 20 percent cabaret tax to 10 percent. It was opposed by the Treasury Department on the grounds that it would cut revenue by $21 million a year.

The bill's sponsor, Aime J. Forand (D R.I.), said the term "cabaret tax" was a misnomer, that it would be more accurate to call it a tax on musicians and entertainers because it is applied to any establishment where music, entertainment or dancing is permitted in the same room in which food is served. Dance halls, however, qualify under the 10 percent admission tax law, which applies only to admissions costing more than $1. Forand listed as supporters of the bill the American Federation of Musicians (AFL-CIO), the National Federation of Music Clubs, the American Hotel and the National Restaurant Assns. and the Hotel and Restaurant Employees' and Bartenders' International Union (AFL-CIO).

Similar legislation was passed by the House in 1954 and 1957 but was not approved by the Senate. (1957 Almanac p. 619)

DEBATE -- Sept. 1 -- John V. Lindsay (R N.Y.) -- Representing "the single area in our Nation most affected by this unfair tax," he said it had "severely injured the entertainment industry."

Charles A. Vanik (D Ohio), one of the two Congressmen who spoke against the bill -- This is "one of the least important" taxes; the bill may not "create or save a single job" but merely increase cabaret profits.

LIFE INSURANCE TAXES

HR 4245 -- Reported by House Ways and Means Committee Feb. 13, 1959 (H Rept 34).

- Passed by the House, by voice vote, Feb. 18.
- Reported, amended, by Senate Finance Committee May 14 (S Rept 291).
- Passed, amended, by voice vote of the Senate May 19.
- Conference report (H Rept 520) agreed to by voice votes of the House and Senate June 10.

P. L. 86-69 -- Signed into law June 25.

Congress in 1959 enacted a new, permanent formula for taxing the income of life insurance companies to replace a stop-gap formula in force since 1955. The legislation was expected to yield revenues of about $500 million on the industry's income for 1958, the first year in which part of the new formula would apply. By comparison, the Treasury collected only $297 million on 1957 income under the temporary formula then in effect. The legislation, which the Treasury Department had sought since 1958, met President Eisenhower's budget request for a new formula that would yield $500 million in revenues from 1958 income.

PROVISIONS -- As signed by the President, the Life Insurance Company Income Tax Act of 1959 (HR 4245):

Established a three-phase formula for taxing a portion of net investment income and, for the first time, underwriting profits and capital gains.

Allowed, as a deduction from investment income, an amount equal to the company's own average earned rate for the last five years or the current earnings rate, whichever is lower.

Allowed a "small business" deduction equal to 10 percent of net investment income, up to a maximum of $25,000.

Provided, for new companies, an eight-year carryforward of net operating losses for each of the first five years of existence.

Extended to owners of life insurance stock the $50 dividend deduction and 4 percent dividend tax credit given to other stockholders in 1954.

Background

A satisfactory formula for taxing life insurance companies had been sought for many years. The problem was to define taxable income, since the reserves needed to meet the claims of policyholders are built up with the aid of returns on invested premiums. A complicating factor was the difference between mutual and stock company operations. Mutual are theoretically owned by their policyholders, much like cooperatives, and regularly rebate surplus income from investments and operations. The profits of stock companies, on the other hand, are paid out as dividends to stockholders. Although the 165 mutual companies are outnumbered about 7 to 1 by stock companies, they own three-fourths of the industry's assets.

In 1958, Congress agreed reluctantly to extend a temporary formula first applied in 1955 but insisted that the Treasury come forward with a permanent plan before another year passed. (1958 Almanac p. 266)

The 1955 law provided that companies might deduct 87.5 percent of the first $1 million in net investment income, and 85 percent of any higher amount, to meet policy and other reserve requirements. Thus only the remaining 12.5 to 15 percent of net investment income was taxable.

In 1957, the life insurance industry as a whole took in $14.8 billion in premiums, $3.3 billion in investment income, and $1.2 billion in other income, for a total of $19.3 billion. The net operating gain, after payment of all policy dividends and refunds to policyholders, was $1.1 billion. But the industry's Federal income tax liability of $297 million amounted to about 26 percent of net operating gain, or one-half the corporate tax rate. The short-fall resulted, in large part, from the fact that the industry as a whole needed only about 70 percent, instead of 85 percent, of its net investment income to meet reserve requirements.

Another reason for the Treasury's interest in establishing a new formula for taxing life insurance companies was that neither the 1955 law nor any of its predecessors touched so-called underwriting profits. These may accrue from a variety of sources and tend to be larger with stock companies than with mutual companies, which traditionally rebate to policyholders, in the form of dividends, a portion of surplus earnings. In specialty operations, such as the underwriting of short-term credit life insurance, these profits may be substantial, yet escape tax altogether.

Finally, there was the fact that the tax treatment of life insurance companies had encouraged the creation of companies for no other purpose than to avoid taxes. Although the evidence is conjectural, industry sources believe that this explains, in large part, the growth of the number of life insurance companies in Texas, from 118 in 1950 to 338 in 1957. Wealthy individuals who placed their assets in a stock company which had to pay tax on only 15 percent of its net investment income would derive sizable tax benefits.

In April 1958, Treasury Secretary Robert B. Anderson proposed a permanent method of taxing life insurance companies. The proposal, on which the House Ways and Means Internal Revenue Taxation Subcommittee held hearings in November 1958, formed the basis for the 1959 bill.

House

COMMITTEE -- Ways and Means.

ACTION -- Feb. 13 reported a bill (HR 4245 -- H Rept 34) prescribing a new life insurance tax formula.

The provisions of the Committee bill conformed to a Treasury Department plan to increase the Federal tax on the life companies' income from investments (earnings from rentals, dividends, interest, etc.) and, at the same time, to tap the previously tax-exempt revenue from premium payments (underwriting income). The regular 52 percent corporate tax rate would be levied on an estimated 20 to 30 percent of investment income, as compared to 15 percent under the 1955 law, and on about half of the underwriting income.

Under the bill, insurance companies would get an exemption from taxes on income from pension plan and group annuity reserves, to enable them to compete in the pension field with banks and trust companies.

HR 4245 proposed a three-phase formula based on a total income approach. Under phase 1, companies would pay tax on an estimated 20 to 30 percent of their net investment income, with the amount determined in large part by the spread between their assumed and actual earnings rates. Under phase 2, they would be taxed, in addition, on one-half of the difference between net gain from operations and investment income taxable under phase 1. Under phase 3, first to be applied on 1959 income, the remaining portion of any net gain from operations would be taxable when distributed, as in dividends to stockholders, or when the cumulative amount exceeded 25 percent of reserves or 60 percent of premiums for the taxable year. Net capital gains also would be taxed, beginning in 1959.

The Committee estimated the effect of the 1955 formula and of HR 4245 on the 1958 income of mutual and stock companies, as follows (dollar amounts in millions):

	Mutual Companies		Stock Companies		Total
	Amount	Percent	Amount	Percent
1955 law	$239	75%	$80	25%	$319
HR 4245
Phase 1	379	75	126	25	505
Phase 2	12	30	28	70	40
Totals	$391	72%	$154	28%	$545

In a statement of "supplemental views," Republican members of the Committee expressed concern over the "economic impact" of the new formula. They pointed out that state taxes on life insurance premiums amount to $300 million a year. Higher taxes, they said, would decrease public interest in the savings features of life insurance while increasing "the advantage of the social security system over voluntary individual protection offered by life insurance companies." They warned that "public awareness of this differential in cost will most certainly lead to increased demand for larger social security benefits."

Floor Action

The House Feb. 18 passed HR 4245 by voice vote. Passage of the measure, which was considered under a closed rule prohibiting floor amendments, came after the House had rejected, also by voice vote, a motion by Rep. Thomas B. Curtis (R Mo.) to recommit the bill to the Ways and Means Committee. Curtis and other GOP members of the Committee wanted further study of the bill's "economic impact." HR 4245 had Administration approval.

The Committee estimated that HR 4245 would produce $545 million on the 1958 income of life insurance companies, and $585 million on 1959 income. By contrast, the Treasury collected only $297 million on 1957 income under a temporary formula which, if extended, would have yielded $319 million on 1958 income.

The $226 million increase (between the temporary formula and HR 4245) in the companies' estimated 1958 tax amounted to 70 percent. About $186 million of the increase was attributable to changes in the method of computing "free" investment income, raising the taxable portion from a flat 15 percent to an amount ranging from 20 to 30 percent. The remaining $40 million of the increased tax would be paid on so-called underwriting profits, one-half of which would be taxed for the first time.

PROVISIONS -- As sent to the Senate, the Life Insurance Company Income Tax Act of 1959 (HR 4245):

Provided that in computing net investment income, over and above the amount needed to meet reserve and other contract liability, the deduction be determined on an individual company basis, giving weight to its actual rate of earnings as well as its assumed rate.

Defined underwriting income subject to tax as one-half of the difference between gain or loss from total operations and the taxable portion of investment income. (The other one-half also would be taxed when paid out to shareholders, when voluntarily segregated and held for shareholder benefit, or when the cumulative amount exceeded 25 percent of reserves or 60 percent of premiums for the taxable year.)

Provided that net losses from underwriting be offset in full against taxable investment income.

Allowed a special "small business" deduction equal to 5 percent of investment income up to a maximum of $25,000.

Established a three-year schedule for arriving at full exemption of investment income allocable to qualified pension fund reserves.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Finance.

HEARINGS -- March 3-19 on HR 4245.

ACTION -- May 14 reported the bill (S Rept 291) after approving a series of amendments that had the effect of reducing the total tax yield on 1958 insurance industry income to about $500 million.

The Committee made no change in the basic three-phase approach of HR 4245, but it revised the method of computing the deduction rate on investment income, making it the individual company's own earned rate averaged over the last five years. The House had endorsed a method of averaging the company's earned rate with an assumed rate (the company's own or the industry's averaged assumed rate). The effect of the change would be to tax about 22 percent of net investment income, instead of amounts ranging from 20 to 30 percent.

Floor Action

The Senate May 19 passed by voice vote and sent to conference an amended version of HR 4245 that contained the Finance Committee amendments.

In asking the Senate to approve the bill as amended, Finance Committee Chairman Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) produced a telegram endorsing the Committee's version, signed by 34 companies holding more than 70 percent of the assets of all domestic life insurance firms.

During the debate, William Proxmire (D Wis.), John J. Williams (R Del.) and other advocates of general tax reform said they had considered offering "loophole-plugging, revenue-raising amendments" but had not done so in view of the urgent need for the insurance tax bill.

Conference

REPORT -- Senate-House conferees June 9 reported a compromise version of HR 4245 (H Rept 520). House conferees accepted most of the Senate's 60 amendments. The final version was expected to yield revenues of about $500 million on the life insurance industry's 1958 income.

ACTION -- The House and Senate June 10 agreed to the conference report by voice votes and without debate.

CQ Fact Sheet On Court-Curbing Legislation

CONGRESSIONAL VIEW OF SUPREME COURT IMPROVED IN 1959

Proposals to reverse specific Supreme Court decisions or to limit the Court's powers made relatively little headway in 1959, in sharp contrast to 1958, when far-reaching Court-curb measures failed of passage by only a few votes. (1958 Almanac p. 287)

Three reasons for the Congressional change of climate were frequently cited: the influx of "pro-Court" northern Democrats into the Senate following the 1958 election; a series of Court decisions giving the states wider scope on taxation and other matters; and two major security rulings (Uphaus and Barenblatt, see below) reducing fears that the Court was interfering with government attempts to combat subversive activities.

In 1959, two bills reversing specific Court decisions were enacted into law -- one dealing with the labor "no man's land," the other with state taxation of interstate business. In addition, the House passed five bills reversing or clarifying specific Court decisions, and one bill limiting application of the Federal preemption doctrine, but none reached the Senate floor. No omnibus Court-curb bill reached the floor or won committee approval in either chamber.

Following is a summary of Congressional action in 1959. Page flags are to this volume.

"No Man's Land" -- Beginning with its creation in 1935, the National Labor Relations Board refused to handle certain small labor disputes involving interstate businesses over which Federal labor law gave it jurisdiction. Such cases involved firms doing less than a specified dollar volume of business annually. In 1957, in the Guss case, the Supreme Court ruled that state labor relations agencies and state courts, which had been taking jurisdiction over disputes refused by the NLRB, had no right to do so. The Court said the Federal Government had preempted jurisdiction. This created a jurisdictional "no man's land." Congress closed the gap in 1959. A provision of the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act (PL 86-257) gave state labor relations agencies and state courts express power to take jurisdiction over labor disputes the NLRB declined to handle. (See p. 156)

Interstate Taxation -- President Eisenhower Sept. 14 signed into law (PL 86-272) a bill (S 2524) clarifying four 1959 Supreme Court actions permitting the states to tax interstate businesses on portions of their net income attributable to their operations in the state. The cases involved were the Portland Cement case, the Stockham Valves case, the Brown-Forman case and the International Shoe case. PL 272, cleared by Congress Sept. 3, was intended as a temporary solution to the interstate taxation problem, pending further congressional study. The measure permitted a state to tax a firm if it maintained a substantial place of business in the state, but not if it only solicited orders in the state, to be filled from outside the state, through its own salesmen or a local agent. (See p. 280)

Federal Preemption, State Sedition Laws -- The House June 24, by a 225-192 roll-call vote, passed (as it had in 1958) the states' rights "anti-preemption" bill (HR 3) sponsored by Rules Committee Chairman Howard W. Smith (D Va.). One of the bill's two provisions dealt with the right of the courts to strike down state laws on the grounds the Federal Government had preempted the legislative area involved, to the exclusion of the states. For several years Smith and others had charged that the Federal courts were misapplying the preemption doctrine, inferring Congressional intention to take over (preempt) a field of legislation where no such intention existed or was stated. The Guss case (see above), creating a labor "no man's land," the Cloverleaf Butter case (1942), preventing state regulation of certain foods because Congress had preempted the field in the Pure Food and Drug Act, and the Nelson case (1956), striking down portions of state sedition laws punishing subversive activities against the Federal Government, were cited most often as examples. The first provision of HR 3 barred courts from invalidating state laws under the preemption doctrine unless Congress had stated specifically its intention to take over the field in question, or unless the state law and a Federal law were in irreconcilable conflict. This provision was opposed by the Administration.

The second provision dealt with the Nelson case alone. It gave states express permission to pass and enforce sedition laws punishing subversive activities against the Federal Government. It was endorsed by the Administration.

In the Senate, HR 3 never came to the floor. An identical Senate bill (S 3) was covered in the Judiciary Internal Security Subcommittee hearings in April and May, but did not get Subcommittee approval. (See p. 208)

A separate bill (HR 2368) covering the Nelson case alone was reported (H Rept 432) June 3 by the House Judiciary Committee but did not reach the floor. Corresponding Senate bills (S 294, 1299) did not get Internal Security Subcommittee approval. The Supreme Court's June 8, 1959 Uphaus case decision, decided 5-4, making clear that the Nelson case did not prevent a state from investigating and punishing subversion directed against the state itself, was probably a contributing factor. (See p. 208)

Smith Act -- The Supreme Court June 17, 1957 ruled in the Yates case that the 1940 Smith Act did not outlaw advocacy of forcible overthrow of the Government as an abstract doctrine, but only as an incitement to action. The Court also ruled that the term "organize," as used in the Smith Act's prohibition against organizing a group advocating forcible overthrow of the Government, referred only to the initial act of bringing it into being and not to continued organizational activities like recruiting. For the American Communist party, the Court held, the act of organization had taken place in 1945, when the Communist Political Assn. was dissolved and the party brought into being. Consequently, Communist leaders could be prosecuted under the "organize" provision of the Smith Act only if they had participated in the 1945 organization of the party.

The House March 2 passed HR 2369 (H Rept 39), defining "organize" as covering continuing activities such as recruitment of members, teaching of classes and regrouping of units, regardless of how long they took place after the initial creation of the party. A provision corresponding to HR 2369 was included in a bill (S 2652) approved Sept. 7 by the Senate Judiciary Internal Security Subcommittee. S 2652, however, was still before the full Judiciary Committee when the 1959 session ended. (See p. 210)

No action was taken in either chamber on a proposal (S 1305) to make advocacy of forcible overthrow of the Government a crime even if it was not aimed at inciting to action. At the Internal Security Subcommittee hearings in April-May, Deputy Attorney General Lawrence E. Walsh opposed S 1305.

Passports -- The House Sept. 8, by a 371-18 roll-call vote, passed a bill (HR 9069) dealing with the Supreme Court's June 16, 1958 Kent case ruling. The Court held 5-4 that Congress had never given the State Department authority to deny passports to individuals because of their "beliefs or associations," including Communist party membership. HR 9069 gave the President authority to declare various areas off-limits for travel by U.S. nationals, and gave the State Department power to deny a passport to anyone linked with the Communist movement since Jan. 1, 1951, if his presence abroad would endanger U.S. security. In the Senate, three different committees held passport bill hearings -- Foreign Relations, Government Operations and Judiciary Internal Security. No bill was reported or reached the floor, although a passport provision similar to HR 9069 was included in the omnibus measure (S 2652) approved by the Internal Security Subcommittee Sept. 7. (See p. 210)

Detention of Prisoners -- The House July 7, by a 262-138 roll-call vote, passed a bill (HR 4957) to reverse the effects of the Supreme Court's June 24, 1957 decision in the Mallory case. The bill provided that a confession or other evidence obtained from a suspect in the period between his arrest and arraignment could not be barred as Federal court evidence in a criminal case solely because there had been delay in arraigning the suspect. It also required police, before questioning a suspect, to advise him he need not answer and that what he said might be used against him. In the Mallory case, the Court ruled that when police delayed unnecessarily in arraigning a suspect, the delay constituted illegal detention, and evidence that was the fruit of illegal detention could not, under the McNabb rule (1943), be admitted in Federal courts. In the Senate, two bills (S 525, 1893) on the Mallory ruling were referred to the Judiciary Committee, but it took no action. (See p. 211)

Deportation Appeals -- The House July 6, by voice vote, passed a bill (HR 2807) setting up uniform procedures for Federal court review of deportation and exclusion orders issued by the Department of Justice. In most cases, the bill permitted such review only once and only by a petition for a writ of habeas corpus or an appeal to a Federal circuit court. Sponsor Francis E. Walter (D Pa.) said the bill would prevent aliens from filing repeated appeals solely for the purpose of delaying valid and justified expulsion from the U.S. The President, in his Jan. 19 Budget Message, had repeated an earlier request for the legislation. (1957 Almanac p. 63) In 1958 the House but not the Senate passed a bill similar to HR 2807.

The June 2 House Judiciary Committee report (H Rept 423) said Supreme Court decisions in the Rubinstein (1954), Pedreiro (1955) and Shung (1956) cases permitted aliens such broad latitude to seek declaratory judgments in any Federal court against Justice Department orders that they were able to stall deportation in some cases as long as seven years. In minority views, Reps. Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) and Roland V. Libonati (D Ill.) said Government records showed dilatory use of deportation appeals were made by only 37 of some 200,000 aliens ordered out of the country since 1947.

Under the bill, an alien under deportation order could get a court review only by appeal to a Federal circuit court (with a few minor exceptions) filed within six months of the order; if he were being held in custody, he could also seek review through a habeas corpus writ to any Federal court. An alien under exclusion order could get a court review only if in custody and only through a habeas corpus writ. No Federal court could grant review under the above procedures if the case had already been reviewed by another Federal court, if the alien had left the country or if he had not exhausted his administrative remedies. If in any of the court proceedings above the alien raised new and substantial claims to nationality, he could get a separate trial on the issue. There was no Senate action.

Habeas Corpus Writs -- The House July 29, by voice vote, passed an amended bill (HR 3216 -- H Rept 548) to limit the use in Federal courts of habeas corpus writs for review of state court convictions. The chief aim of the bill was to prevent prisoners from making repeated pleas for writs, using the same facts but varying the pleas slightly on each new petition. Under the bill, a Federal court would not be permitted to grant habeas corpus to a state prisoner if he had previously been refused habeas corpus by any Federal court, or if the Supreme Court had adjudicated the prisoner's case under a proceeding not involving habeas corpus. A writ could be granted, however, if the prisoner presented new and substantial evidence he could not have presented before. (Before it was amended, the bill also would have denied habeas corpus if the Supreme Court simply had refused to hear the prisoner's appeal from a state court decision. In this it would have partially reversed the 1953 Brown v. Allen decision.)

The bill also set up a procedure whereby a state prisoner's petition for habeas corpus would normally be heard by a three-judge Federal court whose decision would be appealable only to the U.S. Supreme Court within 30 days. The bill as passed was supported by the Judicial Conference of the U.S. and the Attorney General. There was no Senate action. (1958 Almanac p. 288)

Industrial Security -- The Supreme Court June 29, 1959, in an 8-1 decision in the Greene case, ruled that neither Congress by legislation nor the President by executive action had ever given the Defense Department authority to classify the employees of a defense contractor as security risks without affording them "the safeguards of confrontation and cross-examination." The ruling in effect voided the Government's use of secret informers in the industrial security program. The House Un-American Activities Committee Sept. 2 reported a bill (HR 8121 -- H Rept 1122) to reverse the Greene decision and give the Defense Department statutory authority to establish an industrial security program in which confidential information could be used. The bill was scheduled to go to the floor Sept. 11, but instead of calling it up for passage on that date, its sponsor, Committee Chairman Francis E. Walter (D Pa.), announced that the White House preferred to handle the matter by Executive Order. Consequently, the House did not act on the bill, and no corresponding Senate bills (S 2314, 2392, 2416) got out of the Judiciary Committee.

Federal Security Program -- The House Post Office and Civil Service Committee held nine days of hearings in April, May and June on bills (HR 1870, others) to apply the Federal Security Program to all Government employees. The bills reversed the Supreme Court's June 11, 1956, Cole case ruling, holding that Congress had authorized the use of the summary suspension procedures of the Federal Security Program only for Government employees in sensitive jobs. The Committee did not report any bill.

In the Senate, bills giving the head of any Government agency absolute discretion to fire any employee "in the interest of national security" (S 1304), and requiring the automatic firing of any Government employee who refused to answer questions involving security at any Federal legislative, executive or judicial hearing (S 1301), were covered in Senate Judiciary Internal Security Subcommittee hearings in April and May. The Administration, which had sent no witness to the House hearings on HR 1870 to state its position on security, also declined comment on S 1304 at the Internal Security Subcommittee hearings but did oppose S 1301. The Subcommittee took no further action.

A bill (S 1916) establishing a central Federal loyalty-security office was introduced May 12, but the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee took no action.

Obscene Literature -- The Supreme Court June 29, 1959 held 9-0 that a New York state ban on exhibition of the movie "Lady Chatterley's Lover," because it allegedly advocated immorality, had violated free speech guarantees of the First Amendment. Sen. James O. Eastland (D Miss.) July 2 introduced S J Res 116, proposing a constitutional amendment preventing abridgement of the right of any state "to decide on the basis of its own public policy questions of decency (and) morality." Later, Sen. Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) introduced S J Res 133, proposing a constitutional amendment excluding from the protection of the First Amendment the publication, sale, manufacture or dissemination of obscene material, and defining material as obscene "if, applying contemporary community standards, its dominant theme taken as a whole appeals to the prurient interest of the average person." The Senate Judiciary Juvenile Delinquency and Constitutional Amendments Subcommittees Aug. 28 and Sept. 9 held hearings on the resolutions but took no action, nor did any House Committee on any corresponding proposals. (See p. 304)

School Jurisdiction -- The Senate Judiciary Constitutional Amendments Subcommittee, following five days of hearings in May, Aug. 4 voted 3-2 to table a constitutional amendment (S J Res 32) proposed by Sen. Herman E. Talmadge (D Ga.) to reserve exclusive control over the public schools to the individual states. It would have affected the 1954 Supreme Court Brown case decision (requiring public school desegregation). There was no House action taken in 1959.

Federal Court Powers -- Numerous bills or proposed constitutional amendments were introduced in 1959 fixing special qualifications for Supreme Court justices, requiring their periodic reconfirmation by the Senate, or limiting the Court's appellate jurisdiction. There were no hearings on any of these proposals in 1959 and none was reported in either chamber. The Senate Judiciary Constitutional Amendments Subcommittee, however, May 28 held a hearing on S J Res 57, proposing a constitutional amendment to widen the Court's powers by making permanent, and not subject to Congressional limitation, the Court's existing right to hear appeals involving constitutional questions. The Subcommittee took no action. (1958 Almanac p. 293)

Professional Sports -- The Senate Judiciary Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee Sept. 3, following hearings July 28-31, approved a bill (S 2545) to clarify the status of professional team sports under Federal antitrust laws. A series of Supreme Court decisions beginning with the 1922 Federal Baseball case left baseball immune but other professional team sports liable to the antitrust laws. S 2545 gave basketball, football and hockey immunity for such activities as the football player draft, television blackouts and assignment of territorial rights. There was no action in the House, and the Senate bill was still pending before the full Judiciary Committee when the session ended. (1958 Almanac p. 318)

Price Discrimination -- The Senate Judiciary Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee March 17-21 held hearings on a bill (S 11) dealing with the Supreme Court's Jan. 8, 1951 Standard Oil case decision. The Court ruled that firms that engaged in "price discrimination" (charging some customers lower wholesale prices than others for the same goods) could not be convicted of price fixing under the Robinson-Patman Act if they had lowered the prices in good faith in order to meet price competition from others. Under S 11, such price discrimination would violate the Robinson-Patman Act if it tended substantially to lessen competition, regardless of a "good faith" defense. The Subcommittee May 7 sent the bill to the full Committee without recommendation. There was no further action on it. There was no action or hearings on the companion House bill (HR 11). (1958 Almanac p. 288)

Congressional Investigative Powers -- The Supreme Court June 17, 1957 ruled in the Watkins case that a House Un-American Activities Committee witness was not guilty of contempt of Congress for refusing to answer certain questions because the Committee's legislative mandate was "loosely worded" and "excessively broad" and the Committee had failed to show its questions were pertinent to the subject of its inquiry. There was no Congressional action on this issue in 1959 because the Court, in a June 8, 1959 decision in the Barenblatt case, partially reversed itself.

In a 5-4 ruling it held, first, that Congress had the right to investigate Communist activities as part of the Government's "right of self-preservation," and that such an investigation did not violate the First Amendment's guarantees of free speech even if it involved the teaching profession. Second, the Court held that the House rule setting up the Un-American Activities Committee was not so vague as to preclude the Committee from looking into Communist activities in the schools or elsewhere, and from asking witnesses about membership in various groups and about their personal associations. (See p. 723)

Effects of Treaties -- Since 1951, a proposed constitutional amendment, to make clear that no provision of any international treaty conflicting with the Constitution was valid, has been introduced almost annually in Congress. The amendment was designed to clarify the implications of a 1920 Supreme Court decision (Missouri v. Holland) upholding a U.S.-Canada treaty despite claims that jurisdiction over the subject it covered was reserved to the states under the 10th Amendment. The amendment became associated with the name of Sen. John W. Bricker (R Ohio 1947-59), its frequent sponsor. A 1959 version was introduced (S J Res 65) March 5 by Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) but received no action in either chamber. (1956 Almanac p. 483)

Dual Rate Shipping -- The Supreme Court May 19, 1958 outlawed the dual rate shipping system, an arrangement by which steamship companies associated in steamship conferences charged lower shipping rates to firms that agreed to do all their shipping through members of the conference than to firms that did not agree to use the services of conference members exclusively. Congress in 1958 enacted a law (PL 85-626), designed as a stopgap measure, in effect reversing the Court's decision and permitting the dual rate system to continue for two years, through June 30, 1960. (1958 Almanac p. 287) In 1959 the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Special Steamship Conference Subcommittee held 33 days of hearings on dual rates, in preparation for legislative action in 1960. In addition, the House Judiciary Antitrust Subcommittee carried on a continuing investigation of antitrust aspects of shipping arrangements. The Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee held no hearings and took no action.

PREEMPTION DOCTRINE

HR 3 -- Reported by House Judiciary Committee (H Rept 422) June 2, 1959.

- Passed by the House June 24 by a 225-192 roll-call vote. (See p. 372)

HR 3, the "anti-preemption" bill sponsored by House Rules Committee Chairman Howard W. Smith (D Va.), was the broadest of the so-called "Supreme Court curb" bills considered by Congress in 1959. (For others, see above)

The bill struck at Federal and state court application of the Federal preemption doctrine -- the doctrine under which Congress may exclude states from legislating on subjects over which the Constitution gave the states and the Federal Government concurrent jurisdiction.

Smith argued that the courts had been striking down state laws even when there was no evidence Congress had intended to preempt the field involved. Decisions frequently cited were the Cloverleaf case, involving food regulation (1942), the Guss case, involving the labor "no man's land" problem (1957), and the Nelson case, barring state punishment of subversion directed against the Federal Government (1956).

HR 3 contained a general preemption limitation and also specifically reversed the Nelson case. It passed the House but did not reach the Senate floor. A second bill (HR 2368), dealing with the Nelson case alone, was reported by the House Judiciary Committee but got no farther.

The fate of HR 3 in 1959 contrasted sharply with 1958, when the bill failed of final enactment by only one vote in the Senate. The change in Congressional attitude was generally attributed to the influx of "pro-Court" Northern Democrats into the Senate after the 1958 election; Congressional reversal of the Guss case in the 1959 labor reform bill (S 1555, PL 86-257); a series of 1959 Court decisions giving the states wider scope over business matters; and the Court's June 8, 1959 Uphaus case decision, holding, 5-4, that a state had the right to investigate and punish subversion directed against itself.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 3:

Barred courts from construing any act of Congress as intended to preempt the area of legislation involved, to the exclusion of state laws on the same subject, unless Congress had specified its intention to preempt the field or there was a direct and irreconcilable conflict between the Federal law and a state law.

Specified that no Federal laws dealing with subversive activities should be construed as intended to bar the states from enforcing their own laws punishing subversive activities directed against the Federal Government.

Background

HR 3 did not reach the floor in either chamber in the 84th Congress, when it was first introduced (1955).

In 1958 the House passed HR 3 despite a July 15 statement from Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.), then a House Member, that he was authorized to say that the President opposed the bill because its "retroactive feature" would cause "serious difficulty." In the Senate, the bill was offered as a floor amendment to a Nelson case bill. Both were recommitted on a 41-40 vote. (1958 Almanac p. 289)

House

COMMITTEE -- Judiciary.

HEARINGS -- None.

ACTION -- June 2 reported HR 3 (H Rept 422), which had been approved by a 17-15 vote (D 8-13; R 9-2)

The Committee approved HR 3 despite a May 12 appearance by Deputy Attorney General Lawrence E. Walsh, who repeated the Administration's opposition. Walsh, in an April 6 speech before the American College of Trial Lawyers, said a bill reversing the Nelson case had not been passed because Supreme Court critics "prefer to use the issue of Communism to rouse support for an ambiguous general bill which they hope might reestablish state regulations in other fields" like labor relations. He said the general preemption provision of HR 3 should be of "grave concern" to every lawyer and was "so ambiguous that no proponent of the measure has yet been able to state flatly whether or not it is intended to change the existing law."

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- June 3 -- The Committee reported HR 2368 (H Rept 432), dealing solely with the Nelson case. Nine members signed a minority report saying subversion should be dealt with by the Federal Government alone. They were Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), Peter W. Rodino Jr. (D N.J.), Byron G. Rogers (D Colo.), Herman Toll (D Pa.), Lester Holtzman (D N.Y.), Robert W. Kastenmeier (D Wis.), George A. Kasem (D Calif.), John V. Lindsay (R N.Y.) and William T. Cahill (R N.J.)

June 9 -- HR 3 was endorsed by the House Republican Policy Committee.

Floor Action

The House June 24, by a 225-192 roll-call vote, passed HR 3 without amendment. Before passage, the House on a 191-227 roll call rejected a motion by John V. Lindsay (R N.Y.) to recommit the bill. The rule for debate was adopted June 22 by a 233-116 roll call. (For voting see chart p. 372)

Supporters of HR 3 said its purpose was merely to give the courts a clear rule of construction on preemption -- so it would not be applied by "inference" in cases where there was no conflict of state and Federal law and no stated Congressional intention to preempt. They said it was not meant to permit states to nullify Federal law but only to enable them to protect their citizens in fields from which faulty application of the preemption doctrine had excluded them -- "no man's land" labor cases, narcotics control, health and welfare. Smith said the bill was not intended to affect civil rights laws.

Opponents said the preemption provision would have far-reaching effects for labor, interstate business, civil rights and health standards -- areas where uniform Federal standards existed and were desirable. The bill, they said, would permit a great deal of state jurisdiction in these areas, would subject labor and business to a variety of conflicting jurisdictions and might be used to nullify Federal standards and guarantees. Moreover, they said, the provision's real meaning was not clear and it was retroactive; it would apply to all past as well as future Federal law; unsettle 100 years of established precedents on Federal-state relationships; and invite extensive litigation.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) -- Apply the new rule of construction in the general preemption section of the bill only to future acts of Congress; June 24. Standing vote, 81-138; teller vote, 129-195.

John V. Lindsay (R N.Y.) -- Strike out the general preemption provision; June 24. Standing, 62-134.

Harold E. Collier (R Ill.) -- Specify that the bill is not intended to permit states to regulate any food, drugs and cosmetics already subject to Federal law; June 24. Voice.

James G. Fulton (R Pa.) -- Provide that the rule of construction created by the bill would not apply to any Federal laws dealing with civil rights, labor-management relations, education, rural electrification or interstate common carriers; June 24. Standing, 53-146.

Senate Hearings

The Senate Judiciary Internal Security Subcommittee April 20-May 15 held 11 days of hearings on a wide variety of internal security bills. Group stands on S 3 (the Senate counterpart of HR 3) and on two Nelson case bills (S 294, 1299):

For HR 3 -- American Farm Bureau Federation. Against HR 3 -- AFL-CIO, National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, American Civil Liberties Union, Americans for Democratic Action.

For S 294 or S 1299 -- American Jewish League Against Communism, Veterans of Foreign Wars, American Legion. Against S 294 or S 1299 -- ACLU, ADA, American Veterans Committee, Religious Society of Friends Legislative Committee, New York City Bar Assn.

The Subcommittee Sept. 7 approved a four-part omnibus internal security bill (S 2652) that did not include a Nelson case or preemption provision.

PASSPORTS

HR 9069 -- Reported by House Foreign Affairs Committee (H Rept 1151) Sept. 4, 1959.

● Passed by the House, amended, Sept. 8 by a 371-18 roll-call vote. (See p. 394)

For the second successive year, a bill giving the State Department statutory authority to deny passports to Communists and Communist sympathizers passed the House but failed to reach the Senate floor.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 9069:

Authorized the Secretary of State to revoke or deny a passport to anyone who, since Jan. 1, 1951, had belonged to the Communist party or had been affiliated with it or had knowingly acted to further the international Communist movement, if the Secretary found after a hearing that the individual's presence abroad would harm U.S. security.

Specified that a passport could not be denied "solely on the basis of membership in any organization or association with any individual or group."

Authorized the Secretary to ask passport applicants about Communist activities and affiliations since Jan. 1, 1951.

Permitted an applicant denied a passport to appeal to a Federal district court, which would decide the appeal "on the record." If the department had used secret information in deciding the case, it would have to reveal it to the court and applicant or grant the passport.

Permitted the President, by annual declaration outlining his reasons, to bar travel to countries at war with the U.S., to countries where armed hostilities were in progress, to countries where the presence of U.S. citizens would seriously impair U.S. foreign policy, and to countries where the U.S. was unable to protect its nationals. The President could exempt any individual from this ban.

Background

The Supreme Court June 16, 1958 ruled 5-4 in the Kent-Briehl case that Congress had never given the State Department power to deny passports to individuals solely because of their "beliefs or associations," including Communist party membership. President Eisenhower July 7, 1958 and Jan. 19, 1959 requested remedial legislation.

The State Department at various Congressional hearings in 1958 and 1959 asked broad powers to declare certain areas off-limits for travel and to deny passports, using confidential information, to Communists, their sympathizers and any other persons whose presence abroad it thought would interfere with U.S. foreign policy, advance international Communism or harm U.S. interests. In 1958 the House passed a bill granting some of the department's requests, but the Senate Foreign Relations Committee postponed action. (1958 Almanac p. 702)

House

COMMITTEE -- Foreign Affairs.

HEARINGS -- For five days in August.

ACTION -- Sept. 4 reported HR 9069 (H Rept 1151) by a 25-1 vote, with Rep. William H. Meyer (D Vt.) the dissenter. The report said the bill was aimed at preventing Communist couriers and agents from traveling to exchange information and plans with other Communists, but not at preventing criticism of the U.S. by American travelers overseas. The Committee said the State Department endorsed the bill despite reservations that it was not broad enough, especially on secret information.

Floor Action

The House Sept. 8 passed HR 9069, with one amendment, by a 371-18 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 394)

The bill gave the President power to declare various areas off-limits for travel and the State Department power to deny passports to Communists and sympathizers whose presence abroad might endanger U.S. security. But if the department used confidential information as the basis of a passport denial, and the applicant appealed to a Federal court, the department would have to reveal its secret information to the court and the applicant or drop the case and grant the passport.

House debate focused on: Whether the State Department should be forced to reveal secret information; on the proper grounds for denying a passport; and on a charge by Rep. Charles O. Porter (D Ore.) that the bill would allow the President to prevent Members of Congress from going on fact-finding tours to places the President declared off-limits. (Porter Aug. 27 filed suit in Federal court to force the State Department to grant him a passport valid for travel to China, which it refused him July 2. The suit was dismissed Sept. 28.)

The bill's supporters said it permitted the President to exempt individuals from the off-limits travel ban, and the President would certainly extend this courtesy to Members of Congress, they said.

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

Frank M. Coffin (D Maine) -- Make clear that criticism of the U.S. or adherence to unpopular views were not grounds for passport denial; Sept. 8. Voice vote.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Francis E. Walter (D Pa.) -- Strike the words "on the record in the district courts of the U.S." from the judicial review section; Sept. 8. Standing vote, 29-98.

Alvin M. Bentley (R Mich.) -- Strike the words "on the record," so that the State Department would not have to reveal confidential information; Sept. 8. Voice.

Bentley -- Permit the department to decide which parts of its hearing record would be presented to the courts for review of a passport denial; Sept. 8. Voice.

William H. Meyer (D Vt.) -- Strike, because it did not cover all subversives, introductory language stating as a Congressional finding that the U.S. Communist party was part of an international Communist conspiracy to undermine the U.S., and that passports were used by Communist couriers and agents to further the conspiracy; Sept. 8. Standing, 5-124.

Charles O. Porter (D Ore.) -- Strike out the section permitting the President to declare geographic areas off-limits; Sept. 8. Voice.

DEBATE -- Sept. 7 -- Armistead I. Selden Jr. (D Ala.), sponsor of the bill -- HR 9069 would not permit passport denial solely because an applicant was a supporter of international Communism or solely because his presence abroad would harm U.S. security. Both conditions would have to be present, and no other conditions could be taken into account. The cut-off date of Jan. 1, 1951 was chosen because, in the wake of Communist actions in the Korean war, no one could "have any excuse for not being fully aware of the meaning of the international Communist movement."

Wayne L. Hays (D Ohio) -- The Foreign Affairs Committee "means and intends by this language 'on the record'...that the record shall be complete and that the accused shall have the right to know who his accusers are, and that he shall have the right to see the record on which the Secretary made his determination. If the Secretary refuses to produce that, it is the intent of the Committee that the court shall order a passport granted forthwith."

Senate Hearings

Senate passport hearings in 1959:

- Foreign Relations Committee -- Held a hearing July 13; announced Aug. 11 it was postponing action until 1960. Bills covered were S 806, sponsored by Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.), giving the President broad power to prevent travel in wartime but permitting denial of passports in peacetime only to persons under indictment or sentence of felony; S 2287, sponsored by J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.), corresponding to HR 9069 in its off-limits and informer provisions but requiring, before a passport denial, a showing that the applicant wanted to travel in order to reveal Government secrets, involve the U.S. in hostilities or conspire for violent overthrow of the U.S. Government; and S 2315, sponsored by Alexander Wiley (R Wis.), similar to HR 9069 but protecting the use of secret information. Chairman Fulbright Sept. 7 said that if another committee reported a passport bill he would ask that it be referred to Foreign Relations before it was acted on by the Senate.
- Government Operations Committee -- A special three-member subcommittee held hearings Aug. 26-27, Sept. 1 and 3 on a Mundt bill (S 2095) similar to S 2315. The bill also set up on a statutory basis a United States Passport Service in the State Department.
- Judiciary, Internal Security Subcommittee -- Covered passports in its April-May internal security hearings, and Sept. 7 approved an omnibus security bill (S 2652) with a provision that corresponded to HR 9069 but safeguarded confidential information used in deciding applications. The full Judiciary Committee took no action.

The four major sections of S 2652:

Amended the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938 to require persons employed by U.S. groups "supervised, directed, controlled or financed" by foreign governments or parties to register under the Act. Under existing law such persons did not have to register unless they worked for groups "subsidized" by foreign governments or parties. The House Aug. 31 passed a bill (HR 6817) with this provision.

Provided judicial procedures for prosecution of espionage and other acts against the United States committed anywhere in the world. The House March 2 passed a similar bill (HR 1992).

Defined the Smith Act prohibition against organizing a group advocating forcible overthrow of the Government as applying not only to the initial act of bringing the group into being, but also to continuing organizational activities like recruitment of members, reorganization of units and conducting of classes. The House March 2 passed a similar bill (HR 2369).

Permitted the Secretary of State to declare certain areas off-limits for travel by U.S. citizens and to deny passports after a hearing to Communists and Communist sympathizers whose presence abroad would endanger U.S.

security. The department could use secret information in deciding the case.

At the hearings, major groups took these stands on the passport provision later included in S 2652:

Opposed: Americans for Democratic Action, American Civil Liberties Union (it later endorsed Humphrey's S 806), American Veterans Committee, Religious Society of Friends.

In favor: American Farm Bureau Federation, Veterans of Foreign Wars, American Legion.

MALLORY RULE

HR 4957 -- Reported by House Judiciary Committee (H Rept 352) May 11, 1959.

- Passed by the House July 7 by a 262-138 roll-call vote. (See p. 376)

House passage of HR 4957 -- the "Mallory rule bill" -- represented the second attempt by Congress in two years to clarify a controversial 1957 Supreme Court decision involving the admissibility of evidence in Federal criminal trials. The bill was one of several so-called "Court-curb" measures before Congress in 1959. (For a summary of action on these measures, see p. 205)

In the 1957 Mallory case, the Court ruled that when police, despite the availability of a committing magistrate, delayed unnecessarily in arraigning a suspect, they could not use evidence against him in Federal court that had been obtained during the period of delay. HR 4957 reversed this decision. It provided that delay alone would not be sufficient grounds for invalidating a confession or other evidence.

Although the bill passed the House by a wide margin, there was no Senate action. Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), sponsor of a companion Senate bill (S 1893) and chairman of the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Improvements in the Federal Criminal Code, to which HR 4957 and another Mallory case bill (S 525) were referred, suffered a stroke June 19 and was absent much of the session. The Subcommittee took no action.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 4957:

Provided that a confession or any other evidence obtained from a criminal suspect could not be barred as Federal court evidence solely because of delay in arraigning the suspect.

Excluded a suspect's statements as evidence if police, before questioning him, had not advised him he was not required to make a statement and that what he said might be used against him.

Background

The June 24, 1957 Mallory decision was based upon an earlier precedent (the McNabb decision of 1943) holding that evidence that was the fruit of illegal police detention of a suspect was not admissible in Federal criminal trials, and on a provision of the Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure requiring prompt arraignment of suspects. The Court reasoned that since rape suspect Andrew Mallory had been held for many hours during which he could have been arraigned before he confessed, he had been detained illegally, and the confession obtained in this period was therefore inadmissible, even though there was no evidence police had coerced Mallory into confessing.

Partly because of fears the Mallory decision would exclude even routine questioning of suspects, and partly because of general dissatisfaction with the Court for a series of internal security and preemption decisions, there arose strong Congressional sentiment for corrective legislation. In 1958 the House passed a bill identical with HR 4957. In the Senate, a bill permitting "reasonable" delay before arraignment (but not unlimited delay) was passed. The conference report, however, was ruled out of order in the Senate in the waning moments of the 1958 session and the bill was killed. (1958 Almanac p. 295)

House

COMMITTEE -- Judiciary.

HEARINGS -- By a special subcommittee headed by Rep. Edwin E. Willis (D La.) in 1957 and 1958.

ACTION -- Reported HR 4957 May 11 (H Rept 352).

The report said the prompt arraignment requirement had been interpreted so as to require almost immediate arraignment of a suspect after his arrest, with police given almost no opportunity to ask routine questions, check alibis of suspects and prevent innocent men from being arraigned. The report said, "Crimes such as robbery, rape, even murder, are planned in secret and committed under circumstances which do not lend themselves to evidence of perpetration.... All too often in such cases there is no evidence for the police except a recounting of the event by the complaining witness. If the police, as indicated in the Mallory decision are, in effect, prevented from conducting a proper and reasonable interrogation of suspects, law enforcement is faced with a serious challenge." The report condemned third-degree methods of questioning and said that these or any other police actions "which in any way render a confession...involuntary" would not be permitted under HR 4957.

In minority views, 11 Committee members said exclusion of evidence that was the fruit of illegal detention was in many cases the only way to enforce the requirement of prompt arraignment, and the bill would destroy this method. They said the bill would permit police to fish for evidence to justify an arrest already made. They also said extended delay before arraignment, without any threats or physical coercion, could have the psychological effect of inducing a confession.

Those filing minority views were Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.), Peter W. Rodino Jr. (D N.J.), Lester Holtzman (D N.Y.), Harold D. Donohue (D Mass.), Roland V. Libonati (D Ill.), Herman Toll (D Pa.), Robert W. Kastenmeier (D Wis.), George A. Kasem (D Calif.), John V. Lindsay (R N.Y.), William T. Cahill (R N.J.) and John H. Ray (R N.Y.).

Floor Action

The House July 7, by a 262-138 roll-call vote, passed HR 4957 without amendment. A recommittal motion offered by Rep. John V. Lindsay (R N.Y.) was rejected on a 138-261 roll call. (For voting, see chart p. 376)

DEBATE -- July 7 -- Edwin E. Willis (D La.), sponsor of HR 4957 -- "If the delay between arrest and arraignment is taken advantage of...to bring pressure on the accused, then of course the delay may be taken into consideration as a factor in determining the voluntary or involuntary nature of the confession...." Whether delay alone was a coercive factor "is a mixed question of law and fact" to be determined by "the judge and the jury."

Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) -- Had the Mallory case not involved "a Negro, had it not been a case of rape, you would never have heard of this case."

SENATE RULES CHANGE

S Res 5 -- Adopted by the Senate Jan. 12, 1959, by a 72-22 roll-call vote. (See p. 398)

Northern liberals were defeated in the opening days of the 1959 session in their efforts to substantially overhaul the filibuster rule of the Senate. Instead, a bipartisan leadership group pushed through a slight revision of the rule which the Southern bloc opposed but did not really fight.

Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) grabbed the initiative from the liberal bloc when the new Senate was only a few minutes old. He asked unanimous consent to bring up a resolution (S Res 5) to amend Senate Rule 22, the so-called filibuster rule that had been in effect since 1949.

The 10-year-old rule required the vote of two-thirds of the entire Senate membership to shut off debate. It also said debate could not be shut off on proposals to consider changes in Senate rules. Johnson's proposal would enable two-thirds of the Senators voting to shut off debate on any measure, including rule changes. Backed by the three top Democratic leaders and three of the four top Republicans, S Res 5 was adopted Jan. 12 by a 72-22 roll-call vote.

Johnson's strategy changed the situation from what it was at the opening sessions in 1953 and 1957. Then it appeared to many that the only way to get a new Rule 22 was to drop all the Senate rules temporarily right after the new Congress convened. Only in this way, the liberals argued, would it be possible for a majority to pass a revised Rule 22 without running into a filibuster that could not be stopped. They contended general parliamentary procedure would govern the Senate while it was operating without any standing rules.

The fact that there was going to be some revision of Rule 22 in 1959 cost the liberals support. Also, many of the 15 freshmen Democrats understandably were reluctant to begin their Senate careers by opposing their majority leader. (See box, next page)

The Senate debate on changing the filibuster rule provided the year's first test for the chamber's leading Presidential possibilities.

Three prominent Democrats -- Sens. Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.), John F. Kennedy (Mass.) and Stuart Symington (Mo.) -- maintained their credentials in the liberal camp by backing the unsuccessful moves Jan. 9 and 12 to: open the Senate rules to change, permit imposition of cloture by majority vote and by 60 percent of those voting. (For voting, see Roll Calls 2, 3 and 4, vote chart p. 398)

Eventually all three joined Majority Leader Johnson in voting for Johnson's compromise rule change proposal. (See Roll Call 5, p. 398)

On the Republican side, Vice President Richard M. Nixon Jan. 9 pleased party liberals by reiterating his opinion that the Senate "has a constitutional right at the beginning of each new Congress to determine rules it desires to follow."

PROVISIONS -- As adopted by the Senate, S Res 5:

Amended Senate Rule 22 to enable two-thirds of the Senators present and voting to shut off debate (invoke cloture) on any matter, including proposals for rule changes.

Amended Senate Rule 32 by adding this language: "The rules of the Senate shall continue from one Congress to the next Congress unless they are changed as provided in these rules."

CLOTURE PROCEDURE -- As amended by S Res 5, Rule 22 provided this method for cutting off Senate debate:

Upon the motion of any 16 Senators, the Presiding Officer must submit the question of closing debate on a pending measure, motion or other matter, including rules change proposals, to the Senate for decision.

The motion must be put to a roll-call vote two days after it is submitted.

If the question is decided affirmatively by two-thirds of those present and voting, debate thereafter is limited to one hour for each Senator, and no new amendments may be offered except by unanimous consent.

Background

REFERENCES -- For 1949 Senate rule change, see 1949 Almanac p. 583; attempted 1953 rule change, 1953 Almanac p. 313; attempted 1957 rule change, 1957 Almanac p. 655; history of filibusters, 1957 Almanac p. 570.

The Senate's only machinery for closing debate is embodied in Rule 22 of its Standing Rules. The original Rule 22 was adopted by the Senate in 1917, by a 76-3 roll-call vote, following a furore over the "talking to death" in the Senate of President Woodrow Wilson's proposal to arm American merchant ships before U.S. entry into World War I.

In its original form, Rule 22 required only the votes of two-thirds of the Senators present and voting to invoke cloture. But in 1949, during a parliamentary battle preceding scheduled consideration of Fair Employment Practices Commission legislation, the imposition of cloture was made more difficult by raising the necessary number of votes to two-thirds of the entire Senate membership (64 of the 96 Senators). At the same time the rule was changed to provide specifically that cloture could not be applied to motions or resolutions proposing to change the rules of the Senate.

Cloture was invoked only four times under the 1917 rule and never under the 1949 rule.

At the opening session in January 1953 a bloc of Senators seeking to revise Rule 22 moved to consider the adoption of new Senate rules; they argued that the Senate was not a continuing body with a continuing set of rules. The motion was made by Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.), and on Jan. 7, 1953 the Senate voted, 70-21, to table his motion, thereby, in effect, continuing the existing rules.

On Jan. 3, 1957, less than an hour after the Senate convened, Anderson again moved to consider adoption of new rules. He was joined by 15 other Democrats and 14 Republicans. Majority Leader Johnson immediately moved to table the motion. The Senate Jan. 4, by a 55-38 roll-call vote, tabled the Anderson motion. Thus the existing rules continued in effect.

During the debate preceding this vote, Vice President Nixon said he believed the Senate could adopt new rules "under whatever procedures the majority of the Senate approves." He said that in his opinion the current Senate could not be bound by any previous rule "which denies the membership of the Senate the power to exercise its constitutional right to make its own rules." In this light, he said, he regarded as unconstitutional the section of Rule 22 banning any limitation of debate on rule change proposals.

Both in 1953 and 1957 the chief impetus for changing the rules came from Northern backers of civil rights legislation who claimed Rule 22 was the "gravedigger" for such bills.

1959 Senate Action

The Senate Jan. 12, 1959, after four days of debate, adopted S Res 5 by a 72-22 roll-call vote. On earlier roll calls it had tabled Anderson's motion to consider the adoption of rules and rejected two substitutes for S Res 5. (For voting, see chart p. 398)

Following are the day-to-day developments:

JAN. 7 (OPENING DAY OF THE 86TH CONGRESS) -- Johnson asked unanimous consent for immediate consideration of a revision of Rule 22 (S Res 5) sponsored by himself; Carl Hayden (D Ariz.), president pro tempore of the Senate; Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.), minority leader; Mike Mansfield (D Mont.), majority whip; Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.), chairman of the Republican Conference; and Styles Bridges (R N.H.), chairman of the GOP Policy Committee.

Sens. Clifford P. Case (R N.J.) and Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) objected to Johnson's unanimous consent request to consider S Res 5 immediately. Vice President Richard M. Nixon, as presiding officer, then recognized Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.), who moved that the Senate proceed to consider the adoption of new rules, the same motion he made and lost in 1953 and 1957. Johnson, insisting he still had the floor, refused to let Anderson make his motion. Johnson instead moved the Senate adjourn. It voted to do so 73-23.

JAN. 8 -- Johnson at the opening of proceedings said it was agreeable to him to have Anderson's motion considered before S Res 5. Johnson's offer was interpreted as a display of confidence in the outcome; he apparently was sure he had the votes to defeat the liberals' proposal and pass his own.

Anderson then moved to consider adoption of rules for the 86th Congress. Johnson announced that he would offer a motion to table the Anderson motion after Senators had had ample time for debate. (A motion to table requires an immediate vote.)

Anderson's original motion was modified by providing for adoption of all 85th Congress rules except Rule 22, and for immediate consideration of that rule after adoption of his motion. The change was designed to neutralize arguments that adoption of the Anderson motion would open up a Pandora's box since it would require the Senate to reconsider all of its rules.

JAN. 9 -- Minority Leader Dirksen said he would reverse himself and vote against the Anderson motion. He said he had announced support for the Anderson motion in December 1958 because it looked at the time that adoption of such a motion was the only way to get Rule 22 amended. But the existence of specific proposals to revise Rule 22 presented "an entirely changed picture." Sen. Frank Church (D Idaho) said he supported the Anderson motion in 1957 for a similar reason but that S Res 5 represented the changes in Rule 22 he desired. The Anderson motion was tabled on a 60-36 vote.

Johnson called up his resolution (S Res 5) and obtained unanimous consent to limit debate on amendments to two hours. Debate on the resolution itself was limited to four hours. Southerners, despite their objections to S Res 5, did not oppose the limit on debate.

Freshmen Senators' Voting

The motion to table the motion by Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) to consider adoption of new Senate rules pitted the Senate leadership, led by Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) with the support of Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.), against the liberals fighting for a major overhaul of Rule 22. Here is how the 18 freshmen Senators voted, with "pro-leadership" meaning they supported the tabling motion and "anti-leadership" meaning they opposed it.

PRO-LEADERSHIP	ANTI-LEADERSHIP
E.L. (Bob) Bartlett (D Alaska)	Clair Engle (D Calif.)
Ernest Gruening (D Alaska)	Edmund S. Muskie (D Maine)
Thomas J. Dodd (D Conn.)	Philip A. Hart (D Mich.)
R. Vance Hartke (D Ind.)	Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.)
Howard W. Cannon (D Nev.)	Harrison A. Williams (D N.J.)
Robert C. Byrd (D W.Va.)	Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.)
Jennings Randolph (D W.Va.)	Stephen M. Young (D Ohio)
Gale McGee (D Wyo.)	Hugh Scott (R Pa.)
	Frank E. Moss (D Utah)
	Winston L. Prouty (R Vt.)

JAN. 12 -- Calling S Res 5 a "meaningless gesture," Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) offered a substitute for it on behalf of himself and 14 other Senators. It provided that 15 days after 16 Senators filed a cloture motion, debate could be shut off by a majority of the Senate membership. If a majority (50 Senators) voted to shut off debate under this arrangement, each Senator then would be limited to speaking one hour on the matter being debated. Douglas said his rule would guarantee debate up to "eight weeks or more." The amendment was rejected on a 28-67 vote.

Thruston B. Morton (R Ky.) offered an amendment to S Res 5 to enable three-fifths of the Senators present and voting to shut off debate instead of two-thirds. His amendment was rejected 36-58.

Of the 36 Senators voting against tabling Anderson's motion, 10 opposed Douglas' amendment: Allott (R Colo.), Anderson, Bush (R Conn.), Cooper (R Ky.), Jackson (D Wash.), Lausche (D Ohio), Morton, Prouty (R Vt.), Smith (R Maine) and Young (D Ohio). However, all but Bush and Mrs. Smith supported the Morton amendment.

Two Senators who voted to table Anderson's motion voted in favor of Douglas' and Morton's amendments: Dodd (D Conn.) and Green (D R.I.).

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) and Clifford P. Case (R N.J.) offered separate but similar amendments to eliminate language in S Res 5 stating that Senate rules would carry over from one Congress to the next unless changed under the procedures set forth in the rules. Both amendments were rejected on standing votes.

Francis Case (R S.D.) offered an amendment to require germaneness in debate but withdrew it after Johnson promised it would get early hearings by the Rules and Administration Committee. Case then introduced the proposal in the form of a resolution (S Res 18).

The final vote was on S Res 5. It was adopted in the form Johnson had originally presented it by a roll-call vote of 72-22.

Debate

Debate on S Res 5 on Jan. 12:

Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) -- Opposed any change in Rule 22 because "there is no need on earth to further curtail the right of free speech in the Senate."

James O. Eastland (D Miss.) -- "The substance of the compromise which brought about the formation of the Union was the protection and safeguards given to each sovereign state and groups of states from the majority of their sister states. The procedure designed to implement the substance of the compromise included not only the institution of the Senate, but also its so-called peculiarities, including unlimited debate."

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) -- "It is clear that on measures of importance on which a filibuster would be conducted, virtually the entire membership of the Senate would be present on the floor for the final vote. Therefore, there is no real difference between two-thirds of the total membership and two-thirds of those present and voting under the Johnson resolution." He called the Southern opposition to S Res 5 "purely symbolic. They have won a great victory.... They have been able to reverse the drive for civil rights...."

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- The Johnson resolution is "meaningless because the same rule (in effect until 1949) resulted in the fact that only four filibusters have been successfully ended since 1917...."

Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) -- Said his resolution reflects "the will of the people."

House Rules Unchanged

Despite advance predictions of a rules battle by House liberals, the House Jan. 7 adopted without change the rules of the 85th Congress to guide it in the 86th. The action was taken by voice vote without debate.

An effort by a group of Democratic liberals to change the rules in order to curb the House Rules Committee collapsed Jan. 3. They had hoped to change the makeup of the Rules Committee from eight Democrats and four Republicans to nine Democrats and three Republicans. They also wanted to revive the 21-day rule which permitted bills that had been before the Rules Committee 21 days to be called up for a vote.

The 21-day rule was adopted by the House Jan. 3, 1949 (opening day of the 81st Congress) by a 275-143 roll-call vote. The rule stipulated that any bill that had been pending in the Rules Committee for 21 calendar days could be called up for a vote by the chairman of the House committee which had reported out the bill. It was rescinded Jan. 3, 1951 (opening of the 82nd Congress) when the House rejected, on a 179-247 roll-call vote, a motion to renew the 21 day rule. It has not been brought up for a vote since. (1951 Almanac p. 336)

The Democratic liberals called off their drive after a conference with Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas), who opposed any change in the Rules Committee. Reps. John A. Blatnik (Minn.), Chet Holifield (Calif.), Lee Metcalf (Mont.), Henry S. Reuss (Wis.), George M. Rhodes (Pa.) and Frank Thompson Jr. (N.J.) said in a joint statement:

"We have received assurances from Speaker Rayburn that legislation which has been duly considered and reported by legislative committees will be brought before the House for consideration within a reasonable period of time. Our confidence in the Speaker is great, and we believe he will support such procedural steps as may become necessary to obtain House consideration of reported bills from legislative committees."

Despite Rayburn's reported assurances, the Rules Committe again in 1959 was criticized for keeping legislation from the House floor. Among the major bills reported by House committees in 1959 but not cleared for floor action by the Rules Committee were:

- Depressed areas -- A Senate-passed bill was reported in May but did not receive Rules Committee clearance. Supporters of the bill Sept. 3 said Rayburn had agreed to help them bring it to the floor in 1960. (See story p. 221)
- School aid -- A bill was reported in June but received no Rules Committee action. (See story p. 300)
- Civil rights -- A civil rights bill reported Aug. 20 was not cleared for floor action. Its backers began procedures to discharge the bill from the Rules Committee. (See story p. 291)

On the other hand, the Rules Committee May 14 granted a rule to the first housing bill -- similar to a measure it had denied clearance in 1958 -- after a delay of slightly more than two months. The action followed demands by House liberals that Rayburn fulfill his January promise to get major bills out of the Committee. (See story p. 245)

On another legislative front, the Committee held an unplanned meeting the last night of the session to speed to conference the mutual security appropriation bill, which carried a civil rights rider. (See story p. 191)

SENATE PAYROLLS

S Res 139 -- Reported by Senate Rules and Administration Committee (S Rept 429) June 24, 1959.

- Adopted by the Senate by voice vote June 26.

S Res 139 provided for public disclosure, on a quarterly basis, of payroll information on all Senate employees, beginning with the July 1-Sept. 30, 1959 period. Similar information had been available in the House since 1932. The first Senate list was published Nov. 30.

The resolution was the outgrowth of critical newspaper stories on the withholding of payroll information, coupled with disclosures of Congressional nepotism. (See list on next page)

PROVISIONS -- As adopted by the Senate, S Res 139:

Required the Secretary of the Senate to publish in pamphlet form, within 60 days of the close of each quarterly period, the name and title of each Senate employee, the specific amount of his pay, and for whom he worked.

Provided that the quarterly information be included in the Secretary's annual report of Senate expenditures.

Stipulated that the disclosures cover employees of Senators and the Vice President, of committees, subcommittees and joint committees, and functionaries of the Senate.

BACKGROUND -- A Jan. 5 news story, by Scripps-Howard staff writer Vance Trimble, contained a lengthy list of relatives he said were employed by Members of Congress in their offices in 1958. Trimble had obtained the names by checking out similar names on available House-Senate records. He filed a court suit to gain access to Senate payroll records, but the suit was dismissed. Publication of the story, however, caused Congress to reassess its employee-payroll systems.

The American Society of Newspaper Editors (ASNE), in a May 22 petition, urged the Senate to make public all its payroll and expense transactions.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Rules and Administration.

ACTION -- June 24 reported S Res 139 (S Rept 429) and said the Committee "sincerely believes that in recommending its proposal it is cooperating to the fullest extent in making a complete and scrupulous accounting of all the Senate's expenditures."

Floor Action

The Senate June 26 adopted S Res 139 by voice vote. Rules Committee Chairman Thomas C. Hennings Jr. (D Mo.) said the action showed the Senate "realizes that freedom of information and the elimination of unnecessary secrecy in Government is a two-way street," and that it was improper for the Senate to "complain about unnecessary secrecy in the Executive Branch, while practicing such secrecy itself."

A few Senators had released information on their payrolls before the Senate acted on S Res 139. Behind-the-scenes opposition to such action was revealed in a March 19 statement by freshman Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.). He said he had been criticized by a number of veteran Senators for favoring making payrolls public and had decided, "in deference to" their views, not to publish his own staff's salaries.

House

Allegations of Congressional nepotism were reflected in the House by the introduction of proposals for public disclosure of pay and family relationships and by the pigeonholing of a bill (HR 5045) that would permit Members to hire administrative assistants at a salary of $14,000 yearly. Senators have been authorized since 1946 to hire administrative assistants; Representatives' staffs consist of clerks and secretaries. HR 5045 was reported March 4 (H Rept 149) by the House Administration Committee but never brought up for floor debate.

COMMITTEE -- House Administration, Accounts Subcommittee.

HEARING -- April 27 on three resolutions (H Res 227, 229, 230) to require public disclosure of the pay, duties and family relationships of Congressional office employees. A report on the use of each Representative's $1,200 annual district office-rental allowance also would be required.

TESTIMONY -- The sponsors of H Res 227, H Res 229 and H Res 230 -- Reps. John E. Henderson (R Ohio), John F. Baldwin (R Calif.) and William E. Minshall (R Ohio), respectively -- testified in favor of their resolutions. Subcommittee member Gordon H. Scherer (R Ohio) also urged favorable action. He said, "The people are incensed and want these (pay-roll) practices stopped."

No further action was taken on the resolutions.

NEPOTISM CHARGES

The old charge of nepotism on Congressional payrolls was aired again on Capitol Hill in 1959.

Touching off the new round of disclosures was a Feb. 18 newspaper report that freshman Rep. Steven V. Carter (D Iowa) had put his 19-year-old son, Steven A. Carter, on his office payroll at a salary of $11,873 a year.

Carter at first defended his action, saying his son, a part-time law student, "is the most valuable one in my office."

On Feb. 24 Carter disclosed he had been under treatment for cancer and said he needed his son's help in the office while he was hospitalized. He said Feb. 25 his own condition had improved enough for him to return to the office and Steve's salary would be cut in half. (Rep. Carter died of cancer Nov. 4.)

The Carter case was followed by several other disclosures and on Feb. 23 the Associated Press published a list of 65 Representatives who had persons with "the same or similar family name" on their January payrolls.

Three Representatives -- Clarence J. Brown (R Ohio), Frank E. Smith (D Miss.) and H. Allen Smith (R Calif.) -- included on the original AP list Feb. 25 denied their payroll namesakes were in any way related to them.

Also on Feb. 25, Richard Martin, son of Sen. Thomas E. Martin (R Iowa), disclosed that he had been on his father's payroll from 1955 to 1958 while he was studying law in Washington. Young Martin said he worked in his father's office "almost every day." The Senator and his son refused to disclose his salary.

Listed below are the Representatives identified by the AP Feb. 23 as employing persons with the same or similar name in January. With the employee's name is his annual rate of pay. An asterisk by the Member's name indicates he was identified by Scripps-Howard as employing a person with a same or similar name as his own in 1958. Note: A similarity in name does not necessarily indicate a family relationship and should not be assumed as proof of such a relationship.

Sen. Thomas E. Martin (R Iowa) -- Richard Martin.
Rep. Robert H. Michel (R Ill.) -- Corinne Michel.
Rep. Ralph J. Scott (D N.C.) -- Mrs. Patricia Scott Southern.
Sen. John Stennis (D Miss.) -- John H. Stennis.
Rep. Charles M. Teague (R Calif.) -- Alan Teague.

1959 LISTING OF SENATORS

The New York Herald Tribune News Service March 28 released a survey showing the following Senators with relatives on Senate payrolls. (Where salaries are included, they either were supplied by the Senator or, in the case of committee employees, appeared in the Congressional Record.)

Sen. John A. Carroll (D Colo.) -- Diane Carroll, 27, daughter and father's administrative assistant, whose annual salary was cut from $12,500 to $10,500 after a March 2 news story disclosed she also was a law school student. She later dropped half of her school work load.

Sen. Francis Case (R S.D.) -- Mary Jane Case, daughter, who was father's secretary and college student until her marriage in February.

Sen. John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.) -- Mary Heiser, sister, employed at $2,679 annually.

Sen. James O. Eastland (D Miss.) -- Nell Eastland, daughter, secretary.

Sen. Clair Engle (D Calif.) -- Lucretia Caldwell Engle, wife, employed as secretary.

Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D N.C.) -- Margaret L. Ervin, daughter, listed as office staff member.

Sen. Albert Gore (D Tenn.) -- Mrs. Christine M. Coggins, niece, employed in office at $4,951 annually; Mrs. Grace G. Keys, sister, employed in Senate Post Office; Joe A. Marks, nephew, employed in Senate Post Office at $4,192 annually.

Sen. Thomas C. Hennings Jr. (D Mo.) -- Mrs. Sue H. McCandless, daughter, research assistant at $5,735 a year for Judiciary Committee's Constitutional Rights Subcommittee, of which Hennings is chairman.

Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas), Senate Democratic Leader -- Sam Houston Johnson, brother, employed in office; Mary Johnson, brother's wife, secretary.

Sen. Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) -- Gladys N. Johnston, cousin, clerical assistant at $7,374 on Post Office and Civil Service Committee, which Johnston heads.

Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) -- Robert F. Kennedy, brother, chief counsel, at $16,000 annually, to Senate Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor or Management Field, of which Kennedy is a member.

Sen. Pat McNamara (D Mich.) -- Mary L. McNamara, wife, Detroit office; Joseph Cribben, nephew, Washington office.

Sen. James E. Murray (D Mont.) -- Charles E. Murray, son, administrative assistant, who began work for father in 1937 as file clerk at $1,800 annually, and whose current salary has been reported at $16,300.

Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) -- William L. Saltonstall, son, executive secretary.

Sen. John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) -- Ivo H. Sparkman, wife, secretary-clerk.

Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D Texas) -- Richard Yarborough, son, legislative assistant.

Sen. Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) -- William Don Russell, nephew, office employee; Richard B. Russell III, nephew, employed in Winder, Ga., office.

A March 4 Scripps-Howard disclosure that Rep. Randall S. Harmon (D Ind.) was collecting $100 a month for use of the front porch of his home in Indiana as a district office led to further news stories on the use Members of Congress make of their back-home offices. Representatives are granted free office space in Federal buildings in their districts, when available, or are permitted to draw up to $1,200 a year to rent space in privately owned buildings. They also get $600 a year for expenses of their district offices.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

HJ Res 352 -- Reported by House Administration Committee (H Rept 1061) Aug. 27, 1959.
● Passed by a 324-46 roll-call vote of the House Sept. 8. (See p. 392)

The joint resolution authorized $75,000 for plans for a third building for the Library of Congress, to be drawn up, with cost estimates, by the Architect of the Capitol. The building would house the Legislative Reference Service, Copyright Office and the map, music and photograph collections, according to the House Administration Committee.

The Senate did not act on H J Res 352 in 1959. If the measure were enacted in 1960, the preliminary plans would be drawn up and submitted to House and Senate Committees. Actual construction of the building could not begin until Congress enacted new legislation.

INTER-AMERICAN BANK

S 1928 -- Reported, amended, July 8, 1959 by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (S Rept 487).

● Passed by the Senate July 15 by an 89-3 roll-call vote. (See p. 426)

HR 7072 -- Reported, amended, July 16 by House Banking and Currency Committee (H Rept 678).

S 1928 -- Passed by voice vote of the House July 27 after HR 7072 had been passed by a 233-87 roll-call vote. (See p. 380)

PL 86-147 -- Signed into law Aug. 7.

S 1928 provided for United States membership in a $1 billion Inter-American Development Bank and authorized a $450 million U.S. subscription to the new institution. Appropriations of $350 million for the purchase of 35,000 shares of capital stock and $100 million as the U.S. share of the bank's Fund for Special Operations were authorized.

The Administration's proposal for U.S. participation in the new international bank met with little opposition. On the recommendation of Dr. Milton S. Eisenhower in a Dec. 27, 1958 report on Latin America, U.S. membership in the institution was formally proposed to Congress in a May 11 Presidential message. The President described the bank as "a most significant step in the history of our economic relations with our Latin American neighbors." (For text of message, see p. 654)

Hearings on S 1928 and HR 7072-73 were held by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee June 23 and the House Banking and Currency Subcommittee No. 1 June 3-5. Testifying before both Committees on behalf of the bills were Secretary of the Treasury Robert B. Anderson and Under Secretary of State C. Douglas Dillon. Favorable testimony was given before the House Committee by former Secretary of State Dean Acheson and Frank T. Mitchell, spokesman for the American Bankers Assn. Victor C. Folsom of the U.S. Council of the International Chamber of Commerce told the House Committee that although the Council generally favored the bill, it was concerned that the bank might duplicate work of the Export-Import Bank and the World Bank and that it might create government competition with private lenders. The only opposition voiced before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee was by Walter Harnischfeger of the Citizens' Foreign Aid Committee.

In the July 27 House debate Rep. H. R. Gross (R Iowa) stated that the bank overlapped and duplicated other international lending institutions and was "the biggest foot you ever saw stuck in a door." Joseph W. Barr (D Ind.) replied that the World Bank and Monetary Fund were "so deeply involved in Africa, in Asia, and in many other parts of the world that the South American countries feel they are not getting a fair deal from the U.S."

The legislation was passed in identical form by each chamber with a minor amendment tightening Congressional control over U.S. financing of the bank.

PROVISIONS -- As it became law, S 1928:

Authorized the President to accept United States membership in the Inter-American Development Bank.

Authorized, without fiscal year limitation, appropriation of $350 million for the purchase of 35,000 shares of capital stock in the bank.

Authorized, on a similar basis, $100 million as the U.S. share of the Bank's Fund for Special Operations.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- The Supplemental Appropriations Bill for fiscal 1960 (HR 7978), passed by Congress Aug. 19 and signed into law Sept. 1 (PL 86-213), contained the $280 million appropriation requested by the Administration to meet the initial U.S. obligations to the bank.

Background

For several years Latin American countries had been interested in creating, with United States participation, an inter-American bank to encourage economic development and mutual cooperation. An agreement to establish the Inter-American Development Bank was signed April 9, 1959 in Washington by representatives of the 21 members of the Organization of American States.

When completed in 1960 the bank would be the sixth international lending institution in Washington, the others being the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the International Finance Corporation, the Export-Import Bank and the Development Loan Fund.

Plans called for the bank to have total resources of $1 billion, of which $850 million would be authorized capital stock for ordinary operations and $150 million would be the initial resources of a Fund for Special Operations. The fund would make loans on specific development projects repayable in the currency of the borrowing country. Of the $850 million in capital stock, $400 million would be paid-in capital and $450 million would be callable capital. Each member country would pay its share of the paid-in capital in three yearly installments, ending in 1962. The callable portion of the capital would provide a guarantee fund for bonds or other securities sold to private investors. Calls on this capital would be made only to meet the bank's liabilities on obligations it had issued.

PAN AMERICAN GAMES

HR 2575 -- Reported March 3, 1959 by House Foreign Affairs Committee (H Rept 95).

● Passed, amended, by the House March 23 by a 258-108 roll-call vote. (See p. 354)

● Reported March 25 by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (S Rept 152).

● Passed by the Senate April 13 by voice vote.

PL 86-15 -- Signed into law April 27.

An appropriation of $500,000 for the third Pan American Games was authorized by HR 2575. The "little Olympics" were held in Chicago Aug. 27-Sept. 7.

The bill provided that funds be disbursed through the State Department to the Pan American Sports Organization to help pay transportation and subsistence expenses of approximately 2,000 participants from Canada, the Caribbean, Central and South America and the United States.

A similar bill had been passed by the House in 1958 by a 244-64 roll-call vote but the Senate did not act on it. (For 1958 voting see 1958 Almanac p. 414)

The Second Supplemental Appropriation bill for fiscal 1959 (HR 5916), approved by Congress May 14 and signed into law May 20 (PL 86-30), provided the $500,000 authorized by HR 2575.

FOREIGN SERVICE CHANGES

S 2633 -- Reported Sept. 2, 1959 by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (S Rept 880).
- Passed by the Senate Sept. 9 by voice vote.

Senate passage of S 2633 reflected growing Congressional concern with raising the standards for Foreign Service personnel and revising the State Department's traditional assignment policy. The Foreign Service Act Amendments of 1959, pending before the House Foreign Affairs Committee as the first session ended, tightened language requirements for Foreign Service officers, revised administration of the service and authorized a $100 million increase in funds for its buildings.

S 2633 originated in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which had under consideration several bills to amend the Foreign Service Act of 1946.

The bill stated, as the policy of Congress, that chiefs of mission and other Foreign Service officers should have, "to the maximum practicable extent," a "useful knowledge" of the language, history, culture, economic and political institutions and interests of the country in which they serve. S 2633 gave the State Department five years to provide increased language training, with the cost of implementing the program estimated at $250,000 annually. Following that period, specified positions would be filled only by those meeting language requirements.

The bill also expressed the policy that U.S. diplomats needed more "functional and geographic area specialization." Sen. J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.), chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, told the Senate a State Department spokesman said the policy statement made a "very great improvement" in the bill.

Deputy Under Secretary of State Loy W. Henderson, testifying before a Foreign Relations Subcommittee April 16, said that his department's biggest need was for adequate funds to finance additional foreign language training of overseas personnel.

The Committee report (S Rept 880) said a low level of language competency was one of the most justified criticisms of the Foreign Service, and that whether or not the language policy statement became a part of the law, the Committee would continue to measure nominees for chiefs of mission against its expressed standards. "There are too many nominees, career and noncareer, who are merely so-so, not bad enough to reject but not really first rate," the report said.

The report also criticized the department's traditional assignment policy which requires officers to serve in different kinds of jobs in various geographic areas before they can qualify for top posts. Such a policy might result in development of an officer who was "a jack of all trades and master of none," the report warned. The Committee said it would like to see each incoming officer assured that most of his career would be devoted to one area.

PROVISIONS -- As sent to the House, S 2633, the Foreign Service Act Amendments of 1959:

Stated the policy of Congress on language requirements and directed the Secretary of State to arrange for appropriate training, designate posts to be filled only by those with such training, and after Dec. 31, 1963 appoint to those posts only language-qualified personnel.

Provided that, in conjunction with the language policy, special monetary incentives be offered to encourage proficiency in "esoteric foreign languages" or other special diplomatic skills; orientation and language training might be given wives of employees to be sent abroad.

Stated that increasing numbers of Foreign Service officers needed to acquire functional and geographic area specializations, and that such specialization should not prejudice their orderly promotion.

Authorized a $100 million increase in appropriations (half of it in foreign currencies) for erecting office buildings overseas.

Improved retirement benefits of career personnel and made other administrative changes in the law.

CHINA RESOLUTION

H Con Res 369 --Reported by House Foreign Affairs Committee Aug. 10, 1959 (H Rept 825).
- Adopted by the House Aug. 17 by a 368-2 roll-call vote. (See p. 384)

The House, in H Con Res 369, re-stated Congressional opposition to the admission of Communist China to the United Nations as the representative of China. Members voting against the resolution in the 368-2 roll-call vote Aug. 17 were William H. Meyer (D Vt.) and Thomas L. Ashley (D Ohio). Charles O. Porter (D Ore.) and Byron L. Johnson (D Colo.) were paired against it. (For voting, see chart p. 384)

In floor debate on the resolution, its sponsor, Clement J. Zablocki (D Wis.), said the statement was necessary in order to make it clear that the House had not changed its policy toward Red China.

Meyer said he would not argue the case for or against admission of Communist China but called the resolution "unnecessary, unwise...useless and possibly harmful." He said that "perhaps the present hatred (between the United States and the Communist world) may grow less intense if the pot is not constantly stirred."

The Foreign Affairs Committee report on the resolution (H Rept 825) said that since 1948 the House "on 15 occasions (had) approved language condemning the admission" of Communist China to the UN. It said that the issue was expected to be renewed at the fall session of the UN General Assembly, and that a re-emphasis of Congress' opposition was called for.

In minority views, Meyer objected that no hearings were held on the resolution in 1959 and said "little attention was given to the opinions of at least six Committee members who regarded the resolution as unnecessary or who questioned the wisdom of hasty action."

Two other statements in opposition to Red China's admission to the UN had already appeared in 1959 legislation. One became law July 13 as part of the fiscal 1960 appropriation bill for the Departments of State, Justice and the Judiciary (PL 86-84). The other was contained in the committee version of the mutual security appropriation bill (HR 8385) but was deleted on the House floor as a result of a point of order raised by Rep. Porter. (See story p. 191)

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- Aug. 7 -- President Eisenhower, replying to a letter from Porter on U.S. policy toward Communist China, said: "I cannot agree with you that it would be desirable for this country to give diplomatic recognition to Communist China or for me to invite Chou En-lai to visit this country."

UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFITS

HR 5640 -- Reported by House Ways and Means Committee (H Rept 212) March 13, 1959.
- Passed by voice vote of the House March 16.
- Reported by Senate Finance Committee, with a minor amendment (S Rept 135), March 23.
- Passed by voice vote of the Senate March 25. (See p. 403 for roll calls on amendments)
- Conference report (H Rept 257) adopted by voice votes of both houses March 25.

P. L. 86-7 -- Signed into law March 31.

Against a background of declining unemployment reports from the Labor and Commerce Departments and claims by organized labor that the unemployment situation created by the 1958-59 recession was far from corrected, Congress in 1959 voted to extend for three months the time in which jobless workers could collect unemployment checks under the Temporary Unemployment Compensation Act of 1958. (1958 Almanac p. 153)

As in 1958, Congress also considered proposals to revise the Federal-state unemployment insurance program and extend its coverage. But the proposals did not get beyond the hearing stage in the House and no action was taken in the Senate in 1959.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, HR 5640:

Permitted persons who had exhausted their regular unemployment benefits and applied for special additional benefits under the 1958 Act before it expired in April to continue receiving the additional benefits through June 30, 1959 or as long as they were available under state law, whichever date was sooner.

Background

REFERENCE -- Unemployment Benefits (1958 Almanac p. 153).

The Temporary Unemployment Compensation Act of 1958 (PL 85-441) provided Federal loans to states that wished to extend the period for which they pay unemployment benefits. The Act, however, set a cut-off date of April 1, 1959 for the temporary extended program.

Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) early in 1959 renewed his efforts to establish strong Federal standards for the unemployment insurance system that currently is left to the discretion of the individual states. His bill (S 791), and companion House measures (HR 3547, 3548) introduced by Reps. Frank M. Karsten (D Mo.) and Thaddeus M. Machrowicz (D Mich.), would provide uniform benefits periods of 39 weeks in all states and require benefits payments to be not less than 50 percent of the average earnings of the state's workers.

The Administration, however, opposed the Federal "minimum standard" principle for unemployment insurance and instead proposed encouraging the states to establish benefit periods of at least 26 weeks and benefits totaling no less than half the worker's average wage. The Administration's proposal, as outlined in House Ways and Means Committee hearings, also would raise the wage base on which unemployment insurance taxes are paid from $3,000 to $4,200 annually.

Drop in Unemployment Figures

Beginning in March 1959, the unemployment figures compiled by the Labor and Commerce Departments steadily declined. A Labor Department spokesman April 7 held a special press conference to announce that in March unemployment had declined by 387,000 -- to 4,362,000. This was a seasonally adjusted unemployment rate of 5.8 percent. Employment was up by 1,106,000 to 64,828,000, the spokesman said. The unemployment figures for January and February had not been encouraging, holding to the November 1958 recession level of somewhat over 6 percent unemployment. By June 1959, however, the Departments reported that employment had reached an all-time high of 67,342,000 -- an increase of 4.6 million since February. Unemployment stood at 3,982,000 and the seasonally adjusted rate remained at the May level of 4.9 percent.

At a March 23 conference with the executive committee of the U.S. Governors Conference, President Eisenhower emphasized that unemployment insurance was a state responsibility. Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell, in reporting on the conference, said the President called for extension of unemployment insurance coverage to some 3.2 million additional workers. However, no legislation to implement the Administration's program was introduced in the 1959 session.

At the close of the Ways and Means Committee consideration of unemployment compensation proposals May 18, Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.) and ranking Republican Richard M. Simpson (Pa.) introduced identical bills (HR 7177, 7178) which would boost the unemployment tax rate on employers from 3 to 3.1 percent, and make an additional 200,000 workers eligible for unemployment insurance. No action was taken on the bills.

AFL-CIO RALLY

Capitol Hill was not the only scene of action on proposals to revise the unemployment law. An AFL-CIO conference on unemployment convened in Washington April 8, bringing approximately 6,000 unionists -- half of them jobless workers, half local union officials -- to the Nation's capital.

AFL-CIO President George Meany, in his opening address to the delegates, said they were there to "breathe a little of the spirit of humanity into the cold statistics of unemployment." He said industry had been able to bounce back from adversity "without a scar" but employment lagged "further and further behind" and Washington seemed willing to accept the situation "as a necessary evil." Meany urged extension and liberalization of Federal unemployment insurance along with increased Federal spending for housing, airports, highways and aid to economically depressed areas.

Secretary of Labor Mitchell told the rally the Government itself should not provide jobs for all but should promote conditions conducive to full employment. He predicted there would be 67 million workers employed by October or "I'll eat my hat on the steps of the Labor Department." (Employment topped the July 1957 record of 67,221,000 in June -- see box.)

TEMPORARY LAW EXTENSION

On March 4, Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D Mass.) told the House that he and Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas) had conferred with Ways and Means Committee Chairman Mills and told him that "something should be done" about extending the 1958 temporary compensation law for 350,000 to 400,000 workers who would lose their additional benefits April 1, when the law expired. McCormack said Mills had agreed to act on proposals before the Easter recess began March 28. Sen. Kennedy the next day responded favorably to the McCormack-Rayburn proposal but said he hoped a temporary extension would not forestall consideration of his broader proposals.

House

COMMITTEE -- Ways and Means.

ACTION -- March 13 reported a clean bill (HR 5640 -- H Rept 212) extending until July 1, 1959 certain benefits under the 1958 Act. HR 5640 permitted persons who had exhausted regular unemployment benefits before April 1 to continue receiving the additional benefits through June 30 or as long as they ran under state law, whichever date was sooner. In all other respects, the program would expire as scheduled April 1.

The report said the bill was designed to provide a "gradual closing out of the existing temporary program rather than a sudden discontinuance of it." The report estimated that the extension would provide payment to about 405,000 individuals and would involve costs of approximately $78 million. No additional appropriations were needed to cover the extension, it said.

In supplemental views, five Committee Democrats protested the "limited nature" of the Committee's action and emphasized the need for basic revisions in the unemployment compensation program.

The Committee originally had considered Democratic proposals to extend the temporary benefits program for one year but voted the three-month extension after the Administration opposed the longer extension.

Floor Action

The House March 16 passed HR 5640 by voice vote and sent it to the Senate. Passage of the bill as reported by the Committee came under suspension of the rules, a procedure that requires a two-thirds majority, limits debate to 40 minutes and prohibits floor amendments.

DEBATE -- March 16 -- Mills -- The bill does not go as far as "some of the Committee wanted it to go, but it became quite evident to me that we could not go further... and expect to enact a program of any extension whatsoever in this field."

Thaddeus M. Machrowicz (D Mich.) -- There is a "stubborn, hard core" of serious unemployment despite the current expansion of production.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Finance.

HEARING -- March 20 on HR 5640. Eighteen Democratic Senators, co-sponsors of a Pat McNamara (D Mich.) substitute bill (S 1323) to extend the entire 1958 temporary program until July 1, 1960, submitted a statement urging the Committee to approve their bill. They cited continued high unemployment which they said was only slightly below what it was when the temporary law was enacted in 1958. The Senators estimated the total cost of the proposed 15-month extension would be $875 million. Otto F. Christenson, representing the Minnesota Employers Assn., urged the Committee to report the House-passed bill.

ACTION -- The Committee March 23 reported HR 5640 (S Rept 135) in substantially the same form as passed by the House. The only difference was a technical change made at the suggestion of the Labor Department to provide that the cut-off dates for filing special benefits applications could coincide with varying state programs.

Floor Action

The Senate March 25 passed HR 5640 by voice vote after rejecting, by a 38-49 roll-call vote, a substitute amendment by Sen. McNamara to extend the entire program for another 15 months. The Senate then accepted, on a 52-32 roll call, an amendment to extend all provisions of the 1958 temporary unemployment benefits law until July 1, 1959. (For voting, see chart p. 403)

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, HR 5640:

Extended all provisions of the Temporary Unemployment Compensation Act of 1958 until July 1, 1959.

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.) -- Extend in full the provisions of the 1958 Act through June 30, 1959; March 25. Roll-call vote, 52-32.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

Pat McNamara (D Mich.) -- Extend the 1958 Act until July 1, 1960; March 25. Roll call, 38-49.

DEBATE -- March 25 -- McNamara -- At most, 405,000 persons would benefit under the committee version of the bill while his substitute amendment would provide relief for about 375 million persons over 15 months.

McCarthy -- The McCarthy amendment would "give some measure of benefits...to the large number of unemployed persons who would otherwise...receive no unemployment compensation whatsoever" in the three-month period ending July 1 and would give state legislatures additional time to act under the emergency program.

Conference

REPORT -- Following a 20-minute conference on the two versions of HR 5640, House-Senate conferees reported the compromise measure (H Rept 257) March 25. They agreed to accept the House version but added the Senate's technical provisions to make the law conform to various states' cut-off dates.

ACTION -- Both the House and Senate adopted the conference report on HR 5640 by voice votes March 25.

UNEMPLOYMENT LAW REVISION

COMMITTEE -- House Ways and Means.

HEARINGS -- April 7-16 on proposals to improve the Federal-state unemployment insurance system.

TESTIMONY -- April 7 -- Under Secretary of Labor James T. O'Connell said the Administration would not recommend to Congress any change in the law that would result in the Federal Government imposing minimum standards for unemployment benefits on the states. He said the Administration favored bringing 3.2 million additional workers under the coverage of the program, which currently applies to approximately 44 million employees. The extended coverage would be accomplished, he said, by making the law apply to employers who, for any period during a year, had one, two or three employees. The law currently applies only to employers who employ more than three workers for a period of at least 20 weeks during a year. If a fourth employee is employed for a shorter period, the employer currently is exempted from unemployment insurance taxation.

The Administration also proposed raising from $3,000 to $4,200 annually the wage base on which unemployment insurance taxes are paid. The entire tax of 3 percent is paid by the employer. The purpose of increasing the tax base would be to give the Federal Government a greater share of the tax to meet increased costs of administering the program, O'Connell said. Of the 3 percent tax, 2.7 percent is earmarked for states to pay benefits and the remainder for the Government to pay administrative costs of the joint program.

O'Connell said the states were making "reasonably satisfactory" progress in improving their benefits without Federal standards. Rep. Frank Karsten (D Mo.) asked O'Connell if he could name a state that had raised both the rate and duration of benefits payments to levels considered adequate by President Eisenhower. O'Connell replied, "Not specifically."

O'Connell was questioned on whether he was speaking for Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell as well as for the Administration in opposing Federal minimum standards. Mitchell had been reported as favoring Federal standards. O'Connell replied it could be presumed he was speaking for both.

Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.) said he also would not support "the idea of Federal standards," primarily on the grounds that the prerogative belonged to the states. He questioned, however, the "equity" of the Administration's proposal to raise taxes without requiring higher benefits. He suggested that the proposal might strengthen the cause of advocates of minimum Federal standards.

LABOR'S VIEWS

April 10 -- AFL-CIO President Meany testified in support of HR 3547, the Karsten-Machrowicz bill setting Federal minimum standards for uniform benefits periods of 39 weeks and benefits payments of not less than 50 percent of the average earnings of a state's workers.

Meany said the absence of Federal minimum standards in the Federal-state system had permitted insurance tax rates to drop in many states, encouraged employers "to carve up state laws" and created tax cost differentials among state programs that had created interstate competition for industry. Meany said the Administration's appeals to the states to raise their own standards were "of no avail."

April 13 -- Tallulah Bankhead and Peggy Cass, representing the Actors' Equity Assn., urged improved unemployment benefits for actors. Miss Bankhead is the daughter of the late Rep. William B. Bankhead (D Ala. 1917-1940) who served as Speaker of the House from 1936-1940.

Gov. Herschel C. Loveless (D Iowa) urged passage of HR 3547. He said revision of the Federal-state unemployment insurance program would provide "at least a subsistence level of income security to American workers ...and a valuable stabilizing force in our economy."

A spokesman for the Bell System telephone companies said imposition of Federal standards on states would be unwise, costly and destructive of incentives for employers to stabilize employment.

April 14 -- Spokesmen for the National Assn. of Manufacturers and the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S. opposed changes in the Federal-state unemployment system. They said imposition of Federal standards on the states would lead to ultimate Federal control of the program.

April 15 -- Edward D. Hollander, national director of Americans for Democratic Action, urged passage of HR 3547. He said since unemployment has its origins in the national economy, Congress must "take the action which will modernize the unemployment compensation system and bring it nearer adequacy."

BILLS CONSIDERED

ACTION -- Following its public hearings on the proposals, the Committee went into executive session to consider reporting a bill to revise the unemployment law. After voting April 22 to suspend its consideration of proposals to set Federal minimum standards, the Committee May 14 reconsidered its action and voted to reject HR 3547 and other bills establishing Federal standards. On May 18 the Committee ended consideration of the subject without reaching agreement on any unemployment legislation.

Before adjourning, it rejected, 11-13, a policy statement calling on the states to raise their jobless pay benefits to 50 percent of an individual's average wage, or 60 percent of the state average wage, whichever was lower. The Administration-backed policy statement was rejected after opponents held that, although it would not be binding on the states, the states would interpret it as designed to force them to act.

The same day, Chairman Mills and ranking GOP Member Simpson introduced identical bills (HR 7177, 7178). Mills said the measures would: increase the Federal tax from three-tenths to four-tenths of 1 percent, thus providing additional funds to make temporary advances to states whose reserves were depleted by heavy unemployment; increase from the current $200 million to $550 million the ceiling on a loan fund available for state borrowing; extend coverage to about 200,000 employees of certain tax-exempt agencies and a few other groups.

AREA REDEVELOPMENT

S 722 -- Reported by Senate Banking and Currency Committee (S Rept 110) March 18, 1959.

- Passed by the Senate by a 49-46 roll-call vote March 23. (See p. 403)
- Reported, amended, by House Banking and Currency Committee (H Rept 360) May 14.

Final action on the latest in a series of bills providing Federal aid to economically depressed areas was delayed at least until 1960. During the 1959 Congressional session, S 722 was passed by the Senate, trimmed down and reported by the House Banking and Currency Committee but, at session's end, still was awaiting clearance to the floor by the House Rules Committee.

Although the President had requested area redevelopment legislation in his annual budget message, both the Senate and House versions of S 722 far exceeded the program that was drawn up and recommended by the Administration.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, S 722:

Established within the Executive Branch of the Federal Government an Area Redevelopment Administration to be assisted by a cabinet-level Area Redevelopment Advisory Board and a Citizens' National Public Advisory Committee.

Directed the Area Redevelopment Administrator to designate as industrial redevelopment areas those areas within the U.S. where year-round unemployment is currently six percent or more, has averaged at least six percent for a minimum of two years and where the annual average unemployment rate has been at least 50 percent over the national average for three of the preceding four years, 75 percent over the national average for two of the preceding three years or 100 percent for one of the preceding two calendar years.

Directed the Administrator to designate as rural redevelopment areas those areas in which reside the highest numbers and percentages of low-income families and where there is substantial and persistent unemployment or underemployment.

Authorized the Administrator to borrow $200 million from the Treasury to set up two revolving loan funds of $100 million each, one for industrial redevelopment and one for rural redevelopment.

Specified that Federal participation in a redevelopment project must not exceed 65 percent and that loans made to approved applicants to carry out such projects must provide more than temporary relief from unemployment or underemployment, that they must be repaid within 30 years, with possible extensions up to 40 years, and bear an interest rate .5 percent above the Treasury rate.

Authorized the Administrator to borrow from the Treasury an additional $100 million from which loans would be made, under similar conditions, for the construction and improvement of public facilities within industrial or rural redevelopment areas.

Authorized appropriations for grants of $75 million for public facilities in those redevelopment areas which could not afford Federal loans.

Authorized annual appropriations of $4.5 million for technical assistance to redevelopment areas.

Authorized appropriations of $10 million for subsistence payments to unemployed workers in redevelopment areas while they are being trained for new jobs.

Directed the Secretary of Labor to provide vocational training to the labor force in such areas if it is needed.

Amended the Housing Act of 1949 to make urban renewal funds available for commercial or industrial redevelopment.

Background

REFERENCE -- Area Redevelopment Bill Vetoed, (1958 Almanac, p. 147).

As the 86th Congress convened in January 1959, the backers of area redevelopment legislation, headed by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), were confident that the heavy Democratic majorities in both House and Senate would insure passage of a liberal measure providing Federal assistance to urban areas of chronic high unemployment and to rural areas depressed by high unemployment and low income levels.

The bill (S 722) introduced Jan. 27 by Douglas and 38 co-sponsors, including five Republicans, adhered generally to the formula contained in the unsuccessful Douglas-Payne bill of 1958 (S 3683).

The Senate May 13, 1958, in passing S 3683 by a 46-36 vote, had authorized $379.5 million in Federal loans and grants for redevelopment of depressed areas. The House Aug. 15, by a 176-130 standing vote, passed a cut-down version of the bill. As sent to the White House, S 3683 established an Area Redevelopment Administration in the Housing and Home Finance Agency; defined industrial and rural areas eligible for assistance in terms of the duration and percentage of unemployment and the number of low-income families; authorized the ARA to borrow $200 million from the Treasury to set up two $100-million loan funds for redevelopment purposes in industrial and rural areas; set loan terms at 40-year maturity and an interest rate one quarter of one percent above the average rate on Treasury notes; authorized $75 million for grants for the construction of public facilities in redevelopment areas.

President Eisenhower Sept. 6, 1958 pocket vetoed the bill because he said it provided "for less local participation in the costs of local development projects than is proper or necessary to stimulate and assure the continuing interest and support of local governmental and private interests."

In introducing S 722, the successor to the Douglas-Payne bill, Sen. Douglas said: "We believe that conditions are such that the President will not veto the bill at this time."

LABOR SURPLUS AREAS

Douglas pointed to reports of the Labor Department's Bureau of Employment Security which in January 1959 classified as labor surplus areas 76 of the Nation's 149 major labor market areas. In July 1958, official reports had indicated there were 89 areas of substantial labor surplus, the highest figure recorded since the area survey was initiated in 1951.

However, with the steady improvement in the U.S. economic climate during 1959, the number of "distressed" areas declined considerably. The July report of the Bureau of Economic Security designated 46 major industrial centers as labor surplus areas. The report stated: "The vigor and scope of the recovery during recent months suggest that the labor surplus list should continue to shrink over the next few months." It added, however, that the improvements "are likely to be confined to labor surplus areas where unemployment problems are primarily recession-connected."

Singled out in the report were 17 "chronic" labor surplus areas which the report said "fared worse than the Nation generally during the recent recession and...have not improved as much as the rest of the country during the recent recovery period."

Unemployment in these hard-hit areas, the report said, was at least 50 percent above the national average for at least four of the last five years. The average rate of unemployment in the 17 areas during May 1959 was 10.9 percent -- more than double the unemployment rate for the Nation as a whole.

As listed in the report, the 17 areas suffering from persistent unemployment were: Altoona, Erie, Johnstown, Scranton and Wilkes-Barre-Hazleton, Pa.; Fall River, Lawrence, Lowell and New Bedford, Mass.; Evansville and Terre Haute, Ind.; Detroit and Muskegon, Mich.; Asheville, N.C.; Atlantic City, N.J.; Providence, R.I.; and Charleston, W.Va. In addition, 53 smaller areas -- areas with a labor force between 15,000 and 50,000 -- were classified as "areas of substantial labor surplus." Each of these areas would meet the eligibility requirements for Federal aid under the Douglas bill.

Factors contributing to higher-than-average unemployment rates in the chronic areas were numerous. Some examples given in the Labor Department's report were the increasing use of gas and oil for home-heating which had cut into the anthracite coal market and resulted in production cutbacks in Scranton and Wilkes-Barre-Hazleton, Pa.; the mechanization of mining operations in the bituminous coal areas of Johnstown, Pa. and Charleston, W.Va.; the switch from steam to diesel engines which had boosted jobless totals in Altoona, Pa. and other railroad centers; the consumers' growing preference for synthetic fibers over wool and cotton textiles, formerly the main source of employment in a number of New England cities.

On Feb. 16 Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) introduced a bill (S 1064) embodying the proposals for area redevelopment legislation laid down by the President in his Jan. 7 Budget Message. The bill called for appropriations of $50 million for a revolving loan fund for industrial redevelopment and $3 million annually for technical assistance grants.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency, Production and Stabilization Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- Feb. 25-27, March 2 (in Detroit), 4-6 (in West Virginia) on the Douglas bill (S 722), the Administration bill (S 1064) and a $200-million compromise measure (S 268) sponsored by Sen. Hugh Scott (R Pa.).

Opposition to any redevelopment legislation was expressed by spokesmen for the National Assn. of Manufacturers and the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S. The Douglas bill was supported by the AFL-CIO and the U.S. Council of Mayors, whose chief spokesman was the Mayor of Detroit, Louis C. Miriani (D).

Frederick H. Mueller, then Under Secretary, and later Secretary of Commerce, told the Subcommittee the Administration's bill was realistic in relation to the department's estimates of the needs of the chronically depressed areas. Mueller said he did not include Detroit in his calculations of areas with "excess unemployment" because he did not "think anyone is presumptuous enough to think that any of these bills...will cure the economic problems of a large metropolitan area like Detroit."

ACTION -- March 11 -- The full Banking and Currency Committee voted 9-6 to recommend Senate passage of S 722. Republicans J. Glenn Beall (Md.) and Jacob K. Javits (N.Y.) joined seven Democrats in support of S 722. Voting against reporting it were Democrats A. Willis Robertson (Va.), J.W. Fulbright (Ark.) and J. Allen Frear Jr. (Del.) and Republicans Homer E. Capehart (Ind.), Wallace F. Bennett (Utah) and Prescott Bush (Conn.). The bill was reported (S Rept 110) March 18.

The six-man minority said the bill would provide relief for "only a very small proportion of the Nation's unemployed," and that the actual Federal costs would be much higher than the bill's authorization. They criticized the methods of determining redevelopment areas as "arbitrary and unworkable" and questioned the length of time that Federal aid would be continued.

Floor Action

The Senate March 23 passed S 722 by a 49-46 roll-call vote and sent it to the House. (For voting, see chart p. 403) Minority Leader Dirksen attempted to amend the $389.5 million Douglas bill by substituting for it the language of the Administration's $53 million bill. The Dirksen amendment was rejected by a 43-52 roll-call vote. Douglas said the amendment was unacceptable, not only because it authorized much less Federal money but also because it neglected redevelopment in rural areas, made no provision for the improvement of community facilities to attract new industries to hard-hit sections and placed the administration of the program under the Secretary of Commerce.

Also rejected, by a 20-74 roll call, was a compromise measure offered by Hugh Scott (R Pa.). The Scott amendment authorized $200 million for three revolving loan funds and specified, as did the Dirksen amendment, that the funds be financed by Congressional appropriations. Scott's amendment limited Federal participation in redevelopment projects to 50 percent, as compared to 35 percent in the Dirksen amendment and 65 percent in the Douglas bill.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Dirksen -- Substitute for the Douglas bill the provisions of an Administration-approved bill (S 1064) authorizing appropriations of $50 million for a revolving loan fund and $3 million annually for technical assistance grants; March 23. Roll-call vote, 43-52.

Scott -- Substitute for the Douglas bill the language of S 268, authorizing appropriations of $200 million for three revolving loan funds: $100 million for industrial redevelopment, $50 million for rural redevelopment and $50 million for public facilities; March 23. Roll call, 20-74.

Prescott Bush (R Conn.) and Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- Tighten the provision in the Douglas bill prohibiting loans to help an industry move into a redevelopment area if it would cause unemployment in the area in which the industry was originally located; restrict the use of Federal loans in an industrial redevelopment area to lands and buildings, thereby preventing the use of Federal money for the acquisition of machinery and equipment; March 23. Roll call, 33-60.

DEBATE -- March 19 -- Douglas -- S 722 "is not a relief measure. Rather, it is a program of long-term investment in repayable loans."

March 23 -- Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) -- "This bill is raising false hopes of innocent people, who are being led to believe the pending legislation will cure their unemployment problems immediately."

A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) -- "The present bill makes unemployment the test, ignoring the reasons for unemployment in a given area and, in fact, selecting areas (because) their economies have deteriorated."

House

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency, Subcommittee No. 3.

HEARINGS -- March 9-20 on S 722, HR 3505 (similar to S 722) and other area redevelopment proposals.

ACTION -- The full Committee May 5 voted 13-6, with six members abstaining and five absent, to report an amended version of S 722, as recommended by the Subcommittee. The report was printed May 14 (H Rept 360).

As amended by the Committee, S 722 set up two $75-million revolving loan funds, one for industrial areas and one for rural areas. It authorized $50 million for public facility loans and another $35 million for public facility grants in the more impoverished areas; $10 million was earmarked for subsistence payments to workers being retrained, $4.5 million for technical aid and $1.5 million for vocational training grants. The total authorization carried in the Committee bill was $251 million.

The majority report outlined five major causes of depressed areas -- technological change, migration of industry, shifts in consumer demand, protracted seasonal unemployment and depletion of resources -- and concluded that "outside assistance...must come from the Federal Government."

It said the cut to $251 million from the $389.5 million approved by the Senate was intended to avoid a Presidential veto, but further cuts could not be made without killing the program before it got started. "Halfway measures... could easily be worse than none," the report stated, because they would "discredit all Federal efforts to bring effective assistance to these hard-hit communities."

MINORITY REPORT

Seven Republicans filed a minority report: Clarence E. Kilburn (N.Y.), Gordon L. McDonough (Calif.), William B. Widnall (N.J.), Edgar W. Hiestand (Calif.), Perkins Bass (N.H.), Edward J. Derwinski (Ill.) and William H. Milliken Jr. (Pa.). In it they stated: "This whole (area redevelopment) idea is impractical in that it will not work unless there is direct or indirect pirating of business from one section of the country to another, and we do not think Federal funds should be used for that purpose."

A third report, signed by Charles A. Vanik (D Ohio), Paul A. Fino (R N.Y.), Florence P. Dwyer (R N.J.) and Seymour Halpern (R N.Y.), said the bill as reported might result in "the migration or pirating of industries from established areas into depressed ones." They suggested adding language to make clear that the program's purpose was to create new employment opportunities and not simply to shift industry from one area to another with the effect of "distributing the distress more evenly throughout the country."

In a May 19 letter to Rules Committee Chairman Howard W. Smith (D Va.), Rep. Brent Spence (D Ky.), chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, asked that S 722 be given a rule and cleared for House debate. The Rules Committee took no action on the request.

HOPES FOR 1960

Gov. David L. Lawrence (D Pa.), following a July 29 meeting with House Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas), said Rayburn told him he would do anything he could to get S 722 through the House.

Rep. Daniel J. Flood (D Pa.) Sept. 3 said he and other supporters of S 722 had been assured of help from Rayburn in dislodging the bill from the House Rules Committee in 1960. Flood said he and Rep. Cleveland M. Bailey (D W.Va.) had spoken to Rayburn about the bill and "the Speaker assured us that if we bring the bill to him in January, and if circumstances are as they are now, he would assure us of his support."

UNEMPLOYMENT STUDY

The changing employment picture in 1959, which improved radically between January and June, produced two Senatorial attempts to set up a study group on unemployment problems.

Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) initially sponsored a bill (S 1631) to establish an 11-man Commission on Unemployment Problems. The introduction of the bill April 8 coincided with the opening in Washington of the AFL-CIO mass conference on unemployment. (See story p. 219) By the end of the day, 67 Senators, 18 of them Republicans, had joined with Johnson as co-sponsors of S 1631.

The bill was passed by the Senate April 10 by voice vote.

PROVISIONS -- As sent to the House, S 1631 would have:

Set up an 11-member Commission on Unemployment Problems to investigate and study unemployment conditions, giving particular consideration to areas of critical unemployment to determine "what can be done to alleviate such conditions."

Directed the commission to report its recommendations and findings to Congress within 60 days after all appointments were made.

Provided that the commission be composed of three Senators, three Representatives and five Presidential appointees.

Provided that of the five Presidential appointees no more than three could represent one political party and no more than two could represent any one of the fields of agriculture, labor or industry.

Although President Eisenhower told House Republican leaders April 14 that S 1361 had his support and House Minority Leader Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.) announced there would be no organized Republican opposition to the bill, the House failed to act on it. Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) later said "amelioration" of unemployment conditions was the reason for inaction on the bill by the House.

Special Senate Committee

Prompted by the House failure to act, Johnson and Dirksen Sept. 12 sponsored S Res 196, which created a temporary, nine-member Senate Committee on Unemployment Problems. It was adopted by the Senate the same day, by voice vote. As stipulated in the resolution, the new Committee was given $100,000, instructed to report its findings and recommendations by Jan. 31, 1960, and charged with studying unemployment conditions in the U.S., "giving particular consideration to areas of critical unemployment."

Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.) Sept. 16 was named chairman of the Committee. Other members appointed were Democrats Pat McNamara (Mich.), Joseph S. Clark (Pa.), Jennings Randolph (W.Va.), R. Vance Hartke (Ind.) and Gale McGee (Wyo.) and Republicans John Sherman Cooper (Ky.), Hugh Scott (Pa.) and Winston L. Prouty (Vt.). Almost all the members were from states with large "labor surplus" areas.

McCarthy Sept. 17 said the group would study the effects of automation and technological changes on unemployment; job problems of the aged, handicapped, migrant workers, young people and racial minorities; and possible effects of a defense production cutback.

AIRPORT CONSTRUCTION

S 1 -- Reported by Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee Feb. 5, 1959 (S Rept 49).

- Passed, amended, by the Senate, by a 63-22 roll-call vote, Feb. 6. (See p. 400)

HR 1011 -- Reported, amended, by House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee March 2 (H Rept 93).

S 1 -- Passed, amended, by the House, by a 272-134 roll-call vote, March 19. (See p. 352)

- Conference report (H Rept 538) filed June 11, reporting conferees' failure to agree.
- Senate motion to adopt compromise version as a substitute for the House-passed bill agreed to June 15, by a 71-11 roll-call vote. (See p. 416)
- House motion to adopt compromise Senate version, with an amendment, agreed to by a 164-37 standing vote June 17.
- Senate, by voice vote, agreed to House amendment June 17.

P. L. 86-72 -- Signed into law June 29.

One of the first casualties of the 1959 "battle of the budget" was a controversial measure calling for a substantial increase in Federal aid to cities for local airport construction projects. A similar bill had been passed by large majorities in 1958, only to be pocket vetoed by President Eisenhower.

When the 86th Congress convened in January, Democrats backing airport-aid legislation, led by Sen. A.S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.), were confident that the heavy reinforcements provided them by the 1958 Congressional elections would enable them to push through what they considered an adequate bill and, if necessary, to override another Presidential veto.

A new bill (S 1) employing the same formula that was opposed by the Administration in 1958 was the first Senate bill to be introduced in the 86th Congress. It started out as a $575-million, five-year program designed to ready the Nation's air terminals for the jet age. President Eisenhower had requested a $200-million, four-year authorization that would provide for "an orderly withdrawal from the program by 1964."

In the face of Republican veto threats and charges of "budget-busting," the original version of S 1 was cut to four years and $465 million by the Senate and to four years and $297 million by the House. However, Senate-House conferees failed to reach agreement on a compromise, and Congress finally enacted a simple two-year extension of the $63-million-a-year program in effect since 1955. The philosophy behind this action, as explained by Monroney, was that the two-year extension would be acceptable to President Eisenhower and that, when it expired, Congress could "legislate more wisely" with, he hoped, the help of a Democratic President.

PROVISIONS -- As signed by the President, S 1:

Authorized the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency to make annual matching grants of $62.1 million for airport construction projects in the original 48 states, Alaska and Hawaii in fiscal 1960 and 1961. Of the total, $45 million was to be apportioned to the 48 states according to area and population, $15 million was to be allotted at the FAA Administrator's discretion, and $1,350,000 in fixed grants for Alaska and $750,000 for Hawaii were continued. (On Sept. 21 the law was amended by PL 86-295 to make Alaska and Hawaii eligible for allotments from the $15 million discretionary fund -- see below.)

Authorized additional matching grants of $900,000 a year during fiscal 1960 and 1961 for airport projects in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

Limited the use of Federal funds in the construction of airport buildings to projects that would house Federal air safety agencies or were deemed essential to the public's safety, convenience or comfort by the Administrator of the FAA.

Directed the Administrator to make public by Jan. 1 of each year the program of airport aid to be undertaken during the following fiscal year.

Background

The Federal Airport Act of 1946 (PL 79-377) authorized the Federal Government to pay half the cost of building public airports. In 1955, Congress amended (PL 84-211) the Act and set the definite figure of $63 million a year for the program instead of relying on annual appropriations. The aid was scheduled to terminate June 30, 1959. (1955 Almanac p. 465)

President Eisenhower in 1958 pocket vetoed a bill, similar to the original version of S 1, that would have increased the fiscal 1959 authorization for airport grants from $63 million to $100 million and authorized annual matching grants of $100 million for fiscal 1960 through 1963. In vetoing the bill, President Eisenhower said he would recommend to the next Congress that Federal airport aid be tapered off and that in 1959 only a "transitional program" to aid construction of "urgent airport projects" should be provided. (1958 Almanac p. 309)

The President's airport aid plans were outlined in his Jan. 19, 1959 Budget Message in which he called for "an orderly withdrawal from the program by 1964." A bill (S 674) embodying the Administration proposals was introduced in the Senate Jan. 23. It called for an authorization of $65 million in fiscal 1960, decreasing to $35 million in fiscal 1963.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Aviation Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- Jan. 22-26 on airport-aid bills.

TESTIMONY -- Jan. 22 -- Subcommittee Chairman A.S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.), author of S 1, said additional Federal aid was needed to maintain aviation "as a vital link" in the Nation's transportation system. S 1 would provide an emergency fund of $75 million to help big airports prepare for the jet age and $100 million a year in matching grants for fiscal 1960 through 1964.

Administrator Elwood R. Quesada of the Federal Aviation Agency said S 1 was "outmoded, too high in cost and poorly designed to fulfill the proper area of Federal responsibility in meeting airport development needs in a timely and effective fashion." He supported the Administration bill (S 674) which would authorize $65 million for fiscal 1960; $55 million for fiscal 1961; $45 million for fiscal 1962; and $35 million for fiscal 1963 in dollar-for-dollar matching funds. The $200 million in Federal aid under S 674 would be confined to use for runways, aprons and tower facilities -- not terminal facilities.

Spokesmen for the Air Transport Assn., American Municipal Assn., AFL-CIO, National Aviation Trades Assn. and U.S. Conference of Mayors supported S 1.

Jan. 23 -- J. D. Durand, secretary of the Air Transport Assn., said in opposing the Administration's "orderly withdrawal" bill that "this certainly is not the time for the Federal Government to withdraw from the airport program."

Cyril C. Thompson of the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Assn. suggested that S 1 be amended to reserve 25 percent of the grants for cities that had not received Federal airport aid to date.

Jan. 26 -- George Dement, vice president of the Airport Operators Council, said cities could not pay airport costs by themselves and needed the type of Federal aid offered in S 1.

BILL REPORTED

ACTION -- The full Committee Feb. 5 reported an amended version of S 1 (S Rept 49). The original bill, as introduced by Monroney, provided $75 million to help large city airports. The Committee cut the fund to $65 million.

The final vote on the bill was 9-7 -- a party-line split except for Democratic Sen. Frank J. Lausche (Ohio) who voted with the Republicans. The same 9-7 split was reported on a vote defeating a compromise proposal by Sen. Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.) to continue the existing $63 million program for four years, and on a proposal to cut out aid for terminal buildings. Sen. Strom Thurmond (D S.C.) did not vote.

Floor Action

The Senate Feb. 6, by a 63-22 roll-call vote, passed S 1, amended to authorize $465 million over a four-year period in Federal aid for airport construction. The funds would be available to communities on a 50-50 matching basis beginning July 1, 1959. At the start of debate, the Senate accepted an amendment by Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) reducing the total authorization by $100 million by limiting the program to four years.

Three Republican-sponsored amendments designed to cut the bill's spending authorization were rejected by roll-call votes. Sen. Thruston B. Morton (R Ky.), author of one which would have cut grants to $308 million, told the Senate that if his amendment were accepted, he believed there would be a "reasonable chance" of the President signing the bill into law. (For voting, see chart p. 400)

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, S 1:

Authorized the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency to make matching grants of $95 million yearly in fiscal 1960 through 1963 to communities in the original 48 states for airport construction projects.

Authorized grants, also on a matching basis, of $5 million yearly in fiscal 1960-63 to communities in Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands for airport projects.

Authorized an additional $65 million to be used at the discretion of the Administrator to help communities modernize facilities for jet traffic.

Prohibited use of Federal grants for any part of an airport facility which would be used as a parking lot, bar, hotel or similar concession.

Permitted matching grants for the repair of runways at small airports not busy enough to warrant installation of a Federal traffic tower.

Required the Administrator to publish by each Jan. 1 the proposed airport program for the next fiscal year.

Provided that funds allocated to a state and not used within two fiscal years would be added to the Administrator's discretionary fund.

Granted the advance consent of Congress to agreements among the states on the use of interstate projects.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) -- Authorize a four instead of five-year program; Feb. 6. Voice vote.

Thomas J. Dodd (D Conn.) -- Direct the Administrator to take into consideration the use of private financing, if it is available, for the construction of any part of a building, other than a passenger terminal, that will be used for commercial activities; Feb. 6. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.) -- Continue the existing program of Federal aid for airport construction: $63 million annually for fiscal years 1960-63; Feb. 6. Roll-call vote, 35-53.

Norris Cotton (R N.H.) -- Prohibit Federal grants for airport buildings except for those portions that house air safety functions (traffic control, weather and communication facilities); Feb. 6. Roll call, 33-53.

Thruston B. Morton (R Ky.) -- Cut the annual authorizations for projects in the continental U.S. from $95 million to $65 million; cut the annual authorizations for projects in Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands from $5 million to $4.5 million; and cut the Administrator's discretionary fund from $65 million to $30 million; Feb. 6. Roll call, 37-48.

DEBATE -- Feb. 6 -- A.S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.), author of S 1 -- "The President's approach of $65 million, $55 million, $45 million, $35 million and then nothing is like sending a baby to do a man's job in the construction field."

Cotton -- Instead of increasing the program the Senate should extend the existing airport-aid program of $63 million per year because "there is not one shred or scintilla of evidence that it is not enough" and "if it does not prove adequate for next year, when combined with what we expect to carry over from this year, there will be nothing in the world to prevent its being supplemented at that time."

Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) -- In Pennsylvania 70 percent of community applications for fiscal 1959 "were refused because of the lack of Federal funds."

House

COMMITTEE -- Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

HEARINGS -- Feb. 9-10 on airport-aid proposals.

Representatives of the American Municipal Assn., the U.S. Council of Mayors, the Airport Operators Council, the American Road Builders Assn., the Air Line Pilots Assn. and several Congressmen testified in favor of HR 1011. As introduced by Chairman Oren Harris (D Ark.), HR 1011 was identical to the original language of S 1 -- grant authorizations totaling $100 million yearly for fiscal years 1960-64 plus a general modernization fund of $75 million.

FAA Administrator Quesada told the Committee Feb. 9 that the Government already had asked for authority to spend over $500 million for air safety and traffic control systems in fiscal 1960 and that Federal aid for airport construction should be tapered off. He supported a House bill (HR 3627) embodying Administration proposals for a gradual reduction of Federal grants over the next four years.

ACTION -- The Committee March 2 reported HR 1011 (H Rept 93) with amendments. The Committee's version authorized Federal grants of $297 million to help communities build and improve airport facilities during fiscal 1960-63. It extended the current $63 million program and added a new emergency fund of $45 million to be distributed by the Administrator of FAA.

Floor Action

The House March 19 passed S 1, by a 272-134 roll-call vote, after substituting for the Senate-passed text the language of the House Commerce Committee's version of HR 1011 with one minor amendment. Final passage was preceded by a series of unsuccessful attempts by Republicans and Southern Democrats to trim the spending authorization. (For voting, see chart p. 352)

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, S 1:

Authorized the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency to make annual matching grants of $62.1 million for airport construction projects in the 49 states and Hawaii during fiscal years 1960 through 1963.

Authorized additional matching grants of $900,000 a year during fiscal years 1959-63 for airport projects in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

Provided a discretionary fund of $45 million for use by the Administrator of FAA to help airports modernize for jet traffic.

Limited the use of Federal funds in the construction of airport buildings to that portion of a project intended to provide space for use by Federal agencies (air traffic control, weather reporting facilities, communications or any other service performed by Federal agencies).

Directed the Administrator of FAA to make public by Jan. 1 of each year the program of airport aid to be undertaken during the following fiscal year.

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

Oren Harris (D Ark.) -- Add language stating that any of the funds apportioned to the states and territories which remain unexpended for two years should be transferred to the Administrator's discretionary fund; March 19. Voice vote.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

William L. Springer (R Ill.) -- Substitute language of the Administration bill (HR 3267) providing grants of $65 million in fiscal 1960 declining to $35 million in fiscal 1963; March 19. Teller vote, 144-181.

James C. Davis (D Ga.) -- Reduce grant authorizations by $32.3 million in each of fiscal years 1961 and 1962 and by $32.4 million in fiscal 1963; March 19. Accepted by teller vote, 168-157; rejected by roll-call vote, 194-214.

John Bell Williams (D Miss.) -- Provide that no funds authorized by the bill should be made available until appropriated by Congress; March 19. Accepted by teller, 169-154; rejected by roll call, 191-216.

George Meader (R Mich.) -- Require the Administrator of FAA, when considering airport projects for approval, to avoid crowding too many airports on certain air routes and to provide for coordination of military and civilian air traffic; March 19. Voice.

DEBATE -- March 19 -- Harris -- Since the President vetoed an airport aid bill in 1958 "it has been obvious...that this was going to be a political vehicle...to show who is trying to spend a lot of money. I hope this legislation will not be decided on that basis."

Howard W. Smith (D Va.) -- "I rise in support of the (Davis) amendment...We have already been labeled as a spending Congress. Here is your opportunity to let it be known which side of this thing you are on."

Conference

Further action on airport-aid was delayed almost three months while a Senate-House conference committee attempted to adjust the differences between the Senate's $465-million bill and the $297-million measure passed by the House.

Finally, on June 15, the conference committee reported (H Rept 538) that it had been unable to agree on a compromise between the two bills. It was reported that Monroney, the conference committee chairman, refused to accept the House bill or any cheaper four-year version because he felt such a program would be inadequate to prepare the Nation's airports for the increased demands of the jet age.

With the 1960 Presidential election in mind, a compromise was worked out whereby the current program of $63 million a year would be extended until June 30, 1961. The philosophy behind the compromise, as explained by Monroney on the Senate floor June 15, was that a simple extension would be acceptable to the White House and that after two years Congress could "legislate much more wisely and with a better understanding on the part of the occupant of the White House," who, of course, he hoped would be a Democrat.

COMPROMISE ADOPTED

The Senate June 15 agreed to a motion to adopt the compromise extension by a 71-11 roll-call vote. Quick approval was urged by Monroney, who pointed out that unless it were extended, the airport construction program would die June 30. Earlier, the Senate rejected, by a 27-54 roll-call vote, an amendment by Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) prohibiting the use of Federal funds for any portion of an airport terminal building not housing Federal activities such as weather bureaus, communications centers and air traffic control stations. (For voting, see chart p. 416)

The Monroney compromise, as well as the original bill, prohibited use of Federal funds for passenger parking lots, cocktail lounges, commercial offices and other items not essential for the public welfare but would have permitted aid for passenger terminal facilities and other public conveniences.

HOUSE ACTION -- By a standing vote of 164-37, the House June 17 voted to accept, with an amendment, the compromise version of S 1. The amendment limited Federal participation in the construction of airport buildings to those portions deemed essential for air safety or the public's convenience by the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency. The parliamentary situation prevented Minority Leader Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.) from offering an amendment to prohibit aid for terminal facilities.

S 1 was returned to the Senate, which later the same day agreed to the House amendment by voice vote and sent the bill to the White House.

President's Statement

In a statement on signing S 1 June 29 (PL 86-72), President Eisenhower noted that the Administration had "strongly recommended that Federal money should be used exclusively for airport development projects which contribute to the increased safety of air travel." He said S 1 took "a major step in this direction by prohibiting the commitment of Federal money for parking lots and airport building bars, cocktail lounges, night clubs, theatres, private clubs, garages, hotel rooms, commercial offices or game rooms." But he said the bill was not as conclusive "with respect to those parts of airport buildings intended for any other use. Federal money may be committed for their construction if, in the opinion of the Federal Aviation Administrator, they are essential for the safety, convenience or comfort of persons using airports for public aviation purposes." He commented that this gave the Administrator "very broad" discretion in the commitment of funds and hinted that the Administrator might decide not to allot funds for "projects unrelated to safety."

The President said the bill's failure to treat Alaska as a state required "prompt corrective action" by Congress.

Alaska-Hawaii Airport Grants

Acting on the President's June 29 request, Congress Sept. 10 sent to him a bill (S 2208) amending the Federal Airport Act to make possible additional Federal grants for airport construction in the new states of Alaska and Hawaii (which formally achieved statehood Aug. 21).

BACKGROUND -- Under the Act, $60 million was authorized for grants to the original 48 states and $3 million more was authorized in fixed grants for Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. Alaska would receive $1,350,000 and Hawaii, $750,000.

Seventy-five percent of the $60 million was divided among the 48 states on the basis of population and area. The remaining 25 percent ($15 million) could be spent at the discretion of the Federal Aviation Agency's Administrator in any of the 48 states.

In signing the two-year extension of the Airport Act June 29, President Eisenhower noted that Alaska was treated as a territory and was entitled to less than half the funds it would receive as a state. He asked for "prompt corrective action" by Congress. (See above)

ACTION -- S 2208, as introduced by Alaska's Sens. E.L. (Bob) Bartlett and Ernest Gruening (both D), would have increased the $60 million authorization to $62,371,000 and made Alaska eligible for grants under the area-population formula and also from the discretionary fund. The Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee rewrote the bill to make Alaska and Hawaii eligible for grants only from the discretionary fund. Bringing Alaska under the area-population formula would have required a reallotment of funds to other states and a decrease for 40 of them, the July 15 report (S Rept 2208) said. The amended bill was passed by voice vote of the Senate July 24.

It was reported by the House Commerce Committee Aug. 20 (H Rept 959) with a minor amendment. The House passed the bill Sept. 9, by a 309-75 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 394) The Senate concurred in the House amendment Sept. 10, and President Eisenhower signed the bill into law Sept. 21 (PL 86-295).

COAL RESEARCH VETO

HR 6596 --
- Reported by House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee (H Rept 370) May 20, 1959.
- Passed by the House, by a 251-54 roll-call vote, June 12. (See p. 368)
- Reported, amended, by Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee (S Rept 559) July 22.
- Passed, amended, by voice vote of the Senate July 27. (For roll-call vote on amendment, see p. 429)
- Conference report (H Rept 1052) agreed to by voice votes of the Senate Aug. 25 and the House Aug. 31.
- Pocket vetoed Sept. 16.

President Eisenhower in 1959 pocket vetoed a bill (HR 6596) that would have established an independent agency within the Interior Department to carry on research to develop new and more effective uses for coal. The proposed Coal Research and Development Commission also would have been responsible for research to expand existing uses of coal and reduce the costs of production and distribution. The commission would have duplicated some of the work of the Bureau of Mines which carries on certain mineral research projects.

The President, in vetoing HR 6596, said creation of the commission would tend to dilute the responsibility of the Interior Department in this area and blur "the lines of governmental responsibility."

PROVISIONS -- As sent to the President, HR 6596:

Created an independent agency of the Executive Branch, placed within the Interior Department for administrative purposes, to be headed by three commissioners experienced in industrial-type research activities who would serve for three years.

Directed the commission to develop new and more effective uses for coal, improve and expand existing uses for coal, reduce the cost of coal production and distribution and emphasize those developments in uses for coal of particular value to small coal producers.

To carry out its duties the commission was authorized to conduct research projects, contract for research projects by independent groups and collect and promote the coordination of all available research information.

Prohibited the commission from duplicating research being conducted by any other Federal or state agency.

Authorized an appropriation of $2 million for the commission in fiscal 1960.

Limited the authority of the commission to five years and required it to present a report of its accomplishments after the fourth year.

Background

The U.S. Bureau of Mines, an agency of the Interior Department, is responsible for conducting programs designed to promote the conservation and development of mineral resources and to promote safety and healthful working conditions in the mineral industries.

Proposals for an independent coal research agency had been considered by Congress for several years.

The Senate Aug. 14, 1958 passed a bill (S 4248) similar to HR 6596 which would have established an independent Coal Research and Development Commission. The House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee Aug. 8, 1958 reported a similar bill (HR 9460), but the House took no action on it before the 85th Congress adjourned.

House

COMMITTEE -- Interior and Insular Affairs, Mines and Mining Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- March 5 and 6 on bills to establish a Coal Research and Development Commission.

ACTION -- The full Committee May 20 reported HR 6596 (H Rept 370), establishing a Coal Research and Development Commission as an independent Federal agency.

The report said the Interior Department's Bureau of Mines already was authorized to do coal research but had concentrated on long-range studies and ignored requests for research that would produce immediate benefits to the coal industry; therefore, creation of a new Federal agency was justified.

In a letter to the Committee, the Interior Department said it endorsed the objectives of the program but questioned the need for a new, independent agency and therefore opposed the bill. The letter said the Secretary of the Interior should be given authority to contract for research by independent groups.

Floor Action

The House June 12, by a 251-54 roll-call vote, passed HR 6596 with amendments and sent it to the Senate. (For voting, see chart p. 368)

The bill as reported placed no termination date on the commission, although the term of the commissioners was to run for only three years. The House adopted an amendment by Wayne N. Aspinall (D Colo.), author of the bill, to limit the authority of the commission to five years from the date of its first organizational meeting.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Aspinall -- Limit the authority of the commission to five years from the date of its first organizational meeting; June 12. Voice vote.

John W. McCormack (D Mass.) -- Prohibit the duplication of work by the commission and other agencies; June 12. Voice.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

Ed Edmondson (D Okla.) -- Extend the life of the commission to eight years; June 12. Voice.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Interior and Insular Affairs, Minerals, Materials and Fuels Subcommittee.

HEARING -- June 10 on bills similar to HR 6596.

ACTION -- The full Committee July 22 reported HR 6596 with amendments (S Rept 559) that omitted the words "independent Federal agency" from the text and that placed the commission, for administrative purposes only, within the Interior Department. The House-passed version of HR 6596 had made the commission an entirely independent agency. In recommending the amendment, the Committee said its purpose was "to give the commission a home and to provide it with housekeeping facilities" but that it did not intend the Interior Department to exercise control over the activities of the commission.

Floor Action

The Senate July 27 passed HR 6596, as reported by the Committee, by voice vote. Before passage the Senate rejected, by a 27-56 roll-call vote, an amendment in the form of a substitute bill proposed by Gordon Allott (R Colo.) which would provide the Bureau of Mines with the authority and a $20 million authorization to carry on the proposed research projects. (For voting, see chart p. 429)

AMENDMENT REJECTED

Allott -- Substitute a bill providing the Bureau of Mines with the authority and money to carry on the proposed research; July 27. Roll call, 27-56.

DEBATE -- July 27 -- Frank E. Moss (D Utah) -- Although the Bureau of Mines has had responsibility for research, one of the complaints is that it "has not conducted the type of research necessary for the coal industry at this time. The proposed commission would not duplicate any of the research effort now being made. It would coordinate data from various sources and would go into additional areas."

Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) -- Although the bill departs from a sound administrative approach, coal problems need "fresh thinking" that the Bureau of Mines has not provided.

Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) -- "It is imperative" that Congress help initiate a program to find new ways to use coal and better and cheaper methods of production.

Conference

Congress Aug. 31 completed action on HR 6596 when the House, by voice vote, agreed to the conference report (H Rept 1052). The Senate had approved the report Aug. 25, also by voice vote.

As sent to the President, HR 6596 was identical to the bill passed by the Senate July 27 except for reinstatement of House language designating the commission as an independent agency in the Executive Branch. A Senate provision placing the commission, for administrative purposes, in the Interior Department was retained. Conferees said that would not "interfere with the commission's independent conduct of its essential research functions" or with its "direct relations with and responsibility to the President and the Congress."

Pocket Veto

In his Sept. 16 message disapproving HR 6596, President Eisenhower said that the establishment of such a commission would create an undesirable precedent and "would be a serious setback" to efforts to improve Government organization.

"If an additional agency for this purpose were now to be created," he said, "the Department of the Interior's established interest in such matters would be diluted and the result could only be a blurring of the lines of governmental responsibility in this important area of concern."

Mr. Eisenhower urged Congress to enact legislation authorizing the Secretary of Interior to contract for coal research. He said pending bills (HR 3375, S 1362) to accomplish this purpose had been "endorsed by the Administration to stimulate research, as well as production and conservation of coal."

FARM SURPLUS LAW, FOOD STAMP PLAN

S 1748 -- Reported, amended, by Senate Agriculture and Forestry Committee (S Rept 522) July 15, 1959.

S 1711 -- Reported, amended, by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (S Rept 632) Aug. 10.

HR 8609 -- Reported, amended, by House Agriculture Committee (H Rept 908) Aug.15.

- Passed, with amendments, by the House Aug. 20, by a 305-53 roll-call vote. (See p. 384)
- Passed, amended, by the Senate Sept.7, by a 68-14 roll-call vote. (See p. 443)
- Conference report (H Rept 1178) agreed to Sept. 11 by voice votes of the House and Senate.

P. L. 86-341 -- Signed into law Sept. 21.

Congress in 1959 enacted a two-year extension of the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (PL 480, 83rd Congress), a program under which the Nation's agricultural surpluses are sold for foreign currencies, used for foreign and domestic relief donations and bartered for certain strategic or other materials.

The 1959 bill made two major changes in the existing program. First, it gave the Secretary of Agriculture permissive authority to establish a food stamp plan for the distribution of surplus foods to needy persons in the United States. The Eisenhower Administration opposed this provision and was not expected to implement it.

The second change established a new title of the Act designed to assist the economic development of friendly foreign nations by providing long-term credit for purchases of surplus farm commodities for domestic consumption. Mr. Eisenhower, who had sponsored a different "Food for Peace" program to utilize surpluses to help friendly nations, criticized this provision in signing the bill.

The measure made no substantial changes in the controversial PL 480 barter program, a point noted with satisfaction by the President.

PROVISIONS -- As signed by the President, HR 8609 made these changes in PL 480:

Extended Title I, sales for foreign currency, through Dec. 31, 1961 with an annual authorization of $1.5 billion; extended Title II, relief donations, for two years with an annual authorization of $300 million.

Provided that farm commodities declared surplus be made available "insofar as practicable" for distribution to the needy in the U.S. before they are made available for sale under Title I.

Authorized additional uses of foreign currencies generated under the Act to: promote programs of medical and scientific research, cultural and educational development, health, nutrition and sanitation; finance, up to $2.5 million annually, the preparation, distribution and exhibition of audio-visual informational and educational materials, including U.S. Government materials, abroad; provide, up to $5 million annually, for assistance to meet emergency or extraordinary relief requirements other than for surplus food commodities; purchase materials other than those required for the national stockpile.

Provided that at least 5 percent of the foreign currencies generated under the Act be used to develop dollar markets.

Provided for review of foreign currency transactions by the Appropriations Committees.

Established a Title IV of the Act designed to assist the economic development of friendly nations by providing long-term credit for purchases of surplus farm commodities for domestic consumption. The Title authorized the President to enter into contracts of up to 10 years for the sale in dollars of U.S. farm surpluses and provided for payment over periods of up to 20 years.

Required that, when practical, surplus commodities donated abroad be marked in the language of the locality where distributed as being furnished by the people of the United States.

Authorized the Commodity Credit Corp. to donate its stocks of animal fats and edible oils for assistance to needy persons outside the U.S. and to purchase for donation sufficient quantities to maintain the support level for cottonseed and soybeans so that those commodities need not be purchased under the price support program.

Amended the Agricultural Act of 1956 (PL 84-540) to provide that strategic and other materials currently required by the Department of Defense, the Atomic Energy Commission, and other Government agencies may be acquired through barter.

Provided for the enrichment and more sanitary packaging of cornmeal, grits, and white flour donated for school lunches.

Repealed a provision of the Agriculture Appropriations Act (PL 86-80) pertaining to payments to be made under the Conservation Reserve Program in 1960 and permitted the rate of CRP payments to be established at the 1959 rate or at up to 20 percent above the value of the land placed under the program, the land value to be determined without regard to improvements or location.

Provided that the national marketing quota in 1960 for extra-long staple cotton shall not be less than 90 percent of the 1959 quota.

Authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to establish within a two-year period a program to distribute to needy persons in the U.S., including needy Indians, surplus food commodities through a food stamp system. Provided that goods to be made available under the program be limited to commodities acquired by the CCC and limited the total cost of the program to $250 million annually. The programs would be established only when requested by state or local governments.

PL 480 was enacted in 1954 as an emergency program for disposal of farm surplus commodities in ways that would benefit the United States.

The last previous extension was in 1958, to Dec. 31, 1959. At that time Congress increased to $6.25 billion the value of surplus commodities that could be sold to friendly foreign countries for local currencies. The authorization

PL 480 Activities

Following is a summary of the programs authorized under PL 480, including a new program added by Congress in 1959. Figures on the status of existing programs were taken from President Eisenhower's tenth semiannual report on PL 480 activities, which was submitted to Congress July 30.

Title I -- Foreign Currency Sales. Under this program, the Government finances the dollar cost of moving farm goods to friendly countries. Commodities are sold to foreign importers, who pay for the purchases in their own country's currency.

From the beginning of the program in July 1954 through June 1959, the Government entered into 158 agreements, or supplements to agreements, with importers in 38 countries. The agreements covered commodities involving a Commodity Credit Corp. cost of nearly $4.7 billion and an export market value of $3.3 billion, excluding ocean transportation costs of $393.7 million paid by the CCC.

The leading commodities were wheat and flour, with an export market value of $1.4 billion; cotton, $616 million; fats and oils, $526.2 million; corn and other feed grains, $247.3 million; rice, $213.2 million; and tobacco, $181.3 million.

The law specified the purposes for which the foreign currencies generated by Title I sales could be used. These purposes included: agricultural market development; purchase of strategic materials for the supplemental stockpile; procurement of military equipment, materials, facilities and services for the common defense; purchase of goods for other friendly countries; grants for economic development; loans to private enterprise; payment of U.S. obligations; loans to foreign governments; international educational exchange; translation of books and periodicals; American-sponsored schools and centers; scientific activities; buildings for U.S. use; trade fairs; acquisition, indexing and dissemination of foreign publications; and U.S. educational studies. Other uses were approved by Congress in 1959. (See Final Provisions)

Title II -- Foreign Donations. Under this program, the President through June 30, 1959 authorized the donation of $546 million worth of surplus farm goods to overseas victims of famines, floods or other natural disasters. The figure is based on the CCC cost of commodities, plus shipping costs.

Title III -- Other Donations. Under this program, the Government donated more than $1.6 billion (at CCC cost) worth of surplus farm commodities to needy persons in the U.S. and overseas through nonprofit voluntary and intergovernmental agencies.

Title III -- Barter Transactions. Under this program, the Government trades surplus farm commodities to private U.S. traders for export in return for strategic or other materials to be stockpiled in the U.S., used for foreign aid or offshore construction projects. Barter contracts in the five-year period covered commodities valued at $1.1 billion.

Title IV -- Long-term Supply Contracts. The 1959 extension bill added a new program designed to assist the economic development of friendly nations by providing long-term credit for dollar purchases of surplus farm commodities. (See Final Provisions) for foreign relief donations under Title II remained at $800 million, the total set in the 1957 extension.

Debate on the 1958 bill centered on the controversial Title III barter program, which had come to a virtual standstill as a result of 1957 Agriculture Department regulations. Supporters of the barter program said it helped move surplus farm goods at a profit to the Government and stimulated new markets for U.S. goods. Opponents contended it interfered with hard currency sales, placed unneeded materials in the Federal stockpile and benefited only a few international traders. As finally enacted, the 1958 bill directed the Agriculture Secretary to conduct a barter program "to the maximum extent practicable." Under regulations subsequently announced, barter transactions rose from $36 million in the last half of 1958 to an estimated $120.2 million in the first half of 1959.

President's 1959 Proposals

President Eisenhower, in his Jan. 19 Budget Message, asked Congress for a one-year extension of Title I and II of PL 480. He also requested an additional $1.5 billion authorization for Title I foreign currency sales. An additional $300 million Title II authorization later was requested by Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson.

In a special farm message Jan. 29, the President launched what came to be known as his "Food for Peace" program. Mr. Eisenhower said the U.S. must continue its "vigorous efforts further to expand markets and find additional outlets for our farm products, both at home and abroad. In these efforts, there is an immediate and direct bearing on the cause of world peace." He said he was "setting steps in motion to explore anew with other surplus-producing nations all practical means of utilizing the various agricultural surpluses of each in the interest of reinforcing peace and the well-being of friendly peoples throughout the world -- in short, using food for peace." (For text of message, see p. 651)

In a Feb. 9 letter, Mr. Eisenhower gave Secretary Benson primary responsibility for "organizing and energizing" Government Food for Peace efforts. The Administration's specific requests were spelled out in July 14 testimony before the House Agriculture Committee. (See below)

As a first step in implementing the President's proposal, a Food for Peace conference was held May 4-6 in Washington attended by cabinet officials from five wheat-exporting countries -- Argentina, Australia, Canada, France, the United States -- and by the Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO). Following the conference, Secretary Benson announced plans to establish a five-nation standing committee "to carry out the principles enunciated" at the conference. Benson said the course of action suggested by the U.S. to increase utilization of wheat included: (1) further assistance to the needy with direct feeding programs such as school lunch projects, refugee feeding and resettlement; (2) further emphasis on projects "which will permit foreign currencies to be used for economic development"; (3) further encouragement of setting up national food reserves in countries or areas of greatest need.

Benson added that "there was agreement on the need for safeguarding commercial markets of wheat exporting nations." Benson also said the aims of the conference could be carried out, as far as the U.S. was concerned, without new legislation.

Humphrey Proposal

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) and 15 other Democratic Senators April 16 introduced a bill (S 1711), the International Food for Peace Act of 1959, which proposed: a five-year extension of Title I of PL 480, with an authorization of $2 billion annually; a five-year extension of Title II at $250 million a year; extension of the Title III barter program with minor changes. The bill also proposed a 10-year program of long-term supply contracts with foreign governments and a five-year program of surplus grants to help food-deficit countries build up national food reserves. It provided that foreign currencies generated under the program could be used by locally controlled bi-national foundations as grants for research, health, education and public welfare. The program was to be administered by a Peace Food Administration in the Executive Office of the President. S 1711 was referred to the Foreign Relations, rather than the Agriculture, Committee; parts of it subsequently were written into the 1959 PL 480 extension.

Food Stamp Plan

Inclusion of a permissive food stamp plan in the 1959 bill was a partial victory for Rep. Leonor Kretzer Sullivan (D Mo.) and various other Members of Congress who for years had pressed for such a program to distribute surplus food to needy persons in the United States. A bill to establish a food stamp program similar to one in operation in the U.S. from 1939-43, introduced in the 85th Congress by Mrs. Sullivan, was rejected by the House in 1958. The Department of Agriculture, which distributes surplus food to the needy through a direct distribution program, opposed the plan as too complicated and costly. (1958 Almanac p. 276)

Both Senate and House Agriculture Committees reported separate food stamp bills in 1959.

The Senate Committee Aug. 11 reported a clean bill (S 2522 -- S Rept 657) directing the Secretary of Agriculture to establish demonstration food stamp programs in from three to six separate areas in the U.S. The bill authorized $20 million for the programs, which were to be established to the extent practicable in surplus labor areas, at least one of them rural. The programs were to end Jan. 1, 1962 and were to be followed by a report to Congress. The bill also provided for the enrichment and more sanitary packaging of certain foods donated under the direct commodity distribution program for such items as school lunches.

SENATE HEARINGS

Subcommittee hearings were held June 4-8. Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) June 4 urged support for his bill (S 1884) to transfer responsibility for food distribution programs from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare and provide for a $150 million annual program. Calling the existing surplus food distribution program "inadequate, unrealistic and ineffective because it is limited to the distribution of those commodities stored by the Commodity Credit Corp.," Kennedy said S 1884 also would provide for the purchase and distribution of "such necessary items as whole milk, butter, eggs, fruit, vegetables, poultry and other meats."

AFL-CIO Vice President Joseph A. Bierne June 5 and United Auto Workers Secretary-Treasurer Emil Mazey June 8 also testified in support of S 1884.

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) June 4 urged support for his bill (S 585) that would establish a national food allotment program for the needy and include the use of "food-allotment coupons." Humphrey termed "hogwash" arguments opposing the legislation on the grounds that "we cannot afford it."

Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Clarence L. Miller June 4 testified in opposition to any kind of food stamp plan or expansion of direct food assistance programs. Miller said the program provided by S 585 would cost about $2.5 billion a year and have no direct effect upon the major surplus problems -- wheat, corn and cotton. Miller also said the Administration believed welfare programs should be a state and local responsibility.

HOUSE BILL

The House Agriculture Committee Aug. 15, by an 18-12 vote, reported an amended bill (HR 1359 -- H Rept 907) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to establish a $1 billion annual program to distribute surplus food to needy persons through a food stamp system. The food was to be distributed only when requested by a state, county or municipality. The Committee amended the bill to make establishment of the program permissive, rather than mandatory as provided in the measure introduced Jan. 7 by Mrs. Sullivan.

House

COMMITTEE -- Agriculture.

HEARINGS -- July 14-29 on extension of PL 480.

TESTIMONY -- While many Democrats in Congress favored broadening the program on a long-term basis, as proposed in the Humphrey "Food for Peace" bill (S 1711), the Administration recommended a one-year extension with requests for an additional $1.5 billion Title I authorization and $300 million additional funds for the donation program under Title II.

Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Clarence L. Miller, in testimony July 14, repeated the basic Administration requests and in addition outlined several amendments designed to further the Administration's "Food for Peace" program. These included: amending Title I to permit grants of food to underdeveloped countries for establishment of national food reserves; providing authority to use foreign currencies generated under the program for non-food emergency relief and to purchase materials for the U.S. civil defense program; and amending Title II to permit grants of surplus commodities to countries for use in economic development projects.

The Administration's "Food for Peace" amendments were opposed by the American Farm Bureau Federation. AFBF spokesman John C. Lynn July 20 said that if there was "a real need and desire on the part of underdeveloped countries to establish national food reserves they will be willing to do so through foreign currency purchases under Title I." Calling the proposed amendments to Title I a "give-away mechanism," Lynn said the program under Title I "should be retained as a sales program." He also said there was evidence that U.S. agriculture was becoming over-dependent on PL 480 instead of developing real foreign markets. The Farm Bureau recommended a two-year extension of the program with an authorization under Title I of $1.2 billion the first year and $800 million the second.

Roy Battles of the National Grange, in testimony July 28, said the Grange would support a one or two-year extension but believed the authorization for Title I should not be less than $1.5 billion per year.

C. Edward Behre, in testimony July 29 for the Friends Committee on National Legislation, supported programs provided by S 1711 and similar bills.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- July 9 -- Developments in the Administration's "Food for Peace" program were outlined by Secretary Benson before the House Agriculture Committee at its general agriculture hearings. Benson said the international Wheat Utilization Committee established by the first Food for Peace conference "met in June and agreed on general guidelines for developing and carrying out programs for concessional sales of wheat, such as under Title I of PL 480. These guidelines relate primarily to carrying out non-commercial wheat export programs so as to be compatible with commercial wheat export objectives."

BILL REPORTED

ACTION -- The Committee Aug. 15 reported a clean bill (HR 8609 -- H Rept 908) providing a one-year extension of PL 480. The bill was approved Aug. 11 by a 30-2 vote.

The Committee authorized an additional $1.5 billion for Title I foreign currency sales and $300 million for Title II emergency donations, as requested by the Administration, and included provisions embodying Administration, "Food for Peace" proposals. It also included, however, Administration-opposed provisions to accelerate the Title III barter program by giving barter transactions priority over Title I sales until they reached $350 million.

In its report on the bill, the Committee said the central issue developed at the hearings was whether the PL 480 program should tend more toward donations and semi-donations "as a tool of foreign policy," or toward the exporting of agricultural surpluses "on as nearly a business-like basis as possible." The Committee, in supporting its view that it was "possible to move along both these roads at once," liberalized provisions for outright donations and in addition insisted that export operations conducted on a sales basis "bring the largest possible return to the American taxpayer."

A minority report by all 12 Republican Committee members said the only beneficiaries of an increased barter program "would be the foreign producers of surplus metals and minerals and a small, powerful group of international traders...."

Floor Action

The House Aug. 20 passed HR 8609, by a 305-53 roll-call vote, after deleting the committee barter provisions.

The House also, by a 232-127 roll call, agreed to an amendment by Leonor Kretzer Sullivan (D Mo.) to provide for a food stamp program. Opposed by the Administration, the amendment would authorize -- but not direct -- the Secretary of Agriculture to establish a $1 billion annual program to distribute surplus food to needy persons through a food stamp system. (For voting, see chart p. 384)

A major item of debate during the two days of consideration of the measure was an amendment by Eugene J. Keogh (D N.Y.) which, opponents said, would limit expansion of shipments of farm products in U.S. vessels through the St. Lawrence Seaway. The amendment, rejected on a 134-142 teller vote, would have required that deliveries of surplus farm commodities under PL 480 be made directly to the export vessel at a U.S. port without transfer to other ships. Strongly backing the amendment, Representatives from Atlantic and Gulf port districts said that present depths of the seaway bar clearance for fully loaded ocean-going vessels and shipments must be reloaded at Montreal, Canada.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, major provisions of HR 8609:

Extended Title I, sales for foreign currencies, through Dec. 31, 1960 with an additional authorization of $1.5 billion; extended Title II, relief donations, for one year with an additional $300 million.

Authorized the President to enter into long-term commitments of up to 10 years for the sale in dollars of U.S. surpluses to foreign nations.

Ordered that 5 percent of foreign currencies from the program be used to develop dollar markets.

Required that Title I foreign currency agreements contain a "maintenance of value" clause whereby the repayments of loans would be based on actual dollar value.

To embody the Administration's "food for peace" proposals: amended Title I to permit grants of food to underdeveloped countries for establishment of national food reserves; provided authority to purchase materials with foreign currencies for the U.S. civil defense program; amended Title II to permit grants of surplus commodities to underdeveloped countries for use in economic development projects.

Provided for annual review of foreign currency transactions by the Appropriations Committee.

Provided that the national marketing quota in 1960 for extra-long staple cotton shall not be less than 90 percent of the 1959 quota.

Authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to establish a $1 billion annual program to distribute surplus food to needy persons in the United States through a food stamp system.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Charles B. Hoeven (R Iowa) -- Delete provisions giving barter transactions priority over sales for foreign currencies; Aug. 19. Standing vote, 143-52.

Hoeven -- Delete provisions liberalizing the barter program and directing the Secretary to engage in a $350 million annual barter program; Aug. 19. Voice.

Clifford G. McIntire (R Maine) -- Provide for the labeling of commodities donated abroad; Aug. 20. Voice.

Delbert L. Latta (R Ohio) -- Provide that agricultural commodities to be bartered be exported only to friendly foreign countries; Aug. 20. Voice.

Jamie L. Whitten (D Miss.) -- Provide for annual review of foreign currency transactions by the Appropriations Committee; Aug. 20. Voice.

Leonor Kretzer Sullivan (D Mo.) -- Authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to establish a food stamp program (HR 1359); Aug. 20. Teller, 156-96; roll call, 232-127.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Eugene J. Keogh (D N.Y.) -- Require that shipments of surplus farm commodities to be exported under the Act be delivered directly to the export vessel at a U.S. port; define export vessel as the ship transporting the surplus goods from the U.S. port to the foreign port; Aug. 20. Teller, 134-142.

Thaddeus M. Machrowicz (D Mich.) -- Exempt St. Lawrence Seaway shipments from the Keogh amendment; Aug. 20. Standing, 71-108.

Melvin R. Laird (R Wis.) -- Amend Sullivan amendment to make the food stamp program subject to review by the Appropriations Committee; Aug. 20. Standing, 70-104.

Whitten -- Authorize $1.25 billion instead of $1.5 billion under Title I; Aug. 20. Voice.

Albert Quie (R Minn.) -- Extend Titles I and II for two years and provide $1.5 billion annually under Title I and $300 million annually under Title II; Aug. 20. Standing, 69-109.

DEBATE -- Aug. 19 -- Harold D. Cooley (D N.C.) -- The Committee "determined that we would rather have strategic or short-supply materials in this country (through barter)...than have bundles and bales of foreign currency which would ultimately end up in some sort of giveaway program."

Sidney R. Yates (D Ill.) -- The Keogh amendment would "not only...discriminate against Canada, but against every city in the northern part of this country."

Aug. 20 -- Keogh -- "When the (St. Lawrence) seaway is completed and when it is as good as the proponents have for 30 years been saying it would be, this amendment would actually protect the lake ports just as much as all the other parts of the country."

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Agriculture and Forestry.

ACTION -- July 15 reported a bill (S 1748 -- S Rept 522) providing a one-year extension of PL 480 and authorizing an additional $1.5 billion and $300 million under Titles I and II, respectively. The report said that because the Committee believed it essential the Act be extended "without lapse," it reported a simple extension "to be followed by consideration of needed amendments."

The Committee Aug. 25 voted by "narrow margins" to report amendments to S 1748 that would extend PL 480 for three years, authorize an annual $1.5 billion under Title I and new uses for foreign currencies, permit grants for national food reserves and cite the Act as the "Food for Peace Act of 1959." Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) led the successful fight for committee approval of the amendments.

FOREIGN RELATIONS BILL

On Aug. 10 the Senate Foreign Relations Committee had reported an amended version of the Humphrey bill (S 1711 -- S Rept 632) that also provided for a three-year extension but authorized $2 billion a year under Title I. The amended bill provided for broad new uses of foreign currencies generated under the Act and established a peace food administrator within the Department of Agriculture.

Committee approval of the amended bill, the report said, was "predicated upon (1) the recognition that U.S. production of food and fiber will continue to exceed maximum domestic requirements and normal exports for some time to come...(2) the determination to utilize further the sale and grant of surplus farm commodities, insofar as practicable, as an instrument for the maintenance of peace and those U.S. foreign policies designed to encourage the growth and development of free societies...."

During Committee hearings July 7-10 on S 1711, Humphrey said the bill would initiate "bold and imaginative" action needed "to relieve human want and hunger and to help other countries achieve economic and social development."

Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs W.T.M. Beale July 7 said S 1711 would create "false hopes and exaggerated expectations of economic aid on the part of recipient countries or would tend to result in over-programming of commodities in an attempt to meet these expectations." The plan was also opposed by Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Clarence L. Miller who said that whatever the length of time the agreements would be for, "there are limits to the amount of commodities that can be moved under a special program."

"GIVE-AWAY" CHARGED

John C. Lynn, American Farm Bureau Federation, July 8 said S 1711 would provide for "a multiplicity of over-lapping programs most of which constitute elaborate give-away mechanisms." He said that "to indicate that the U.S. has not had a program to use 'food for peace' and to feed the hungry is simply to ignore" these facts: in addition to sales of surplus farm products for foreign currencies, the PL 480 program had provided surpluses worth over $400 million for famine relief abroad and over $1 billion for distribution in 101 foreign countries by voluntary relief organizations.

Floor Action

The Senate Sept. 7 passed, by a 68-14 roll-call vote, and sent to conference an amended version of the House bill (HR 8609) extending PL 480. The measure provided additional authorizations of $1.5 billion per year under Title I of the Act for sales of surplus farm commodities to friendly foreign countries for local currencies and $300 million per year for foreign relief donations under Title II. Before passage, the Senate substantially amended and then substituted the text of its own bill (S 1748) for the version passed by the House, which would extend the Act one year as requested by the President.

The Senate agreed by voice votes to Agriculture and Forestry Committee amendments authorizing new uses for foreign currencies generated under the Act and on roll-call votes also agreed: 47-38, to a committee amendment extending PL 480 for three years instead of one; and 44-38, to an amendment by Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) directing the Secretary of Agriculture to establish demonstration food stamp programs in at least three different areas in the United States. The amendment authorized $15 million for the experimental programs. (For voting, see charts p. 441, 443)

On Sept. 4, the first day of debate on the legislation, the Senate rejected on a 41-46 roll call a Humphrey food stamp proposal carrying a $20 million authorization. The House version of HR 8609 also provided for a food stamp plan which permissively authorized the Secretary to establish a $1 billion annual nationwide program. The Agriculture Department opposed the utilization of food stamp systems to distribute surplus food to needy persons in the United States.

On other roll calls, the Senate rejected: 39-48, a committee amendment, modified by Humphrey, to cite the Act as the "Food and Fiber for Peace Act of 1959;"

42-46, a committee amendment embodying an Administration "food for peace" proposal to permit grants of surplus farm commodities to establish national food reserves in underdeveloped countries; 37-44, an amendment by Styles Bridges (R N.H.), John Marshall Butler (R Md.) and others to require that shipments of surplus commodities to be exported under the Act be delivered directly to the export vessel at a U.S. port; and 18-64, an amendment by Philip A. Hart (D Mich.) to expand and transfer to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare the program providing food distribution to the needy.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, major provisions of HR 8609:

Extended Title I, sales for foreign currencies, through Dec. 31, 1962 with an annual authorization of $1.5 billion; extended Title II, relief donations, for three years with an annual authorization of $300 million; authorized the carryover from year to year of unused amounts.

Provided that farm commodities declared surplus must be made available for distribution to the U.S. needy before they are made available for sale under Title I.

Authorized additional uses of foreign currencies generated under the Act to: promote programs of medical and scientific research, cultural and educational development, health, nutrition and sanitation; finance, up to $5 million, the preparation, distribution and exhibition of audio-visual informational and educational materials, including U.S. Government materials, abroad; finance services of foreign technicians, advisers and administrators to further economic and social development programs; provide grants and loans for jointly controlled nonprofit foundations in friendly foreign countries for promoting education, health, public welfare and mutual good will and understanding.

Repealed a provision of the Agriculture Appropriations Act (PL 86-80) pertaining to payments to be made under the Conservation Reserve Program in 1960 and permitted the rate of CRP payments to be established at the 1959 rate or at up to 20 percent above the value of the land placed under the program.

Provided that the national marketing quota in 1960 for extra-long staple cotton shall not be less than 90 percent of the 1959 quota.

Provided for enrichment and more sanitary packaging of certain foods donated for school lunches.

Directed the Secretary of Agriculture to establish demonstration food stamp programs in from three to six separate areas in the U.S.; authorized $15 million for the programs, which would be established to the extent practicable in surplus labor areas, with at least one area to be rural; terminated the programs by Jan. 1, 1962 and required the Secretary to report to Congress.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

George D. Aiken (R Vt.) -- Provide authorizations of $300 million annually for three years under Title II; Sept. 7. Voice vote.

Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) -- Provide for the enrichment and more sanitary packaging of certain foods donated for school lunches; Sept. 7. Voice.

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) -- Direct the Secretary of Agriculture to establish demonstration food stamp programs in at least three different areas in the U.S. and provide a $15 million authorization for the programs, which would terminate Jan. 1, 1962; Sept. 7. Roll call, 44-38. (A $20 million program had been rejected Sept. 4 -- see below.)

Humphrey -- Authorize the Commodity Credit Corp. to donate its stocks of animal fats and edible oils for assistance to needy persons outside the U.S. and to purchase for donation sufficient quantities to maintain the support level for cottonseed and soybeans so that those commodities need not be purchased under the price support program; Sept. 7. Voice.

Humphrey -- Provide for foreign currency loans and grants for jointly controlled nonprofit foundations established in friendly foreign countries for promoting education, health, public welfare and mutual good will and understanding; Sept. 7. Standing.

Russell B. Long (D La.) -- Amend the Humphrey amendment above to provide that, prior to loans and grants, the recipient nations give assurance that they will not reduce their current effort and expenditures for such programs; Sept. 7. Voice.

Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.) and others -- Repeal a provision of the fiscal 1960 Agriculture Appropriations Act and permit payments under the conservation reserve in 1960 at the 1959 rate or at up to 20 percent above the value of land placed under the program; Sept. 7. Voice.

John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.) and others -- Require that surplus farm commodities be made available for distribution to the needy in the U.S. before they are made available for sale under Title I; Sept. 7. Voice.

Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) -- Provide that the national marketing quota in 1960 for extra-long staple cotton not be less than 90 percent of the 1959 quota; Sept. 7. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Humphrey -- Direct the Secretary of Agriculture to establish demonstration food stamp programs for two years, authorize $20 million for the programs, and also provide for the enrichment of certain foods donated to the school lunch program; Sept. 4. Roll call, 41-46.

John Marshall Butler (R Md.), Styles Bridges (R N.H.), J. Glenn Beall (R Md.), J. Allen Frear Jr. (D Del.), and Thomas H. Kuchel (R Calif.) -- Require that shipments of surplus farm commodities to be exported under the Act be delivered directly to the export vessel at a U.S. port and define export vessel as the ship transporting the surplus goods from the U.S. port to the foreign port; Sept. 7. Roll call, 37-44.

Philip A. Hart (D Mich.) -- Transfer from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare the responsibility for distribution of food to the needy and provide for a broader program to include an annual authorization of $150 million to purchase goods not in CCC stocks in order to provide a balanced diet to recipients; Sept. 7. Roll call, 18-64.

WILL HELP MANKIND

DEBATE -- Sept. 4 -- Humphrey -- "This program should not be tagged as a surplus disposal program. Rather, it should be considered a constructive program for the use of food and fiber to further the objectives of American foreign policy, to relieve human suffering and want, and to make a contribution to the betterment of mankind at home and abroad."

Allen J. Ellender (D La.), chairman of the Agriculture and Forestry Committee -- Opposed a three-year extension of the Act because it would turn the program "into a very definite arm of our foreign aid, give-away program."

Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) -- "It would be about as fatal a mistake in our protection of agriculture as we could make to commit ourselves in advance to the proposition that we are going to overproduce our commodities for the domestic and world markets" by extending the Act three years.

Milton R. Young (R N.D.) -- "Price supports or no price supports, we are going to have farm surpluses...for many years to come."

George D. Aiken (R Vt.) -- A three-year extension would provide more flexibility in bargaining authority. As the yearly deadline draws near, the Department of Agriculture "is anxious to move the surpluses, and there is a tendency to make a deal on much less advantageous terms for the United States."

NO LIMIT ON FOOD STAMP COSTS

Sept. 7 -- Ellender -- The food stamp program would not be limited to $15 million because the amendment also authorized the Secretary to use surplus commodities held by the CCC. "The cost may run as high as $100 or $200 million. There is no limitation."

Humphrey -- "The food stamp program is much more desirable than the handout food distribution program, which makes people 'reliefers'."

Butler -- In support of his amendment, said that the effect of the increased use of the St. Lawrence Seaway and the port of Montreal, where the Agriculture Department recently established inspection facilities for grain, was that the deepwater Atlantic and Gulf ports, the skilled labor employed at those ports and the American taxpayers generally, are "robbed in order to fatten up the economies of Canada and a few Midwestern states."

Alexander Wiley (R Wis.) -- Cited figures to show it would cost "from $1.55 to $3.65 more per ton" to ship surplus grain to ports by means other than the Seaway.

Conference

REPORT -- Senate-House conferees Sept. 11 reported a compromise version of HR 8609 (H Rept 1178) extending PL 480 for two years and authorizing $1.5 billion and $300 million a year under Title I and II, respectively.

Both the House and Senate bills provided for establishment of food stamp systems. While the House version permissively authorized the Secretary to establish a $1 billion annual program on a nationwide scale, the Senate bill directed the Secretary to establish within a two-year period experimental food stamp programs in at least three separate areas of the U.S. with a $15 million authorization. The version agreed to by the conferees provided for a permissive, two-year $500 million food stamp program to be established only when requested by state or local governments. (Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson, commenting on the proposal during a news conference Sept. 11, said there currently was "no need" for food stamp systems. They were a depression measure, costly to administer and based on unsound principle, he said.)

ADMINISTRATION PLAN DROPPED

Conferees rejected House-approved provisions that would have permitted grants of surplus food to underdeveloped countries for establishment of national food reserves and also for use in economic development projects. These proposals had been submitted by the Administration as part of its "food for peace" program. Another such proposal was retained, however, when conferees agreed to permit up to $5 million annually of foreign currencies generated under the Act to be used for emergency relief requirements other than surplus food commodities.

In retaining House provisions authorizing long-term supply contracts based on dollar credit, conferees added a clarifying amendment stipulating that the contract must relate only to surplus commodities. The report expressed the hope that in negotiations with other countries under the food for peace program the new, long-term contract program also would be discussed.

Conferees agreed to retain a Senate provision -- after amending it by adding the phrase "insofar as practicable" -- to require the Secretary of Agriculture to make surplus food available to needy families in the U.S. before it is offered for sale abroad under Title I.

SENATE, HOUSE ACTION

The House and Senate Sept. 11, by voice votes, adopted the conference report and sent the bill to the White House.

SENATE DEBATE -- Sept. 11 -- Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) -- The version of HR 8609 agreed to by the conferees "represents substantial progress in the field of agricultural policy and the relationship of such policy to our international goals."

HOUSE DEBATE -- Sept. 11 -- Leonor Kretzer Sullivan (D Mo.) -- Was not willing to concede that by merely authorizing rather than directing the Secretary of Agriculture to establish a food stamp program "we are making a futile gesture in view of the Secretary's (Benson's) well-known opposition to the whole idea...I am sure the citizens of our metropolitan areas...will insist...that the Secretary now proceed to set up a food stamp plan."

BILL SIGNED

President Eisenhower Sept. 21 signed HR 8609 into PL 86-341. He said he was "gratified that (the extension of PL 480) was accomplished without crippling barter amendments and other changes" in the program, but he regretted Congress' failure to include Administration "Food for Peace" proposals in the bill.

He said the food stamp plan authorized by HR 8609 would, if implemented, increase the "already disproportionate Federal share of welfare expenses." Further, he said, "the food stamp administrative mechanism would be much more complex, and it is extremely doubtful that it would provide any greater benefit to needy people than the present direct method" of surplus food distribution through state and local facilities.

Finally, Mr. Eisenhower criticized the bill's authorization for 10-year supply contracts with foreign governments, saying it "implies that our agricultural surpluses will be with us for many years to come." "Any contracts developed pursuant to this authorization will need to be carefully administered to assure their conformity with efforts to solve this (surplus) problem as well as with our international agreements," he said.

YOUTH CONSERVATION CORPS

S 812 -- Reported, amended, by Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee (S Rept 536) July 17, 1959.
- Passed, amended, by the Senate on a 47-45 roll-call vote Aug. 13. (See p. 433)

The Senate in 1959 passed a bill (S 812) to create a Federal Youth Conservation Corps, patterned after the Civilian Conservation Corps of the 1930s. S 812 called for a corps of 150,000 men between the ages of 16 and 21 to work on planned projects of Federal and state conservation agencies.

The stated purpose of S 812 was to provide for the healthful training and employment of young men and at the same time to speed up planned conservation work on Federal and state lands. Although the bill was not designed specifically to combat juvenile delinquency, its sponsors said it would help prevent delinquency by providing meaningful employment for young people. The Eisenhower Administration opposed the measure as unnecessary and inadvisable.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, S 812:

Established within the Department of Labor a Youth Conservation Corps and a commission composed of the Secretary of Labor and representatives of the Departments of Health, Education and Welfare, Agriculture and Interior to advise on all phases of operation of the Corps.

Authorized the Secretary of Labor to make agreements with Federal and state agencies concerned with conservation and development of natural resources, including recreation areas, for the use of the Corps. (The agencies would supervise the work and, in the case of state agencies, would pay half of the cost of employing members of the Corps.)

Established an Advisory Committee of nine members to review the operation of the Corps.

Limited membership in the Corps to males of U.S. citizenship between 16 and 21 who are of good character and health.

Authorized an enrollment of 50,000 in fiscal 1960, 100,000 in fiscal 1961, and 150,000 in succeeding years.

Provided for an enrollment of six months, with a chance to re-enroll for 18 more months.

Set a basic pay rate of $60 monthly, with an additional $5 monthly for subsequent enrollments. (Corps members would be provided with quarters, subsistence, transportation, equipment, clothing and medical service.)

BACKGROUND -- The Civilian Conservation Corps was a relief program inaugurated by President Franklin D. Roosevelt early in the New Deal. It was designed to provide work for the Nation's unemployed men, chiefly the young men, while at the same time providing workers for conservation projects. The CCC operated from 1933 to 1942.

S 812 was introduced Jan. 29 by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) and 19 co-sponsors. As introduced, S 812 called for a combined work and training program in conservation for 150,000 young men annually, aged 16-22, "of good character and health." The work and training would take place in national parks and forests and other public lands, and would be administered by a Youth Conservation Commission to be created in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. The Government would pay for the enrollees' room, board and medical services, and would pay each enrollee a salary equal to that of an Army private ($83 a month). The bill authorized $375 million annually for the first three years. Eight similar bills were introduced in the House.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Labor and Public Welfare, Special Youth Conservation Corps Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- May 11-25 on S 812.

TESTIMONY -- May 11 -- Interior Secretary Fred A. Seaton in a letter to the Subcommittee opposed the bill and said the anticipated $1 billion cost for the first three years was neither necessary nor advisable.

May 19 -- Edward P. Cliff and Edward C. Crafts, assistant chiefs of the U.S. Forest Service, said the program would help both the youths enrolled and the Forest Service, but declined either to endorse or oppose S 812.

May 25 -- Humphrey, author of the bill, proposed amendments so that the program would provide for only 50,000 youths the first year, 100,000 the second and 150,000 each year thereafter. He also suggested permitting the YCC to work on state conservation projects if the states paid half the YCC cost for each project.

ACTION -- The full Labor and Public Welfare Committee July 17 reported S 812 (S Rept 536) on a 9-6, strictly party-line, vote. Committee amendments transferred the administration of the program from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to the Department of Labor and authorized work on state lands if the states agreed to participate on a 50-50 cost basis. The Committee also substituted an open-end authorization for the specific authorization in the bill as introduced.

Floor Action

The Senate Aug. 13 passed S 812, with committee amendments, by a 47-45 roll-call vote and sent it to the House. Two Republicans -- Alexander Wiley (Wis.) and Milton R. Young (N.D.) -- joined 45 Democrats in voting for the bill. (For voting, see chart p. 433)

DEBATE -- Aug. 13 -- Jennings Randolph (D W.Va.), floor manager of the bill -- One of the purposes of S 812 "is to salvage these young men and boys before they embark upon careers of delinquency. (The other) is to... strive to meet the staggering backlog of conservation projects and forest management tasks."

Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) -- "I certainly agree with the essential objectives of the proponents of the bill. I do not concur with the majority in its assessment of the gravity of the existing problems. Moreover, I am convinced that the methods embodied in the bill would seriously fail the objectives, which can better be served by existing programs."

Humphrey -- The bill has had "virtually unanimous support from every organization" concerned with child welfare or the preservation of natural resources.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- Sept. 23 -- New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller (R), testifying before the Senate Judiciary Juvenile Delinquency Subcommittee, said the Federal Government should provide land, food and equipment for youth camps to help combat juvenile delinquency.

New York City Mayor Robert F. Wagner (D) also called for Federal aid for youth camps in his appearance before the Subcommittee.

VETO OF WHEAT BILL

S 1968 -- Reported by Senate Agriculture and Forestry Committee (S Rept 295) May 18, 1959.

- Passed, amended, by a standing vote of the Senate May 22. (For roll-call votes on amendments, see p. 412)

HR 7246 -- Reported by House Agriculture Committee (H Rept 384) May 25.

S 1968 -- Passed by the House by voice vote after substituting the amended text of HR 7246, which was passed by a 189-177 roll-call vote June 12. (See p. 368)

- Conference report (H Rept 560) agreed to by the Senate by voice vote June 17; rejected by the House by a 202-214 roll-call vote June 18. (See p. 370)
- Senate agreed to House version of the bill by a 44-40 roll-call vote June 22. (See p. 418)
- Vetoed June 25.

President Eisenhower June 25 vetoed legislation that would have provided a revised, temporary program for wheat production -- the Nation's foremost farm surplus problem. Congress did not attempt to override the veto.

The President had recommended a program of lower price supports or, as an alternative, strict production control as a means to limit wheat production. However, the bill sent to the White House -- the House version of S 1968 -- offered wheat growers a choice between receiving price supports at 90 percent of parity (instead of the current 75 percent level) in return for a 25 percent reduction in their acreage allotments, or accepting 50 percent of parity with unlimited production. The House version was approved by the Senate following House rejection of a compromise version that would have provided lower price supports than the original House version.

PROVISIONS -- As sent to the President, S 1968:

Offered wheat farmers for the 1960 and 1961 crop years a choice -- to be determined by referendum -- between (1) reducing their acreage allotment by 25 percent and receiving 90 percent of parity price support, or (2) voting an end to production controls and receiving 50 percent of parity price support.

Provided to producers who did not plant nor graze the land under the 25 percent reduction, payments in kind (wheat) equivalent to one-third the average annual production of the retired acres during the preceding three years.

Barred such land from eligibility for the soil bank or for planting to any price-supported crop.

Beginning with the 1960 wheat crop, limited to $35,000 the total amount of price support loans extended to any person on any one year's production of wheat, but exempted cooperative marketing organizations.

Eliminated for 1960 and 1961 the 30-acre exemption ceiling on wheat grown for on-the-farm use.

Reduced the 15-acre exemption from controls to 12 acres or the highest planted exempt acreage in 1957-59, whichever was less.

Increased penalties for overplanting.

Background

REFERENCES -- Agricultural Act of 1958 (1958 Almanac p. 269); Omnibus Farm Program, Price Supports (1954 Almanac p. 100).

Farm legislation enacted in 1958 provided new programs, generally in line with Administration recommendations, for corn, cotton and rice. Other basic crops -- wheat, tobacco and peanuts -- remained under price-support programs enacted in 1954. The existing 55-million minimum national acreage allotment for wheat, however, was set by the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938.

The Department of Agriculture reported in 1959 that as of Sept. 30 Commodity Credit Corp. investments in price-support programs amounted to $9,007,512,000. The wheat surplus totaled 1,419,394,201 bushels as of that date and accounted for $3,432,885,330 of the CCC investment total, the report said. Other major items held by the CCC as of Sept. 30 were: Corn, 1,400,667,886 bushels -- $2,352,315,764; Upland cotton, 7,533,957 bales -- $1,325,570,830.

1959 ADMINISTRATION REQUESTS

President Eisenhower's special farm message, recommending lower and more flexible price supports, was sent to Congress Jan. 29 and immediately encountered widespread Congressional opposition. Accompanying the message was a memorandum from Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson which detailed the President's proposals and included other legislative recommendations for agriculture. (For text of the message, see p. 651)

The President proposed that prices for all commodities currently under mandatory supports be related to a percentage of the average market price of a commodity for the immediately preceding years, rather than to a parity standard which reflects cost-price relationships of a previous period, usually 1910-14. Under the plan the "appropriate" percentage for a support level would be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture at between 75 percent and 90 percent of the average. Currently, price supports for corn are determined by a similar system. (1958 Almanac p. 269)

As an alternative, the President recommended that if Congress still preferred to retain the parity concept in determining price supports, the Secretary should then be allowed broad flexibility -- ranging from 0 to 90 percent of parity -- in fixing support levels. Mr. Eisenhower said either of the changes "would be constructive."

The President said he opposed any direct payment or multiple price programs "which would tax the American consumer so as to permit sale for feed and export at lower prices."

Advocating the use of "food for peace," the President said he was "setting steps in motion to explore anew with other surplus-producing nations all practical means of utilizing the various agricultural surpluses of each in the interest of reinforcing peace and the well-being of friendly peoples throughout the world...." (See PL 480 story, p. 230)

Benson's memorandum dealt specifically with wheat, tobacco and peanuts. Benson said application of either of the alternative plans to these crops would provide farmers with greater freedom to produce and to compete in markets.

A new wheat program, Benson said, should also provide for eventual elimination of acreage allotments and marketing quotas. He said that if Congress retained the control concept in the wheat program, however, it was "essential" to tighten controls and close loopholes in order to reduce production. But he said the control approach was "drastic regimentation" which "would not be in the best long-time interest of wheat growers and agriculture generally."

FARM GROUP REACTIONS

Mr. Eisenhower's farm message was received with mixed emotions by major farm organizations:

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION -- Charles B. Shuman, president, Feb. 2 said he was "happy" that President Eisenhower had accepted the Farm Bureau proposal of relating support prices to the average market price of the immediately preceding years but could not agree with Mr. Eisenhower that any Secretary of Agriculture should have the discretionary authority to determine the appropriate percentage of the market price history which would be used to establish support levels.

NATIONAL FARMERS UNION -- John A. Baker, legislative director, Feb. 3 said the NFU was "refreshingly surprised" at President Eisenhower's recognition of the failure of the flexible farm policy, but the Union was "alarmed and saddened" that the President recommended only more of the same. NFU welcomed the President's proposals for "using food for peace," Baker said, but regretted that the emphasis was put on using accumulated surpluses for this purpose rather than offering an "imaginative program" to use the Nation's abundant production of future years.

NATIONAL GRANGE -- Herschel D. Newsom, grand master, Jan. 29 said "we were especially pleased" that the President indicated he saw the need for a farm program that builds markets but "much disappointed that the President failed to offer alternative programs" to raise farmers' income. "Programs which guarantee that the Government will take off the market that part of our production which the market will not absorb at a prescribed price," Newsom said, "can never be effective...."

NATIONAL MILK PRODUCERS FEDERATION -- E.M. Norton, secretary, Jan. 30 said both of the President's general proposals were "aimed at reducing price supports to meaningless levels." Norton said "a price support level fixed at 75 percent of the average price paid for manufacturing milk in the past three years would mean a support level of $2.44 per hundredweight, which is 62 cents below the current $3.06 established under the present law. At 90 percent of a three-year average the support level would be $2.93."

DEMOCRATIC VIEWS

Democratic Congressmen reacted unfavorably to the Administration proposals and on May 20 the Democratic Advisory Council issued a policy pamphlet advocating a direct payments program similar to the Brannan Plan as part of a six-point program for agriculture.

The pamphlet called for the "eventual abandonment" of the system of price support loans and purchases and the substitution of direct Government payments to producers of basic and other crops. The direct payments would be calculated to make up the difference between the market price and a predetermined "fair" price for the commodity.

Former Secretary of Agriculture Charles Brannan proposed the system in 1949, with the endorsement of the Truman Administration, but Congress refused to enact it at that time. (1949 Almanac p. 131)

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Agriculture and Forestry.

HEARINGS -- Feb. to May, intermittently, on the Administration's farm program.

TESTIMONY -- Feb. 16-17 -- Secretary Benson testified in support of the President's recommendations for lower and more flexible price supports. Along with lower support levels, he said, Congress should consider either gradually eliminating acreage and marketing controls in order to bring about a freer market, or tightening such controls to reduce production. Benson said the Administration favored the first alternative.

Benson said the "unrealistic levels" at which the Government was required to support a few crops were "pricing us out of the world market and may be doing irreparable harm to vital exports." He cited cotton and tobacco as crops losing markets at home and abroad. He said 85 percent of price-supported commodities being held by the Government consisted of wheat, corn and cotton. Yet these three crops, he added, "produce only 20 percent of the total cash farm income."

Benson said "most of the costs under the wheat program result from the production of a comparatively few large growers" -- less than 10 percent.

Sen. Milton R. Young (R N.D.), a member of the Committee, told the Secretary that applying the Administration's approach to wheat would "break every wheat farmer in the United States with the exception of the big ones." The Administration program, Young said, would reduce the wheat support price in his state to $1.30 a bushel, from the current $1.81 price. Benson said the wheat surplus was expected to reach 1.5 billion bushels by July 1, 1960, with a Federal investment of $3.5 billion.

ACTION -- The Committee, following consideration of four committee prints, reported S 1968 (S Rept 295) May 18, providing alternative choices for a wheat program during the next two years. The report said that representatives of all major farm organizations and Administration officials, at the Committee hearings, "agreed that some action was necessary but presented different and in some cases divergent views as to what should be done to reduce the pressure of mounting wheat surpluses; and it was evident that no generally acceptable major changes in the program were possible."

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- May 15 -- President Eisenhower, in a statement issued on signing S J Res 94, which postponed from May 15 to June 1 the date for announcing wheat marketing quotas and acreage allotments for the 1960 crop, again urged Congress, as he did in his farm message, "to enact realistic and constructive -- not stopgap -- wheat legislation."

Floor Action

The Senate May 22 passed an amended version of S 1968 by a standing vote. Before passage, the Senate adopted, by a 57-20 roll-call vote, an amendment by John J. Williams (R Del.) limiting to $35,000 any price support loan to any person for one year's production of agricultural commodities.

On other roll-call votes, the Senate rejected: 24-52, an amendment to limit to $35,000 any price support loan for any one agricultural commodity; 30-48, an amendment providing price supports of 85 percent of parity to farmers who cut allotments by 20 percent; and 5-69, an amendment to repeal all farm price support programs and freeze current farm surpluses held by the Government. (For voting, see chart p. 412)

PROVISIONS -- As sent to the House, S 1968:

Offered to wheat farmers for the 1960 and 1961 crops a choice among: (1) planting their full acreage allotment and receiving 65 percent of parity price support; (2) reducing their acreage allotment by 10 percent and receiving 75 percent of parity; or (3) reducing their allotment 20 percent and receiving 80 percent of parity.

Limited to $35,000 the total amount of price support loans extended to any person on any one year's production of agricultural commodities, but exempted from the limitation loans to cooperative marketing organizations.

Exempted for crop years 1960 and 1961 the 30-acre limitation for wheat grown for on-the-farm use.

Reduced the 15-acre exemption from controls to 12 acres or the highest planted exempt acreage in 1957-59, whichever was less, and specified that a farmer could have no more than one 12-acre exemption.

Provided that farmers who did not take advantage of the existing 15-acre exemption provision in any one of the crop years 1957-59 would not be entitled to a 12-acre exemption in 1960 or 1961.

Strengthened penalties for wheat produced on acreage in excess of allotments, and imposed penalties on the actual yield of excess acres.

Prohibited price supports for wheat produced outside the commercial wheat-producing area.

Barred support payments to non-cooperators for wheat, cotton, rice, peanuts or tobacco.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

John J. Williams (R Del.), Prescott Bush (R Conn.) -- Limit to $35,000 the total amount of price support loans to any person on any one year's production of agricultural commodities; May 22; Roll-call vote, 57-20.

Philip A. Hart (D Mich.) -- Exempt for crop years 1960 and 1961 the 30-acre limitation for wheat grown for on-the-farm-use; May 22. Voice.

Milton R. Young (R N.D.) -- Provide 75 percent of parity price support to farmers reducing acreage allotments by 10 percent; May 22. Voice.

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) -- Exempt from the $35,000 price support loan limitation cooperative marketing organizations; May 22. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Humphrey -- Amend Williams-Bush amendment (above) to limit to $35,000 any price support loan on any one agricultural commodity; May 22. Roll call, 24-52.

Humphrey -- Provide price supports of 85 percent of parity to wheat farmers cutting acreage by 20 percent; May 22. Roll call, 30-48.

Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) -- Substitute for the bill an amendment to repeal all agricultural price support programs and freeze farm surpluses currently held by the Government; May 22. Roll call, 5-69.

Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) -- Define farmers eligible to vote in a referendum on national marketing quotas as those who harvested wheat in the year before the referendum was held; May 22. Voice.

Dirksen -- Substitute the Administration's bill that would provide for the 1960-62 wheat crops, for farmers accepting marketing quotas, 75 percent of the average price received for wheat during the three marketing years immediately preceding the marketing year for the crop; eliminate wheat acreage allotments in 1963 and provide for the 1963 crop and each succeeding year 90 percent of the average market price of the three years immediately preceding; limit to $35,000 any price support loan to any one person for one year's production of agricultural commodities; extend for three years the Conservation Reserve Program and raise maximum annual CRP payments from $45 million to $50 million; extend the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (PL 480) for three years and increase Title I authorization from $2.25 billion to $6.75 billion, and raise Title II authorization from $800 million to $1.5 billion; May 22. Standing.

DEBATE -- May 22 -- Williams (Del.) -- The $35,000 price support payment limit on all crops would "not affect 90 percent of the farmers of this country. The other 10 percent can afford to do their own farming without dipping into the Federal Treasury."

Capehart -- The time has come "to change the so-called farm law. I am hopeful that Senators will have the courage to vote their convictions, because my best judgment is that their political future would be much better served by facing this issue than by trying to avoid it."

Allen J. Ellender (D La.) -- S 1968 "may" cut wheat production in 1960 "by between 120 million and 200 million bushels. That is the chief purpose of the bill."

Humphrey -- Predicted that under the bill "total production of wheat will not be substantially reduced, if reduced at all, and income will be reduced."

House

COMMITTEE -- Agriculture.

HEARINGS -- Feb. 10 and March 18, 19 on the Administration's farm program, and, following President Eisenhower's June 25 vetoes of S 1968, the wheat bill, and S 1901 providing a tobacco price stabilization program, continued general farm hearings June 29-30, July 1, 2, 7-10.

ACTION -- The Committee, in a May 25 report on its wheat bill (HR 7246 -- H Rept 384), attributed the Nation's wheat surplus to the Administration's "failure" to work with Congress for "sound improvements" in the program. Minority views by 11 of the 12 Republicans on the Committee opposed the bill on grounds it would cost $110 million more than the current program.

Floor Action

The House June 12, by a 189-177 roll-call vote, passed an amended version of its bill (HR 7246) that offered wheat growers, for the 1960 and 1961 crops, a choice between receiving 90 percent of parity price supports in return for reducing acreage allotments by 25 percent, or receiving 50 percent of parity with unlimited production. (For voting, see chart p. 368)

An amendment was adopted limiting to $35,000 the total amount of wheat price-support loans to any person per year. The House rejected, by a 141-224 roll call, a motion by Page Belcher (R Okla.) to recommit the bill with instructions to substitute provisions that would retain, generally, the current program but permit all wheat farmers to vote in a referendum.

The House subsequently passed the Senate wheat bill (S 1968), amended to conform to the House text. (See provisions of vetoed bill, p. 238)

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

George McGovern (D S.D.) -- Set a $35,000 limit on wheat price-support loans; June 11. Voice vote.

Delbert L. Latta (R Ohio), as amended by Carl Albert (D Okla.) -- Define farmers eligible to vote in a referendum as those who have a wheat allotment for the crop to be harvested in the year the referendum is held and who have complied with such acreage allotment; June 11. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Page Belcher (R Okla.) -- Substitute for the Committee bill new provisions for a permanent program that would: maintain the current 55 million minimum national acreage allotment and the 75 to 90 percent of parity price support level; repeal the 15-acre exemption from marketing quotas; eliminate the 30-acre ceiling on wheat grown for on-the-farm use; strengthen overproduction penalties; allow all wheat farmers to vote in a referendum; June 11. Teller, 114-168.

Toby Morris (D Okla.) -- Substitute for the Belcher proposals a wheat plan that would include a direct payments program; June 11. Voice.

Charles H. Brown (D Mo.) -- Amend Belcher plan to completely bar price support payments if marketing quotas are rejected; June 11. Standing, 35-92.

Harlan Hagen (D Calif.) -- Amend Belcher plan to provide more rigid penalties for excess plantings; June 11. Standing, 97-132; Teller, 105-148.

Robert H. Michel (R Ill.) -- Amend Belcher plan to set a $50,000 limit on wheat loans; June 11. Standing, 99-136.

John F. Baldwin (R Calif.) -- Set $50,000 limit on wheat loans; June 11. Standing, 33-76.

Albert Quie (R Minn.) -- Raise from 25 percent to 30 percent the acreage reduction required to receive 90 percent of parity price support; allow a wheat farmer to voluntarily retire all his allotment in return for payments in kind; impose marketing penalties on a farm's entire wheat production if acreage diverted is used for grazing or raising of other crops; repeal the 15-acre exemption, but allow all farmers the right to vote in the national referendum; direct the Secretary of Agriculture to make a study of a program based on bushelage allotment for wheat and report to Congress; June 11. Voice vote.

Neal Smith (D Iowa) -- Provide that under the payments-in-kind provision, CCC would redeem such certificates in cash, in lieu of wheat; June 11. Voice.

Latta -- Retain the 15-acre exemption. June 11. Voice.

DEBATE -- June 11 -- Carl Albert (D Okla.), chairman of the Wheat Subcommittee -- The Department of Agriculture estimate that the Committee bill would result in an annual cost increase of $110 million "simply is not true." Instead, a Library of Congress report estimated that under HR 7246 there would be an annual Government saving of $264 million.

J. Floyd Breeding (D Kan.) -- "I am convinced that a vast majority of commercial wheat farmers will accept the rather painful formula contained in HR 7246 for achieving a substantial reduction in production," providing they are compensated by higher price supports.

Charles B. Hoeven (R Iowa) -- The Belcher substitute would reduce production by at least 150 million bushels a year and save $80 million, if marketing quotas are approved, or $350 million if quotas are voted out. "It has the approval of the Department of Agriculture (and) the American Farm Bureau (Federation.)"

Conference

REPORT -- The conference report on S 1968 (H Rept 560), filed June 17, recommended compromise legislation that would support wheat at 80 percent of parity with a 20 percent cut in acreage, in contrast to the House provision offering 90 percent of parity for a 25 percent acreage cut. In other respects the conferees' bill was close to the House version passed June 12. The report, signed by all conferees except Sen. George D. Aiken (R Vt.) and House Republicans, estimated that the compromise bill would decrease wheat production by 200-300 million bushels per year and result in a $150-$200 million annual saving to the Government.

ACTION -- The Senate June 17 agreed by voice vote to the conference report but the House June 18, by a 202-214 roll-call vote (D 195-71; R 7-143), rejected it. (For voting, see chart p. 370)

The Senate June 22, by a 44-40 roll-call vote, agreed to a motion by Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) to accept the House version of S 1968. The action sent the bill to the White House. (For voting, see chart p. 418) Before passage, the Senate, by voice vote, tabled an amendment by Francis Case (R S.D.) that would have set the price-support level at 85 percent rather than 90 percent of parity.

Veto

President Eisenhower, in his June 25 veto message on S 1968, said the bill "disregards the facts of modern agriculture. The history of acreage control programs -- particularly in the case of wheat -- reveals that they just do not control production. Under acreage controls in the 1954-58 period, acreage was reduced by over 25 percent but at the same time yield per acre was increased by about 30 percent. The same situation would be likely to happen in 1960 and 1961. The poorest acres would be retired from production and all the modern technology would be poured on to the remainder....

"Contrary to the recommendations I made, this bill prescribes for a sick patient another dose of what caused his illness. The proposed return to the discredited high, rigid price supports would hasten the complete collapse of the entire wheat program."

No effort to override the veto was made.

Analysis of House Voting on Wheat

Charges of a "revolt" by big-city Representatives against high farm price supports were partly borne out by a CQ analysis of voting on S 1968. Of 141 Representatives from metropolitan districts, 85 opposed the legislation ultimately sent to the President. But the split between the two parties was more pronounced than that between big city and farm districts. While a majority of Democrats from metropolitan as well as rural areas supported the legislation, a majority of Republicans, even those from major wheat-growing areas, opposed it.

The analysis covered Representatives from "metropolitan," "rural" or "wheat" districts who either voted or announced their positions on the House version of S 1968, passed by a 189-177 roll-call, providing 90 percent of parity price supports in return for a 25 percent reduction in acreage, and the Senate-House compromise version, rejected by a 202-214 roll call, that provided an 80 percent of parity support level in return for a 20 percent acreage reduction.

● METROPOLITAN DISTRICTS -- Representatives from predominantly "big-city" districts opposed the House version 55-85 (D 55-36; R 0-49); they stood 51-90 (D 51-40; R 0-50) against the compromise.

● RURAL DISTRICTS -- The votes of those from predominantly "rural" districts were for the bill, 68-19 (D 63-9; R 5-10) and 67-20 (D 64-8; R 3-12), respectively.

(For explanation of district categories, see 1956 Almanac p. 788)

● WHEAT DISTRICTS -- 21 Members of the House represent the top 20 "wheat" districts of the Nation, as categorized by the 1954 Census of Agriculture. Twelve of the 21 are Democrats and of these nine supported both the House version and the conference version: LeRoy H. Anderson (Mont.), Denver D. Hargis (Kan.), Byron L. Johnson (Colo.), Donald F. McGinley (Neb.), George McGovern (S.D.), Gracie Pfost (Idaho), Walter Rogers (Texas), George E. Shipley (Ill.), Al Ullman (Ore.). Three were for the House version and against the compromise: J. Floyd Breeding (Kan.), Quentin N. Burdick (N.D.), Toby Morris (Okla.)

Nine of the 21 are Republicans. Five were against both the House and compromise versions: Page Belcher (Okla.), Hamer H. Budge (Idaho), Walt Horan (Wash.), Catherine May (Wash.), Edward H. Rees (Kan.). Three were for both versions: William H. Avery (Kan.), Don L. Short (N.D.), Phil Weaver (Neb.). Wint Smith (Kan.) voted for the House version and against the compromise.

ACREAGE ALLOTMENTS

S 1455 -- Reported by Senate Agriculture and Forestry Committee (S Rept 115) March 18, 1959.

● Passed by the Senate by voice vote April 15.

HR 7740 -- Reported by House Agriculture Committee (H Rept 728) July 28.

S 1455 -- Passed by the House, amended, by voice vote Aug. 5 after HR 7740 was passed by a 309-90 roll-call vote. (See p. 380)

● Senate agreed to House version of the bill by voice vote Aug. 6.

P. L. 86-172 -- Signed into law Aug. 18.

S 1455 continued, with modifications, a program designed to preserve crop "acreage history" of states, counties and farms for allotment purposes. Under the bill, acreage history on all crops subject to acreage allotments, except cotton, would be preserved only if a farmer planted at least 75 percent of his allotment during one out of three crop years. In order to maintain acreage allotments for cotton, a farmer must plant or release at least 75 percent of his allotment each year. Under a previous law which expired with the 1959 crops, acreage history was automatically preserved regardless of what percentage of the allotment was planted annually.

The House Agriculture Committee, in its report on the measure, said that without new legislation farmers would have to "plant each year in order to maintain the acreage history for their farms, county and state." The report said this would result in "increased production of crops already in surplus." Provisions affecting cotton, the report said, would "require that a farmer holding a cotton acreage allotment plant it, voluntarily release it to retain the acreage history on his farm, or gradually forfeit it to other farmers who want to use it." The Department of Agriculture supported the bill.

In minority views, Reps. Harlan Hagen (D Calif.) and Charles M. Teague (R Calif.) said the measure was "illogical" and created "an incentive to plant" in spite of a farmer's judgment that he might not get a good price. They said the bill also was "a gross interference with the grower who attempts to rationalize his production in terms of national needs."

The House passed S 1455 after amending the Senate's bill to conform to the text of its own bill. The Senate Aug. 6 agreed to the House amendments, sending S 1455 to the White House. The Senate's original version of the measure provided for the transfer of cotton acreage allotments within county lines through leasing agreements made between individual farmers. It was opposed by the Agriculture Department.

PROVISIONS -- As signed by the President, S 1455:

Provided, beginning with the 1960 crop, that in order to maintain acreage history the current farm acreage allotment established for any commodity (except cotton) would be regarded as entirely planted if during the current year or either of the two preceding years the acreage planted, or placed under the soil bank program, was at least 75 percent of the farm allotment.

For cotton, provided that, regardless of the allotment size, a farmer must plant or release at least 75 percent of his allotment each year in order to maintain his acreage allotment.

Authorized the transfer of unused cotton allotments, first to other farms within the county and then within the state; allotments not used within the state would be available for distribution to other states.

TOBACCO BILL VETO

S 1901 -- Reported by Senate Agriculture and Forestry Committee (S Rept 297) May 19, 1959.

● Passed by the Senate by voice vote May 21.

● Reported by House Agriculture Committee (H Rept 421) June 2.

● Passed, amended, by the House on a 250-149 roll-call vote June 10. (See p. 366)

● Senate agreed to House amendment by voice vote June 12.

● Vetoed June 25.

S 1901 was an attempt to prevent future increases in tobacco price supports and, instead, to freeze them at the 1958 dollars and cents level for several years. However, the formula was tied to the outmoded "old parity" standard which had been computed with 1919-29 as the base period for most types of tobacco, and for this reason, and because the Administration favored a more flexible system, President Eisenhower vetoed the bill. Congress made no attempt to override the veto.

PROVISIONS -- As sent to the President, S 1901:

Stabilized price supports for most types of tobacco at the dollars and cents level for 1958 until 90 percent of parity, computed by the old method of determining parity, exceeded the 1958 level. Subsequently, the support price would be based on 90 percent of the old or new method of determining parity, whichever was lower, but not less than the 1958 dollars and cents level.

Limited to $50,000 the amount of Commodity Credit Corp. price-support loan any person could receive on the 1960 production of tobacco; exempted from such limitation loans to cooperative marketing organizations. (A similar limitation on CCC loans, designed to cover all surplus crops, was included in the fiscal 1960 agriculture appropriation bill. See p. 334.)

Senate

The Senate passed S 1901 May 21 without the $50,000 CCC loan limitation on tobacco. Sen. B. Everett Jordan (D N.C.), chief sponsor of S 1901, said during debate on the bill that its price-support formula would "prevent an increase of about one or two cents per pound in tobacco prices each year for the next four to six years." Jordan said "every one of the tobacco farm organizations" favored the legislation. Allen J. Ellender (D La.), chairman of the Senate Agriculture and Forestry Committee, also called the measure "a step in the right direction." Ellender said the Administration, however, "seems to take the position that if they cannot get what they want, they do not want any bill at all." He cited a May 21 letter from Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson opposing the bill on grounds it would not help regain American tobacco's "lost markets" abroad.

House

The House June 10, by a 250-149 roll-call vote, passed its version of S 1901. The House accepted an amendment limiting to $50,000 any tobacco price-support loan on the 1960 crop and rejected, by a 138-261 roll call, a motion by Charles B. Hoeven (R Iowa) to recommit the bill with instructions to amend the measure to freeze tobacco supports at the 1958 dollars and cents level for three years. (For voting, see chart p. 366)

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

Robert H. Michel (R Ill.) -- Limit to $50,000 the amount of CCC loan any person may receive on the 1960 production of tobacco, exempting cooperatives; June 10. Standing vote, 108-55.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Charles B. Hoeven (R Iowa) -- Freeze tobacco price supports at the 1958 dollars and cents level for three years; June 10. Standing, 65-128.

Thomas M. Pelly (R Wash.) -- Bar any benefits or assistance accruing under the legislation to any Member of Congress or Congressional or Department of Agriculture personnel; June 10. Voice.

Michel -- Beginning with the 1960 crop, set minimum flue-cured tobacco acreage allotments at not less than two acres; June 10. Voice.

DEBATE -- June 10 -- Hoeven -- Experienced tobacco industry buyers know the bill "merely amounts to a freeze for an indefinite period of time. A definite three-year freeze would cause no uncertainty; it would protect the value of current inventories...suspend the action of the haywire tobacco parity formula and...prevent another acreage reduction." His amendment had "the full approval of the Department of Agriculture...."

John C. Watts (D Ky.) -- The committee bill would permit the price of tobacco to fluctuate with the cost of living "whereas the Hoeven amendment would keep it stymied."

David S. King (D Utah) -- "Unequivocally" opposed Government price supports for tobacco, which "hardly deserves a place beside food and fiber commodities which sustain the life and health of this Nation."

FINAL ACTION

The Senate agreed to the House amendment setting a ceiling on tobacco loans June 12, by voice vote.

Veto

The President, in his June 25 veto message, said the bill's demerits far outweighed its merits. He urged Congress to enact instead "realistic legislation designed to meet the problems of tobacco farmers -- legislation such as that recommended in my special message of Jan. 29, 1959." (For text of farm message, see p. 651)

The President said that even though S 1901, by providing a new formula to replace the current 90 percent of parity level, would result in a saving to the Government in the first year of $14 million, the bill took "a long step backward by resurrecting 90 percent of 'old parity' as one basis for determining the support level for tobacco. The Congress itself discarded the 'old parity' formula years ago," he said.

"The best that can be said about S 1901 is that it might slow down the rate at which we are losing our fair share of foreign markets. It would not prevent further losses. It certainly will not regain any lost markets, because the level of price supports it requires would still be too high," the President concluded.

RICE MARKETING QUOTAS

HR 7889 -- Reported by House Agriculture Committee (H Rept 1064) Aug. 27, 1959.

● Passed by the House by a 330-52 roll-call vote Sept. 1. (See p. 388)

The House Sept. 1 passed, by a 330-52 roll-call vote, a bill (HR 7889) to lower requirements under which marketing quotas are proclaimed for rice. The measure would require that marketing quotas be established when the total supply of rice for any year exceeds normal supply. Existing law requires marketing quotas when the total supply exceeds normal supply by more than 10 percent.

The Senate did not act on the bill in 1959.

BACKGROUND -- The Agriculture Committee's Aug. 27 report (H Rept 1064) on the bill said that since a normal supply is defined as the amount needed for domestic needs and exports plus 10 percent, "a carryover of more than 20 percent in a rice crop is necessary in order to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to proclaim quotas." The report said the bill, in eliminating the top 10 percent excess requirement, "would reduce the overall cost to the Commodity Credit Corp...because of the reduced supply and the probable reduced deliveries to CCC." The report said that in hearings on the legislation, no witnesses testified in opposition to the measure, and it was also approved by the Department of Agriculture.

DEBATE -- Sept. 1 -- Clark W. Thompson (D Texas), sponsor of HR 7889 -- "One purpose of that excess 10 percent was to give the Department some extra latitude before the old escalator clause (on price supports) would go into effect. This clause no longer applies to rice." (1958 Almanac p. 269)

Charles B. Hoeven (R Iowa) -- The bill "will cut the cost of CCC holdings of surplus rice."

INTERNATIONAL SUGAR PACT

Exec. D -- Reported by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (Exec Rept 6) July 17, 1959.
- Approved by the Senate, by an 82-5 roll-call vote, July 21. (See p. 427)
- Ratification signed by the President Aug. 18.

The Senate in 1959 ratified a new, five-year International Sugar Agreement under which importing and exporting nations try to stabilize world sugar prices and supplies. The United States, which had been a party to similar agreements since 1937, joined 10 other importing nations and 25 exporting nations in the pact.

The 1959 agreement (Executive D, 86th Congress, first session) obligated importing nations to limit purchases from non-participants and assigned to exporting nations quotas that were to be sold within a set price range. As in previous agreements, sugar imported for consumption in the U.S. was specifically exempted from the quota provisions. Under the earlier agreements, ratified in 1937 and 1954, U.S. imports from non-member nations had been restricted, but since all U.S. suppliers joined the 1959 agreement, future imports were not expected to be affected. U.S. sugar imports are controlled by the Sugar Act of 1948. (See below)

Sugar Act Extension

Control of U.S. sugar imports was established by the Sugar Act of 1948, which was extended in 1951 and 1956. Although the Act was not due to expire until Dec. 31, 1960, President Eisenhower in his 1959 Budget Message asked that it be extended "at this time in order to give sugar producers needed time for production planning." Congress did not act on his request in 1959.

Congressional inaction was attributed in part to troubled U.S. relations with Cuba, the Nation's principal supplier of sugar, under the revolutionary government of Premier Fidel Castro, who overthrew the Batista regime in January. Sen. George A. Smathers (D Fla.) Oct. 28 said Castro's diatribes against the U.S. would make it difficult to support renewal of the U.S.-Cuban sugar treaty, scheduled for consideration in 1960.

Under the Sugar Act the U.S. sugar market is divided between domestic and foreign producers. The stated purpose of the program, as amended in 1956, is "to protect the welfare of consumers of sugars and of those engaged in the domestic sugar-producing industry." Principal features of the program:

- Marketing Quotas: Based on a formula in the Sugar Act, these determine how much sugar refiners may market each year in the U.S. from each domestic producing area (defined as beet, mainland cane, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands) and each foreign supplier.
- Acreage Allotments: These are assigned to domestic beet and cane growers by the Department of Agriculture, based on its estimate of U.S. market requirements.
- Program Payments: Domestic growers who abide by acreage controls receive from 30 to 80 cents per 100 pounds of sugar. About $65 million was paid out in 1957.
- Excise Tax: A tax of 50 cents on each 100 pounds of sugar marketed in the U.S. yielded $86 million in fiscal 1958 -- substantially more than was paid out to domestic sugar growers.

Prior to 1956, domestic growers were held to fixed quotas, while 96 percent of any increase in the market was assigned to Cuba, with other foreign suppliers sharing the remaining 4 percent. Under concerted pressure from domestic beet and cane interests, Congress in 1956 revised the formula to provide that 55 percent of any increase in U.S. consumption above 8,350,000 tons each year would be allotted to domestic growers, the other 45 percent going to foreign suppliers except the Philippines, which were given a fixed quota of 980,000 tons annually. (For details of the 1956 Sugar Act extension, see 1956 Almanac p. 493).

Five areas supply about 90 percent of all sugar consumed in the U.S.: Cuba, 33 percent; domestic beet, 22 percent; Hawaii and Puerto Rico, about 12 percent each; and the Philippines, about 10 percent. (For further reference, see 1947 Almanac p. 388, 1951 Almanac p. 92, 1955 Almanac p. 173, 1956 Almanac p. 493)

AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH

S 690 -- Reported by Senate Agriculture and Forestry Committee (S Rept 193) April 16, 1959.
- Passed, amended, by a 76-7 roll-call vote of the Senate July 27. (See p. 429)

HR 8639 -- Reported, amended, by House Agriculture Committee (H Rept 1055) Aug. 26.

S 690 -- Passed, amended, by voice vote of the House Sept. 1.

The Senate and House in 1959 passed different versions of a bill designed to cope with the pressing problem of farm surpluses by expanding agricultural research. The measure was not sent to conference during the first session; final action was put off until 1960.

The Senate version of S 690 would establish within the Department of Agriculture a new agency to coordinate and expedite development of new uses for farm products and new crops to replace those in surplus. The agency could make incentive payments to farmers or industry, offer loans or grants for acquisition or expansion of research facilities and maintain and operate manufacturing facilities where necessary to prove the commercial feasibility of volume production. An identical bill was passed by the Senate in 1958. (1958 Almanac p. 275)

The House version of S 690 would establish an independent commission to study current projects in agricultural research and make yearly recommendations. Its annual cost was estimated at $200,000, compared to a maximum of $100 million for the Senate bill. The Administration favored the House version, contending that the Senate bill would duplicate, at an exorbitant cost, an established Agriculture Department program.

The Senate July 27 passed S 690 by a 76-7 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 429) The bill established an Agricultural Research and Industrial Administration within the Agriculture Department. Two minor floor amendments were adopted by voice vote. The only Senator to express opposition to S 690 was Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.).

The House Sept. 1 passed S 690 by voice vote after substituting the text of its own bill (HR 8639.) The House version established a seven-member Agricultural Research and Development Commission in the Executive Branch and directed it to study the Nation's total agricultural research effort and report annually to the Agriculture Secretary and Congress, recommending areas of research with emphasis on increased industrial uses of agricultural products.

HOUSING BILL ENACTED ON THIRD TRY

S 57 -- Reported by Senate Banking and Currency Committee (S Rept 41) Feb. 3, 1959.
- Passed by a 60-28 roll-call vote of the Senate Feb. 5. (See p. 401)
- Reported by House Banking and Currency Committee (H Rept 86) Feb. 27.
- Passed, amended, by a 261-160 roll-call vote of the House May 21. (See p. 360)
- Conference report (H Rept 566) agreed to by the Senate June 22 on a 56-31 roll call (see p. 418); agreed to by the House June 23 on a 241-177 roll call. (See p. 372)
- Vetoed July 7.
- Attempt to override the veto failed by a 55-40 roll-call vote of the Senate Aug. 12 (64 "yeas" were required to override). (See p. 432)

S 2539 -- Reported by Senate Banking and Currency Committee (S Rept 715) Aug. 13.
- Passed by a 71-24 roll-call vote of the Senate Aug. 18. (See p. 435)
- Reported by House Banking and Currency Committee (H Rept 1040) Aug. 25.
- Passed by a 283-106 roll-call vote of the House Aug. 27. (See p. 386)
- Vetoed Sept. 3.
- Attempt to override the veto failed by a 58-36 roll-call vote of the Senate Sept. 4 (63 "yeas" were required to override). (See p. 441)

S 2654 -- Reported by Senate Banking and Currency Committee (S Rept 924) Sept. 8.
- Passed by an 86-7 roll-call vote of the Senate Sept. 9. (See p. 444)
- Passed by voice vote of the House Sept. 10.

P. L. 86-372 -- Signed into law Sept. 23.

The struggle over housing legislation in 1958 demonstrated the strength of President Eisenhower's veto.

Twice the heavily Democratic-controlled Congress passed housing bills only to see them vetoed by the President, who feared they would have an inflationary impact and also upset his fiscal 1960 budget.

Both times the Senate, despite the Democrats' 2 to 1 margin, failed in attempts to override Mr. Eisenhower's vetoes. Finally, with adjournment just days away, the Democratic leadership bowed to some of the President's demands and Congress passed a bill he promised in advance to sign.

The result was more Federal money for such continuing programs as slum clearance and Federal Housing Administration insurance. But even before the bill was signed into law, Democrats were talking about putting together a bigger housing bill in 1960.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, S 2654, the Housing Act of 1959:

FEDERAL HOUSING ADMINISTRATION

Increased the total amount of mortgages FHA could insure by $8 billion.

Extended FHA's home improvement and modernization program to Oct. 1, 1960.

Increased the maximum FHA mortgage on a one-family home to $22,500, from $20,000, reduced the down-payment on homes valued at $13,500-$18,000 to 10 percent.

Increased the maximum mortgages on rental housing to $20 million, from $12.5 million, and on trailer courts to $500,000, from $300,000.

Raised the maximum interest rate on such mortgages to 5.25 percent from 4.5 percent.

Increased the maximum mortgage on cooperative housing to $20 million, and raised the interest rate to 5.25 percent on management-type co-ops and 5.75 percent on sales-type co-ops.

Increased the maximum mortgages on housing in urban renewal areas.

Made insured mortgages on relocation housing more widely available.

Authorized the FHA Administrator to acquire defaulted mortgages on family homes to avoid foreclosure.

Authorized FHA insurance for nursing homes if the state certifies that there is a need for the home and it is operated under reasonable standards.

Set a maximum mortgage of $12.5 million and 75 percent of the value on nursing homes, with a maximum interest rate of 6 percent.

HOUSING FOR THE ELDERLY

Made FHA insurance available on new or rehabilitated buildings in which at least half of the units are occupied by elderly persons (62 years old and up).

Set a maximum insured mortgage of $12.5 million on such housing for private builders and $50 million for non-profit ones, with a maximum interest rate of 5.5 percent.

Authorized the HHFA to make direct loans to private non-profit corporations providing rental housing for the elderly, excluding transient or hotel purposes.

Established a $50 million revolving fund for the loans which would have a maximum maturity of 50 years and bear interest of the higher of 2.75 percent or a formula based on the average interest paid by the Federal Government.

FEDERAL NATIONAL MORTGAGE ASSOCIATION

Increased the maximum mortgage the FNMA may purchase under its secondary market operations to $20,000, from $15,000, and to $17,500 under its special assistance function.

Authorized $25 million for FNMA purchase of FHA mortgages on cooperative housing, with half earmarked for consumer cooperatives and half reserved for builder-sponsored cooperatives.

URBAN RENEWAL

Authorized urban renewal grants, under contract authority, of $350 million upon enactment and an additional $300 million July 1, 1960.

Authorized HHFA to make grants for up to two-thirds of the cost of planning community renewal programs.

Authorized loans for land acquisition and slum clearance before the signing of Federal aid contracts, if local authorities approve.

Authorized relocation payments of $200 per family and $3,000 per business for those displaced by any Governmental activity or by a program of voluntary rehabilitation of buildings.

Permitted land made available for public housing to count as a locality's contribution to urban renewal and set standards for determining the value of the land.

Permitted public improvements by a city and property costs by educational institutions, made up to five years before the signing of a Federal aid contract, to count as part of the community's local share of the project.

Authorized $10 million in grants for state, local and regional planning agencies and made eligible for planning areas with less than 50,000 population and those suffering from a major disaster.

PUBLIC HOUSING

Authorized Federal subsidization of an additional 37,000 public housing units.

Removed the requirement that public housing rents be at least 20 percent of family income, leaving it up to the local public housing agency to set the rents, subject to Public Housing Administration approval.

COLLEGE HOUSING

Increased the revolving college loan fund by $250 million, to a $1,175,000,000 total, and reserved $25 million for student-nurse and intern housing and $25 million for such non-dormitory facilities as cafeterias.

Made non-profit student housing cooperatives eligible for college housing loans.

ARMED SERVICES HOUSING

Extended the armed services housing mortgage insurance program (Capehart housing) through Oct. 1, 1961 and increased the maximum maturity of such mortgages to 30 years.

Directed the Secretary of Defense to acquire old rental housing under the existing law applying to Wherry housing.

Authorized FHA to insure mortgages on up to 5,000 family housing units certified by the Secretary of Defense as needed for military and essential civilian personnel in impacted areas.

MISCELLANEOUS

Extended the farm housing research program through June 30, 1961 and made $100,000 available for it.

Authorized $7.5 million annually in fiscal 1960 and fiscal 1961 for loans and grants to applicants for hospital construction assistance in impacted areas who applied before June 30, 1953 for aid but were turned down for lack of funds.

Permitted savings and loan associations to purchase interests in first mortgages on Federally insured homes, without area restrictions but under certain limitations, and to make loans to buy land for residential use.

Extended the Voluntary Home Mortgage Credit Program -- a system under which FHA and GI mortgage applications circulate among lenders until one will accept the mortgage -- until Oct. 1, 1961.

Exempted FHA-insured sales housing mortgages from inclusion in the total of real estate loans national banks are permitted to make.

Down Payment Schedule

Builders and realtors especially welcomed the FHA down payment schedule in the Housing Act of 1959 because it made home buying easier. The old and new schedules for one-family homes:

OLD -- 3% down on first $13,500 of house value.
NEW -- Same.
OLD--15% down on amount between $13,500-$16,000.
NEW--10% down on amount between $13,500-$18,000.
OLD--30% down on amount between $16,000-$20,000.
NEW--30% down on amount between $18,000-$22,500.

Background

President Eisenhower Jan. 19 in his fiscal 1960 Budget Message served notice he thought it was time for the Federal Government to stage a partial withdrawal on the housing front.

The recommendation which caused the most furore concerned the future of the urban renewal program. Mr. Eisenhower urged Congress to revise the urban renewal laws so as to "require states and cities to assume a gradually increasing share of the expense of buying and improving the land and of other net project costs." He recommended that the Federal share of the cost of an urban renewal project be reduced, in stages, from two-thirds to one-half.

President Eisenhower's recommendations, which alarmed the Nation's mayors and brought protests from such pressure groups as the American Municipal Assn. and U.S. Conference of Mayors, came as the urban renewal program entered its 10th year.

The program was authorized in the Housing Act of 1949 (PL 171, 81st Congress). The Act declared it was in the "general welfare" for Congress to clear away slums, "thus contributing to the development and redevelopment of communities and to the advancement of the growth, wealth and security of the Nation."

The program is run by the Urban Renewal Administration within the Housing and Home Finance Agency. The URA commits the available money to cities that apply, after checking to see if they meet such Federal requirements as having a workable plan for renewing a slum area. Cities may borrow money from the Federal Government for planning a slum clearance project and clearing the site.

Once the former slum site is ready for new buildings, the city usually sells the land to a private developer. The money the developer pays the city for the site is subtracted from the total amount the city spent on the slum clearance project. The resulting figure is the city's net cost, or loss. The Federal Government pays the city for two-thirds of that loss under the urban renewal program. The city often uses this Federal grant money to pay off the earlier Federal loans.

President Eisenhower's recommendations to reduce the Federal contribution to urban renewal projects came when the Urban Renewal Administration was just about out of money for new contracts. Listed on p. 247 is how much Federal money each state participating in the urban renewal program had actually received or been promised between the start of the program in 1949 and Dec. 31, 1958. The projects listed include demonstration projects built in some states to illustrate the program.

Democratic leaders in Congress, strongly opposed to President Eisenhower's pleas for less, rather than more, Federal help for housing, made plans early in the 1959 session to pass a broad bill similar to the one which failed to pass the House in the closing hours of the 85th Congress. (1958 Almanac p. 225) Because the 1958 elections had provided them with 2 to 1 margins over the Republicans in both the Senate and House, the Democratic leaders had reason to feel confident about getting a broad housing bill through Congress.

Chairman John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) of the Senate Banking and Currency Housing Subcommittee Jan. 9 introduced a bill (S 57) similar to the one which foundered in 1958. A decidedly more liberal measure (S 193) was introduced Jan. 12 by Sens. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) and John F. Kennedy (D Mass.). A bill whose scope was in between those two Senate measures was introduced Jan. 15 by Chairman Albert Rains (D Ala.) of the House Banking and Currency Housing Subcommittee (HR 2357).

The Democratic proposals brought warnings from Republicans that President Eisenhower would veto any bill which would upset the balance of his fiscal 1960 budget. After a White House meeting Jan. 20, Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) said the President was determined to "dampen the inflationary fever."

The Administration's bills (S 65, which applied only to fiscal 1959 emergency needs, and S 612, which carried longer-range housing proposals) were introduced in January.

Comparison of Housing Bills

The Senate Banking and Currency Committee, after holding hearings Jan. 22-28, reported a revised version of Sparkman's bill (S 57 -- S Rept 41) Feb. 3.

The House Banking and Currency Committee, after holding hearings Jan. 28-Feb. 3, amended Rep. Rains' bill and voted 19-7 Feb. 25 to approve it.

A comparison of the housing proposals recommended by the Eisenhower Administration, the Senate Banking and Currency Committee and the majority on the House Banking and Currency Committee follows. The Senate and House later, in passing the legislation, made some changes which are not shown in this comparison. (See floor action sections.)

Urban Renewal

The Housing Act of 1949 (1949 Almanac p. 274) authorized the Federal Government to spend money to help communities clear away their slums. The city clears a slum area and then sells the site to a private developer who puts up new homes and shops. The Federal Government pays the city two-thirds of its loss on the deal. For example, if the city spent $1 million to buy up and clear the site but only received $500,000 from the developer, the Federal Government would give the city two-thirds of $500,000, or $333,000. The demand for this Federal money has outrun the supply in recent years. The city mayors, through such organizations as the American Municipal Assn. and U.S. Conference of Mayors, said the 86th Congress should authorize in 1959 an additional $600 million a year for 10 years.

Other features of the existing urban renewal program included Federal money to help cities plan slum clearance projects (shown as "urban planning" on the accompanying chart), temporary loans until the city gets private financing of its project (urban renewal advances), and Federal payments to move people displaced by slum clearance projects (relocation payments). The Senate bill provided a new feature: graduate scholarships for students desirous of studying housing. Following are the three proposed urban renewal provisions:

ADMINISTRATION -- $1.55 billion, which included a $100 million emergency fund at the disposal of the President and the $100 million recommended to subsidize slum clearance projects for the balance of fiscal 1959. The remaining $1.35 billion would be spent over six years at this rate: $250 million for fiscal 1960, 1961 and 1962; $200 million for fiscal 1963, 1964 and 1965. The Federal share of the community's loss on a slum clearance project would be reduced gradually from two-thirds to one-half. The reductions would be to 60 percent in fiscal 1961; 55 percent in fiscal 1962; 50 percent in fiscal 1963, 1964 and 1965.

$10 million for urban planning.

SENATE -- $2.1 billion over six years for slum clearance projects. The outlay would be $350 million a year in fiscal 1959 through 1964.

$10 million for urban planning.

$1.5 million for urban scholarships.

HOUSE -- $1.5 billion over three years at this rate: $500 million upon enactment of the bill; $500 million in fiscal 1960 and $500 million in fiscal 1961.

$10 million for urban planning.

Public Housing

The U.S. Housing Act of 1937 authorized the Federal Government to help localities build low-rent housing units for persons of low income. Basically, the Government's aid is in two steps. First, the Government loans the local public housing authority money which is repaid when it sells construction bonds on the project to private investors. Second, the Government pays that portion of the indebtedness that the managers of the public housing project cannot meet through their rental income. This latter subsidy was limited by the 1949 Housing Act to $336 million a year. The 1949 Act said no more than 810,000 public housing units could be subsidized. Actual construction since then has fallen far short of that total. At the close of fiscal 1959, only 241,145 units were completed and about 101,500 were under contract.

ADMINISTRATION -- No new units authorized.

SENATE -- Authorized subsidization of an additional 35,000 public housing units from July 1, 1959 through June 30, 1963 and extended deadline of previous authorizations. The net effect would be authority for the Federal Government to subsidize about 45,000 units between enactment of the bill and June 30, 1963. Republicans said the Federal help to pay off the construction bonds over a 40-48 year period would come to $883 million.

HOUSE -- Authorized 35,000 units a year until the 810,000 authorized in 1949 were completed, but said the Federal subsidy could not exceed $336 million in any one year. The Democratic majority of the House Banking and Currency Committee said this money ceiling would limit additional construction to 145,000 units, or 35,000 a year for four years. The Republican minority said the authorization would allow 190,000 additional units and would cost the Government $3.7 billion over 40-48 years. Democrats replied this should not be included as new obligations because the units were authorized by the 1949 Act.

College Housing

The Housing Act of 1950 authorized the Federal Government to make direct loans to colleges and universities which could not obtain adequate financing elsewhere. The loans, principally for the construction of college dormitories, are repayable over 40 years at low interest rates (approximately 3 percent). As of Dec. 31, 1958, $925 million had been authorized since the program started. There were applications on hand on Dec. 31, 1958, totaling $52.9 million, but only $3.2 million was left in the fund.

ADMINISTRATION -- $200 million in fiscal 1959 for dormitory construction loans. Beyond 1959, the Eisenhower Administration in a separate proposal (S 1017, HR 4267) recommended Federal subsidies to help colleges pay off their construction bonds, both on dormitories and other facilities such as classrooms and laboratories. The Federal grants would be limited to $500 million over 20 years.

SENATE -- $400 million for college housing loans with $50 million reserved for nurse and intern dormitories and $50 million for such service facilities as student unions and cafeterias.

$125 million in loans for such academic facilities as classrooms and libraries and another $125 million to guarantee private loans on such construction. These would be new programs.

HOUSE -- $400 million in college housing loans with $40 million reserved for nurse and intern dormitories and $40 million for other service facilities.

Cooperative Housing

The Federal Housing Administration encourages banks to make big loans to cooperatives by agreeing to guarantee loans of up to 90 percent of the cost of the project (95 percent where half the tenants are veterans). Consumer cooperative apartments are ones built, through contracting, by the same people who will live in them. The future tenants thus can tailor the apartment to their needs and also have the advantages of liberal financing. The other type of cooperatives, sales type, are constructed by builders under FHA special financing advantages and then sold. The only financial obligation in this program was authorized in the HOUSE bill. It would authorize the Federal National Mortgage Assn. to buy $75 million worth of cooperative housing mortgages, $25 million upon enactment of the bill and $50 million the following July 1. Half of the $75 million would go for consumer type cooperatives and the other half for builder-sponsored sales type.

Elderly Housing

Like the cooperative program, the Government provides incentive for construction of housing for the elderly by offering liberal mortgage terms. The HOUSE bill authorized, in addition to this, direct Federal loans to nonprofit corporations building apartments for persons 62 years old or more. A labor union, for instance, could obtain a direct Federal loan for 98 percent of the cost of an apartment building it wanted to construct for retired workers. The union would pay the loan back over 50 years at 3½ percent interest. The House Banking and Currency Committee said this loan program would reduce rents about $20 a month because of the liberal financing. The HOUSE bill authorized $100 million for this new loan program.

Defense Hospital Grants

During the Korean War, Congress gave communities money to help build such facilities as hospitals for the influx of defense workers. Several community applications had not been acted upon by the June 30, 1953 deadline set by the 1951 Defense Housing and Community Facilities Act. Both the SENATE and HOUSE bills authorized $7.5 million in fiscal 1959 and $7.5 million in fiscal 1960 to help pay for hospital construction prompted by the 1951 Act. The ADMINISTRATION bills did not recommend such grants. (1951 Almanac p. 184)

Farm Housing Research

The Housing Act of 1957 (1957 Almanac p. 594) authorized the Federal Government to pay land grant colleges for research into the housing needs of farmers. Congress appropriated $75,000 for fiscal 1958 for the program.

ADMINISTRATION -- No provision.

SENATE -- $225,000 at the rate of $75,000 a year for fiscal 1960, 1961 and 1962.

HOUSE -- $50,000 for fiscal 1960 and $50,000 for fiscal 1961.

First Housing Bill (S 57)

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency.

HEARINGS -- Jan. 22-28 on housing legislation.

Administration officials and Democratic Senators testified for their respective bills. Spokesmen for municipal groups urged an increase in urban renewal funds; the American Bankers Assn. supported the Administration proposal to reduce the Federal share of urban renewal costs. Organizations representing colleges asked for more funds for college housing loans and for a new $250 million loan program to help build academic facilities.

ACTION -- The Committee Feb. 3 reported an amended version of S 57 (S Rept 41) that authorized over $1 billion more in loans and grants than the Administration wanted.

Although Chairman A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) was the only Committee member to vote against reporting S 57, individual views were filed by Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.), Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), William Proxmire (D Wis.) and Wallace F. Bennett (R Utah).

In a joint statement, Clark, Douglas, Javits and Proxmire said the $2.1 billion authorized over six years for urban renewal "is so limited that...it will force drastic curtailment and postponement of urban renewal projects now contemplated (and) preclude the entrance of new cities into the program." They said their amendment to provide $450 million a year for four years for urban renewal, in place of the bill's $350 million for six years, was rejected on a 6-9 vote of the Committee.

Bennett said S 57 went "beyond the realm of soundness" in its urban renewal, public housing, college housing and direct GI loan provisions.

Floor Action

The Senate Feb. 5 passed S 57 on a 60-28 roll-call vote. (For voting see chart p. 401)

By its sponsors' estimates, the measure would have provided $2.7 billion over six years for Federal housing programs. But after adoption of last-minute compromises, Democratic and Republican leaders estimated it would exceed President Eisenhower's housing requests for fiscal 1960 by only $35 million in actual expenditures. Debate on whether it would upset the President's precariously balanced fiscal 1960 budget ran all through the discussions on the bill.

The sharpest single battle was over raising interest rates on GI loans from 4.75 to 5.25 percent. Sens. A.S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.) and Albert Gore (D Tenn.) contended such a hike would amount to "legislating inflation." Their amendment to freeze the rates was rejected, 27-58. (For final action on interest rates and direct veterans' loans, see story p. 257.)

Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas), after a meeting with President Eisenhower Feb. 4, sponsored an amendment which eliminated the $125 million in S 57 to guarantee college loans and reduced the college loan fund from $400 million to $300 million. Johnson said Feb. 5: "We think we ought to go as far as possible to meet the Administration half-way."

Amendments to substitute the Administration's housing proposals, in toto and in part, were defeated.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.) -- Reduce direct loan fund for veterans from $300 million to $150 million; Feb. 4. Voice vote. Sen. Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) offered an amendment to kill the direct loan provision, then accepted Cooper's modification of his amendment, but finally withdrew his modified amendment when Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) objected to providing any money for the direct loan program. Cooper's amendment was worked out with the Democratic leaders.

Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) -- Reduce the college housing loan fund from $400 million to $300 million and eliminate the $125 million college loan guarantee fund; Feb. 5. Voice.

Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) -- Require the Urban Renewal Administration to increase annual capital grants for urban renewal by $150 million (from $350 million) "if such action is necessary to meet the needs of pending bona fide applications," but provide that the total amount for the six-year program could not go over $2.1 billion before July 1, 1964; Feb. 5. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) -- Substitute the Eisenhower Administration bill (S 612) for S 57, reducing total authorization by $1.3 billion; Feb. 4. Roll-call vote, 32-58.

Capehart -- Delete provision for additional public housing units in fiscal 1960; Feb. 4. Roll call, 37-50.

Capehart -- Reduce the number of additional public housing units for fiscal 1960 from 35,000 to 17,500; Feb. 5. Roll call, 39-53.

Capehart -- Substitute revised Administration-sponsored urban renewal provisions calling for a six-year, $1.5 billion program of capital grants and reduction in the Federal contribution to a project's cost from two-thirds to one-half; Feb. 5. Roll call, 34-56.

Clark -- Provide $450 million annually for urban renewal in fiscal 1959-1962; permit increase of $150 million in any year, but limit total authorization to $1.8 billion; Feb. 5. Roll call, 33-56.

A.S. Mike Monroney (D Okla.) as amended by Albert Gore (D Tenn.) -- Keep interest rates on GI home mortgages at 4.75 percent; give $1 billion additional mortgage-purchasing authority to the Federal National Mortgage Assn. and require the agency to buy its mortgages at par instead of discounting them; Feb. 5. Roll call, 27-58.

House

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency, Housing Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- Jan. 28-Feb. 3 on housing legislation.

TESTIMONY -- Jan. 28 -- Subcommittee Chairman Albert Rains (D Ala.) said existing programs to promote housing should be broadened and that "the time is long overdue" to set up a housing program for the elderly.

Administrator Norman P. Mason of the Housing and Home Finance Agency urged passing an emergency bill to continue housing programs through the remainder of fiscal 1959 and hammering out an omnibus bill later. He termed the Rains bill (HR 2357) provisions for a housing loan program for the elderly "an unnecessary and undesirable use of Federal funds." Mason said there was a need for more urban renewal money, but added there was always the question of "whether we can do everything in America we would like to have done."

Jan. 29 -- Robert A. Holloway, chairman of the Washington Committee of the National Assn. of Real Estate Boards, recommended permanent status for the home improvement program; increasing the maximum mortgage of FHA sales housing from $20,000 on one-family homes to $30,000; more flexibility in FHA and GI mortgage interest rates; continuing authorization for FHA insurance instead of putting a ceiling on how many dollars in mortgages the agency could insure; adoption of the Eisenhower Administration proposals for the urban renewal program.

Jan. 30 -- Cowles Andrus of Passaic, N.J., spokesman for the American Bankers Assn., endorsed the Administration slum clearance proposals and opposed further liberalization of down payments and new programs for the elderly. He said such liberalization would have an inflationary effect.

Boris Shishkin of the AFL-CIO said the economy needed more housing aids because "13 million Americans are still forced to live in substandard dwellings."

Jan. 31 -- Mayors Richard J. Daley (D) of Chicago and Thomas D'Alesandro Jr. (D) of Baltimore, representing the U.S. Conference of Mayors, said Congress should authorize a 10-year urban renewal program of $600 million a year.

Robert Gerholz of Flint, Mich., representing the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S., endorsed the Eisenhower Administration proposals.

Feb. 2 -- Carl T. Mitnick, president of the National Assn. of Home Builders, said the interest rate on GI loans should be raised from 4.75 to 5.25 percent to enable them "to compete for funds in today's investment market."

Feb. 3 -- Mayor Richardson Dilworth (D), Philadelphia, representing the American Municipal Assn., said the Administration's urban renewal recommendations were "ridiculous" and "disappointing" when compared with the need. He proposed $600 million a year for 10 years.

COMMITTEE APPROVAL

ACTION -- The Subcommittee Feb. 6 approved an amended version of HR 2357 that provided $2.1 billion in Federal money to continue and expand U.S. housing programs, a cut from the $3 billion outlay originally in Rains' bill.

The biggest Subcommittee cut eliminated a $500 million fund to buy FHA and GI mortgages. Another $375 million was cut from the college, elderly persons and cooperative housing programs and from slum clearance funds.

The full Committee Feb. 25 voted 19-7 to report HR 2357, with amendments, to the House. (For Committee recommendations, see Comparison of Bills, p. 248.)

Two days later, on Feb. 27, the Committee substituted its recommendations for those in the Senate bill and then reported S 57 (H Rept 86), amended. This version was sent to the House Rules Committee, the place where housing legislation stalled in 1958.

In a minority report eight Republicans called the House version of S 57 a "budget-busting bill" which they claimed ultimately would cost $5.8 billion.

HHFA Administrator Mason Feb. 27 called the House bill "one of the most costly housing proposals that has ever been presented to Congress."

Rep. Rains March 5 accused Republicans of creating "a propaganda fog of half-truths and misrepresentation designed to confuse the American people both as to the content and true cost of the bill." Rains said the House bill represented a total new authorization of only $2.1 billion; its $3.7 billion in Federal subsidies for public housing should not be considered as part of the total cost, he said, because the contributions were authorized in 1949 and would be spent over a 40-year period.

DELAY IN RULES COMMITTEE

The House Rules Committee April 16, on a 6-6 vote, refused to give a rule to the omnibus housing bill. Chairman Howard W. Smith (D Va.) reportedly lined up with Rep. William M. Colmer (D Miss.) and Republicans Leo E. Allen (Ill.), Clarence J. Brown (Ohio), B. Carroll Reece (Tenn.) and Hamer H. Budge (Idaho) in voting against granting the bill a rule.

Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas) May 7 told a news conference the Democratic leadership would use parliamentary tactics to bring the bill out of the Rules Committee within a "reasonable time." The Committee's failure to clear the bill had brought demands from liberal Democrats that Rayburn fulfill his January assurance that no major bills would be stalled in the Rules Committee if the liberals gave up their threatened attempt to curb the Committee's power.

The Rules Committee May 14, on an 8-4 party-line vote with Democrats in favor, granted an open rule for House debate on S 57.

Floor Action

The House May 21 passed its version of S 57 on a 261-160 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 360)

The architects of the House bill saw their plans challenged vehemently on the floor by a coalition of Republicans and some Southern Democrats. But the original measure finally was approved with only one major change.

SUBSTITUTE BILL

The biggest challenge came May 20 when the coalition tried to substitute for S 57 a bill (HR 7117) introduced May 14 by Rep. A. Sydney Herlong Jr. (D Fla.). The Herlong substitute had the support of the Eisenhower Administration.

It differed from S 57 as reported by the House Banking Committee in three major ways. The Herlong bill contained no authority for building additional public housing units while S 57 authorized an additional 140,000 units; it authorized $600 million ($100 million for fiscal 1959 and $250 million in both fiscal 1960 and 1961) over three years for urban renewal while S 57 authorized $1.5 billion over three years; and it required Appropriations Committee approval before any new money could be spent for such continuing programs as urban renewal and the college loan program. The committee bill retained the procedure of authorizing Federal money to be allocated as requests came in.

Backers of the Herlong bill charged that public housing was "creeping" -- some said "galloping" -- socialism. Proponents of the Committee bill said public housing and urban renewal go hand in hand, that cities have to have some place to put the people they bulldoze out of the slums.

BACK-DOOR TREASURY RAIDS

The battle cry for the new financial procedure was "stop the back-door raids on the Treasury." Herlong and his supporters, including Appropriations Committee members, contended that there should be an easy way for Congress to stop the flow of Federal cash if it saw fit. The counter argument was that stop-and-go financing would be disastrous to such programs as urban renewal; cities could not make long-range plans because they could not count on getting the Federal money; as a result, the urban renewal program would break down.

The Herlong substitute was defeated May 20 on a 177-203 teller vote. This was the critical test of strength. It indicated that the committee bill had enough support to withstand a major overhaul.

The "back-door financing" proposal was submitted separately after the Herlong substitute went down. Rep. Albert Thomas (D Texas) May 20 offered an amendment to require enactment of an appropriation bill each year before any new money could be made available for Federal National Mortgage Assn. operations, urban renewal or college housing. On a standing vote, the Thomas amendment was defeated 135-145. He then demanded a teller vote and the result was 149-145. This amendment, the only big setback to the Democratic leadership, was nailed down by a 222-201 roll-call vote May 21.

Debate on the final day centered on an amendment by Rep. William M. Colmer (D Miss.) to knock the public housing provisions out of S 57. His amendment was rejected on a 91-175 standing vote.

Then the issue of anti-discrimination was raised. Rep. John F. Baldwin (R Calif.), a supporter of S 57, offered an amendment in the closing hours of debate May 21 to ban racial discrimination in the selection of occupants of public housing. It was rejected on a 115-205 teller vote, with the four Negro members of Congress voting against it.

The Republicans made a final attempt to kill the bill when Clarence E. Kilburn (R N.Y.) made a motion to recommit S 57 and substitute the Herlong bill. His motion was rejected May 21 on a 189-234 roll-call vote.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Joel T. Broyhill (R Va.) -- Make houses less than a year old which were inspected by the Veterans Administration while under construction eligible for maximum FHA mortgages; May 20. Standing 113-10.

Albert Thomas (D Texas) -- Make all additional funds authorized in the bill available only upon enactment of pertinent appropriation bills. May 20, standing, 135-145; teller, 149-145; May 21, roll-call vote, 222-201.

B. F. Sisk (D Calif.) -- Insure that Mendota, Calif., could qualify for Federal urban renewal assistance; May 21. Voice vote.

Albert Rains (D Ala.) -- Prohibit hotels from being built with urban renewal money unless a study showed them to be necessary; May 21. Voice.

John V. Lindsay (R N.Y.) -- Require developers who put up homes and shops on land cleared with urban renewal money to file detailed plans of their projects before any contracts are signed for use of the land; May 21. Voice.

Howard W. Smith (D Va.) -- Delete language authorizing the President to let outstanding loans for urban renewal planning grants exceed $1 billion; May 21. Voice.

William B. Widnall (R N.J.) -- Rewrite section of committee bill relating to urban renewal planning so as to make clear that the Housing and Home Finance Agency could assist communities; that counties as well as cities could be given planning grants; that interstate agencies could receive grants; and that HHFA could offer technical assistance as well as grants to communities planning urban renewal projects; May 21. Voice.

Porter Hardy Jr. (D Va.) -- Require the Public Housing Administration to get approval from House and Senate Banking and Currency Committees before signing contracts for grants or loans; May 21. Voice.

Rains -- Strike out the Wherry housing provision in the committee bill to enable the House Armed Services Committee to study the matter; May 21. Voice.

Gordon L. McDonough (R Calif.) -- Authorize construction of service facilities as well as dwellings under the Capehart military housing program; May 21. Voice.

Sisk -- Extend repayment time on GI mortgages to 35 years to bring them into conformity to FHA provisions; May 21. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Adam C. Powell (D N.Y.) -- Add to the Herlong substitute (below) a new title requiring written assurances that all housing covered by the bill will be available on a non-discrimination basis; May 20. Standing vote, 48-138.

Willard S. Curtin (R Pa.) -- Defer foreclosures on FHA-insured homes owned by unemployed persons in depressed areas; May 20. Standing, 31-118.

A. Sydney Herlong Jr. (D Fla.) -- Substitute for the committee bill a new measure removing the public housing authorization, making funds available only through appropriation bills and cutting the total authorized to $1.3 billion; May 20. Teller vote, 177-203.

Kathryn E. Granahan (D Pa.) -- Authorize Federal payments for good will when businesses are forced out of an area by urban renewal projects; May 21. Voice.

Granahan -- Increase the grants to businesses for moving expenses under the urban renewal program from the $3,000 in the committee bill to $5,000; May 21. Voice.

Paul A. Fino (R N.Y.) -- Require cities of one million population or more to construct public housing units only on the land cleared through urban renewal projects; May 21. Standing, 38-130.

William M. Colmer (D Miss.) -- Delete public housing provisions; May 21. Standing, 91-175.

Gordon L. McDonough (R Calif.) -- Make public housing bonds taxable; May 21. Teller, 70-199.

John F. Baldwin (R Calif.) -- Specify that there will be no discrimination in selecting occupants of public housing units; May 21. Teller, 115-205.

DEBATE -- May 19 -- Clarence E. Kilburn (R N.Y.), ranking minority member of the Committee -- "It does not seem to me that we need any housing bill at all, except possibly to extend the FHA."

William S. Moorhead (D Pa.) -- "We cannot have urban renewal without public housing and we must have urban renewal if we want to keep the economic health of our cities and Nation sound."

May 20 -- Herlong -- "What I propose as a substitute is something which is not only within our reach, but will maintain our fiscal responsibility; will be within the budget, and which, more importantly, can become law."

Albert Rains (D Ala.), floor manager of the bill -- "This is a cleverly contrived, deceptive proposition... aimed at two things: one, overthrow of the Democratic leadership in Congress no matter what we have to take to do it; and two, to give the private enterprise groups all they want and at the same time kick the public interest groups in the teeth and give them nothing."

Minority Leader Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.) -- "I do not believe the committee bill can ever become law in this country. I am convinced that the substitute bill can become law and can become law quickly, if we are not taken to the cleaners in conference."

May 21 -- Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D Mass.) -- Noting that Powell reversed himself, after offering an anti-discrimination amendment, by voting against the later one offered by Baldwin, McCormack said Powell "acted wisely and constructively and as a statesman; he was not going to be a decoy for political deception of the Republican party."

Conference

The Senate June 22, by a 56-31 roll-call vote, and the House June 23, on a 241-177 roll call, adopted the conference report on the Housing Act of 1959 (S 57). (For voting, see charts p. 418, 372) The action sent the bill to the President. Two of his advisers, Budget Director Maurice H. Stans and Norman P. Mason, administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, said they would recommend a veto of the bill despite the fact that House-Senate conferees had cut the total cost below the original Senate and House figures. The cuts were described as a "block that veto" attempt.

The Administration and the Democratic backers of S 57 differed on the immediate and ultimate costs of the bill. Conferees said it contained $1,375,400,000 in obligational authority compared to Administration requests for $1,760,000,000 and Senate and House authorizations of $2,551,700,000 and $2,100,100,000, respectively. The HHFA said the bill would obligate the Government to spend $2,249,900,000 -- $874.5 million of which it estimated as the 40-year cost of the public housing units provided. The bill's backers did not include a public housing estimate in their figures.

As to the bill's impact on the Federal budget in fiscal 1960, Democrats estimated spending at between $28 million and $69 million, the HHFA said it would come to $75,340,000. Some but not all of the total would depend upon appropriations. Conferees had struck from the bill a House amendment sponsored by Albert Thomas (D Texas) that would have made funds for Federal National Mortgage Assn. operations, urban renewal and college housing available only through appropriation bills, instead of through contract authority as was current practice.

None of the Republican House conferees and none of the GOP Senate conferees except Homer E. Capehart (Ind.) signed the conference report. The major cut made in the bill was a reduction to $900 million over a two-year period for urban renewal grants. The Administration had requested $1,450,000,000 over a six-year period, the Senate provided $2.1 billion for the same time and the House provided $1.5 billion over two years. The Administration proposed $500 million for the first two years in its original bill (S 612).

Other major features of the bill increased the Federal Housing Administration's insurance authorization by $5-$10 billion, liberalized the size and maturity of FHA-backed mortgages, authorized 45,000 public housing units plus an optional 105,000 more, provided $300 million and $62.5 million, respectively, for college housing and classrooms, expanded the program to provide more housing for elderly persons, lengthened the maturity of GI mortgages to 35 years and extended the military housing program.

Housing Administrator Mason June 22 said "the bill is full of bonuses for the big people" -- "big builders" and "big cities." He criticized the "whopping program of public housing" and the size of urban renewal grants and issued a memorandum listing 15 "major objectionable provisions" of the bill.

Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) June 23 said he had hoped for a "bolder, more imaginative" bill but that Senate conferees had had to "meet the opinions of others, including our colleagues in the House and, we hope, the opinions of officials downtown." Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.), supported by Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) and a few others, criticized the theory of "veto proof legislation," which he said was a "euphemism for 'Give the President what he wants,' whether or not we think it is good for the country."

Johnson noted that Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller (R N.Y.) had proposed a $2 billion housing program for New York state alone.

In the House Rep. Rains denied S 57 was a "budget-busting bill" but Minority Leader Halleck pointed out that instead of adopting the President's six-year, $1.5 billion urban renewal program the Democratic conferees recommended a two-year program costing almost $1 billion. "This is known as saving money by spending it faster. A few more gimmicks like this from the big spenders and they will save the country right into bankruptcy."

Veto of First Bill

President Eisenhower July 7 vetoed S 57, declaring: "the bill is extravagant and much of the spending it authorizes is unnecessary.... Even though we have over 100,000 previously authorized public housing units as yet unbuilt, the bill would authorize 190,000 more." (Democrats said the "unbuilt" units already were assigned and that 145,000 of the 190,000 authorized were discretionary, not mandatory.)

The President criticized the urban renewal provisions; the new program for elderly persons; continuance of the college loan program and the new one for classrooms; and the requirement that Federal National Mortgage Assn. mortgages be sold at par. Mr. Eisenhower said the bill was inflationary and "would tend to substitute Federal spending for private investment." He said Congress' refusal to remove the ceiling on FHA's insurance authorization would continue its "important programs on an uncertain, hand-to-mouth basis."

Delivery of the President's message in the Senate set off more than two hours of debate. Majority Leader Johnson said it was "unfortunate that the Congress and the country are now confronted with an all-or-nothing attitude," and that Congress had "gone a long way to try to meet the President in passing the bill."

Urging Senate action on the veto, Sen. John J. Sparkman (D Ala.), chairman of the Housing Subcommittee which drafted S 57, said the President's message indicated he "has not been fully informed" on the bill.

Most Republicans applauded the veto and expressed the belief it could not be overridden.

ADMINISTRATION'S NEW PROPOSAL

An Administration-backed housing bill, authorizing $810 million in grants and loans, was introduced in the Senate (S 2378) July 14.

The new bill omitted public housing projects, housing for the aged, college classroom loans and other features to which Mr. Eisenhower had objected. Major provisions called for a two-year, $600 million urban renewal and slum clearance program, $200 million for college housing loans, $10 million for urban planning assistance and an immediate authorization of $5 billion for FHA mortgage insurance plus an additional $5 billion later.

Veto Hearings

COMMITTEE -- Senate Banking and Currency, Housing Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- July 23-31 on President Eisenhower's veto message and his alternative proposals (S 2378).

TESTIMONY -- July 23 -- Norman P. Mason, administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, said he had given advice "to the people who prepared the veto message," but he did not identify them. (He said July 31 he had recommended the veto.)

Sen. Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.), ranking GOP member of the Committee, said the President had been misled by his advisers and "some things in the veto message, at least," were "written in a way to mislead the American people."

Assistant Budget Director Elmer B. Staats said as far as he knew the Budget Bureau was not consulted on the veto message, and it was "drafted at the White House."

Public Housing Commissioner Charles E. Slusser indicated the message failed to tell the entire story on public housing, but declined to say whether he personally agreed with the President's opposition.

July 24, 27, 28 -- Spokesmen for the U.S. Conference of Mayors and the American Municipal Assn. and AFL-CIO President George Meany criticized the veto.

Representatives of two organizations of college officials testified that college dormitory and classroom loan provisions in S 57 were the absolute minimum to meet current needs.

July 29 -- Federal Reserve Board Chairman William McChesney Martin urged the Subcommittee not to "encourage additional borrowing either by home buyers or by the Treasury that would place additional demand upon our strained capital markets." He said the vetoed housing measure would have been "psychologically inflationary in the present atmosphere." Seymour Harris, Harvard University economics professor, denied that the bill would have had an inflationary effect.

July 30 -- Carl T. Mitnick, president of the National Assn. of Home Builders, and Robert A. Holloway of the National Assn. of Real Estate Boards called for quick action on a revised housing bill.

July 31 -- The Subcommittee heard a taped recording of a May 12, 1953 speech by the late Sen. Robert A. Taft (R Ohio 1939-53) on the merits of public housing for low-income families.

ACTION -- The Housing Subcommittee Aug. 4 drafted a new housing bill that would authorize $1,050,100,000 in loans and grants, compared to the $1,375,400,000 in S 57. It also authorized 37,000 new public housing units compared to 45,000 in the vetoed bill.

However, the full Committee, after receiving reports that the Subcommittee bill was not acceptable to the President, Aug. 11 voted 8-7 to recommend that the Senate override the veto of S 57.

Veto Sustained

The Senate Aug. 12 sustained, by a 55-40 roll-call vote, President Eisenhower's veto of S 57. The vote fell nine short of the two-thirds majority necessary to override a veto. Only two Republicans -- Sens. Jacob K. Javits (N.Y.) and Hugh Scott (Pa.) -- voted to override the veto. Sen. Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) and nine Southern Democrats joined 30 Republicans in supporting Mr. Eisenhower. (For voting, see chart p. 432)

Republican Sens. Gordon Allott (Colo.), Clifford P. Case (N.J.), John Sherman Cooper (Ky.), Kenneth B. Keating (N.Y.) and Margaret Chase Smith (Maine) in a joint statement said they would vote to uphold the President's veto even though they had voted for S 57. They said they were convinced the House would uphold the veto and therefore their voting to override would do nothing to hasten passage of a housing bill and instead would be interpreted as a repudiation of President Eisenhower and his fight against inflation.

Second Housing Bill (S 2539)

Senate

The Banking and Currency Committee Aug. 13 reported its Housing Subcommittee's new bill (S 2539 -- S Rept 715), which contained limited concessions to the President's views.

GOP efforts to eliminate the new, but cut-down, loan program for college classrooms were defeated.

Floor Action

The Senate Aug. 18, on a 71-24 roll-call vote, passed the new housing bill and sent it to the House. Passage followed rejection, by a 28-67 vote, of a motion by Sen. Wallace F. Bennett (R Utah) to recommit the bill. (For voting, see charts p. 434-35)

Chairman Sparkman of the Housing Subcommittee Aug. 17 described the bill as "an effort to accommodate further the view of the President." Sen. Capehart, ranking Republican on the Subcommittee, urged its passage.

Supporters of the bill estimated that S 2539 contained total obligations of $1,050,100,000 -- $325,300,000 less than S 57 as vetoed.

Continuance of FHA's authority to insure mortgages prompted sharp debate on the Senate floor. Several Republicans argued for extending the FHA authorization for two years but the Democratic majority insisted on only a one-year extension. The fact that under S 2539 FHA would run out of authorization in 1960 made likely enactment of another housing bill in that session.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate and sent to the House, the major provisions of S 2539 authorized:

$8 billion in new FHA insurance authority between enactment and Oct. 1, 1960, with the proviso that FHA could repledge retired commitments after the deadline.

$650 million upon enactment for the urban renewal program, with the President given discretion on the spending of $100 million of that amount. (The vetoed bill provided $900 million over two years.)

Federal subsidization of an additional 37,000 public housing units, compared to the maximum of 145,000 to 190,000 units in the vetoed bill.

$250 million for low interest loans to colleges for housing (compared with $300 million in the vetoed bill).

$50 million for a new, college loan program to build such non-housing facilities as classrooms and laboratories. (This item was criticized in the President's veto message on S 57, as were the two provisions below.)

A new FHA mortgage insurance program for persons 62 years old or over.

$25 million (compared to $37.5 million in the vetoed bill) for purchase by the Federal National Mortgage Assn. of cooperative housing mortgages.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) and Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.) -- Authorize FHA to insure $8 billion in mortgages between enactment and Oct. 1, 1960, and specify that after that date FHA could repledge commitments that were retired because of paid-up mortgages; Aug. 17. Voice vote.

Wallace F. Bennett (R Utah) -- Delete a provision requiring the Defense Department to buy up Wherry military housing where there is no Capehart FHA-insured, military housing; Aug. 18. Roll call, 56-39.

Sparkman -- Revise the bill's condemnation procedures for acquiring property for Wherry housing; Aug. 18. Voice.

Sparkman and Capehart -- Delete a provision requiring the FNMA to purchase special assistance mortgages at par; Aug. 18. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) -- Delete the authorization of $50 million in Federal loans to colleges for construction of classrooms and laboratories; Aug. 17. Roll call, 40-53.

Prescott Bush (R Conn.) -- Delete the $50 million classroom loan program and transfer that amount to the dormitory loan program; Aug. 17. Roll call, 41-53.

Bennett -- Extend the cut-off date of the FHA mortgage authorization from Oct. 1, 1960 to Oct. 1, 1961; Aug. 17. Roll call, 37-56.

J. Allen Frear Jr. (D Del.) -- Reduce the public housing authorization from 37,000 units to 25,000 units; Aug. 17. Roll call, 40-51.

Bush, as modified by Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- Require public housing authorities (Federal, state and local) to pay the full cost of land bought in an area cleared under the Federal urban renewal program; Aug. 18. Voice.

Bush -- Prevent localities from receiving cash credit under the urban renewal program for slum clearing done by universities in the area; Aug. 18. Voice.

Bush -- Prevent such local improvements as streets and schools from counting as part of the locality's matching requirement under the urban renewal program; Aug. 18. Voice.

Bush -- Require that money for the urban renewal program be appropriated annually by Congress rather than continuing the program on a long term, contract basis; Aug. 18. Voice.

DEBATE -- Aug. 17 -- Sparkman -- "In drafting S 2539 the Committee approved 30 substantive changes in the text of S 57...."

Chairman A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) of the Banking and Currency Committee -- "The items in S 57 to which I objected have been sufficiently moderated...to justify me in voting for it."

Dirksen -- Opposed the new $50 million program of loans for college classrooms as a function that "has no business in the housing bill."

House

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency.

ACTION -- Aug. 25 reported without amendment the new, Senate-passed housing bill (S 2539 -- H Rept 1040). Without holding hearings, the Committee approved the bill by a 19-4 vote.

Floor Action

Risking a Presidential veto, the House Aug. 27 passed S 2539, unchanged, on a 283-106 roll-call vote. A motion to recommit the bill in order to reduce its first-year costs by $350 million lost on a 156-231 roll call. (For voting, see chart p. 386)

Debate centered on whether the bill had been scaled down enough by the Senate to forestall another veto. President Eisenhower Aug. 25 had said he did not want FHA's insurance authority tied onto a general housing measure. He said an FHA insurance bill should be considered separately. Mr. Eisenhower also objected to the bill's $50 million loan program to enable colleges to build such non-dormitory facilities as classrooms and laboratories.

The House turned down a Republican effort to extend FHA's insurance authority for two years instead of one, a move that would have reduced chances for passage of another housing bill in the 1960 election year.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Gordon L. McDonough (R Calif.) -- Delete the $50 million loan program for construction of college classrooms; Aug. 27. Teller vote, 133-146.

William B. Widnall (R N.J.) -- Extend FHA's home improvement and modernization program for two years instead of one; provide a $10 billion increase in FHA's general insurance authority, without cut-off date; Aug. 27. Teller, 126-172.

McDonough -- Spread the $550 million urban renewal program over two years, instead of one; Aug. 27. Teller, 121-169.

Widnall -- Delete college classroom program and transfer the $50 million to the college dormitory program; Aug. 27. Teller, 121-167.

William M. Colmer (D Miss.) -- Delete the entire public housing section; Aug. 27. Teller, 134-180.

DEBATE -- Aug. 27 -- Albert Rains (D Ala.) -- "We have gone as far as you can expect this Congress to go in an effort to get a housing bill signed." The President should not expect Congress to accept his proposals "down to the last comma."

McDonough -- The bill, by limiting FHA's general authorization to just one year, is holding FHA "as hostage" for other, more expensive, less popular programs that will be included in a 1960 housing bill.

Veto of Second Bill

President Eisenhower Sept. 3 vetoed the second housing bill (S 2539) on grounds it represented "little over-all improvement over S 57." He said its extension of FHA insurance authority for only one year was "worse than the earlier housing bill."

In addition to criticizing the cost of the bill, the President said the proposed direct loan program to colleges for classrooms and related facilities "is Federal aid to education in a highly objectionable form."

He said there was "still time for the Congress to enact a sound housing bill" and urged passage of a bill that would: "(1) remove the ceiling on FHA mortgage insurance authority; (2) extend the FHA program for insurance of property improvement loans; (3) enact reasonable authorizations for urban renewal grants and college housing loans and adjust the interest rate on the latter; (4) extend the voluntary home mortgage credit program; and (5) adjust the statutory interest rate ceilings governing mortgages insured under FHA's regular rental and cooperative housing programs."

Veto Sustained

The Senate Sept. 4, on a 58-36 roll-call vote, sustained the President's veto of S 2539. The vote was five short of the necessary two-thirds for overriding. (For voting, see chart p. 441)

Six Republicans and 52 Democrats voted to override; the President's veto was upheld by 27 Republicans and nine Democrats.

Third Housing Bill (S 2654)

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency.

ACTION -- Sept. 8 reported a third omnibus housing bill (S 2654 -- S Rept 924) designed to meet most of President Eisenhower's objections. Unanimous approval of S 2654 came after the Committee refused to accept a stop-gap bill proposed by Sen. Capehart. Committee Chairman A. Willis Robertson (D Va.) said he had "positive assurance" that President Eisenhower would sign S 2654.

The Committee made these major changes in the second bill (S 2539) vetoed by President Eisenhower:

Extended the FHA's authority to insure mortgages indefinitely but limited its new obligations to $8 billion. (S 2539 extended the authority to Oct. 1, 1960.) Since FHA had issued letters of intent to insure mortgages amounting to $5.2 billion, leaving less than $3 billion in new authority, it was expected to bump against the $8 billion ceiling again in 1960.

Eliminated the $50 million college loan program that the vetoed bill had authorized for the construction of such non-dormitory facilities as classrooms and laboratories.

Spread out urban renewal funds over two years, with $350 million earmarked for fiscal 1960 and $300 million for fiscal 1961. (S 2539 authorized $550 million for urban renewal upon enactment, with another $100 million to be used at the President's discretion. S 2654 did not restore the Presidential fund.)

Floor Action

The Senate Sept. 9 passed S 2654, on an 86-7 roll-call vote, in the form reported by the Banking and Currency Committee. (For voting, see chart p. 444)

Instead of referring the Senate-passed bill (S 2654) to committee with the risk it might not return to the floor before adjournment, the House Sept. 10 suspended its rules and passed the measure, unchanged, by voice vote. This sent the third housing bill to the President.

PROVISIONS -- See p. 245.

PRESIDENT SIGNS BILL

The President Sept. 23 signed into law the third-try omnibus housing bill (PL 86-372), without comment.

Immediately following enactment, the Federal Housing Administration announced increases in the mortgage insurance interest rates that were authorized by the bill. Interest on rental housing went up to 5.25 percent, as did that on management-type cooperative housing. Interest on sales-type cooperative housing was set at 5.75 percent.

FEDERAL-STATE COMMISSION

S 2026 -- Reported, amended, by Senate Government Operations Committee (S Rept 584) July 27, 1959.

HR 6904 -- Reported, amended, by House Government Operations Committee (H Rept 742) July 31.

- Passed by a 335-31 roll-call vote of the House Aug. 17. (See p. 384)
- Passed, amended, by voice vote of the Senate Sept. 10.
- Conference report (H Rept 1184) agreed to by voice votes of the House and Senate Sept. 12.

PL 86-380 -- Signed into law Sept. 24.

HR 6904 established a permanent Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations to study the relationships of Federal, state and local governments and to make annual reports to Congress and the President. It was one of two bills in the field considered by Congress in 1959. A Commission on Metropolitan Problems was voted by the Senate Sept. 10 (S 1431--S Rept 881) and approved by a House committee (H Rept 940).

PROVISIONS -- As sent to the President, HR 6904:

Established a 26-member, bipartisan Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, composed of three Senators, three Representatives, four Governors, three state legislators, four mayors, three county officials, three Executive Branch members and three private citizens.

Directed the commission to make necessary studies of problems involving the planning and administration of Federal grants and Federal-state or Federal-local projects, of the "most desirable" allocation of governmental functions, responsibilities and revenues and of development of a "less competitive fiscal relationship" among the various levels of government.

Directed the commission to report annually to Congress and the President.

The principal difference between the House and Senate version of HR 6904 was the number of county officials for the commission; the compromise result was three.

BACKGROUND -- Previous studies of the problems of Federal-state-local relations had been undertaken by the temporary Commission on Intergovernmental Relations in 1953-55 and by the Joint Federal-State Action Committee, composed of 11 Governors and seven Federal officials, which was set up in 1957. Creation of a permanent intergovernmental commission was recommended by the House Government Operations Committee in 1958, following a two and one-half year study by its Intergovernmental Relations Subcommittee. (1958 Almanac p. 326)

In 1959, the House Subcommittee and the Senate Government Operations Committee held joint hearings June 16-22 on identical bills (HR 6904, 6905 and S 2026) to create a permanent 24-member Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations.

Commission Members

President Eisenhower Dec. 8 announced the appointment of 23 members to the commission. Former executive director of the Council of State Governments Frank Bane was named chairman and James Pollock of the University of Michigan vice chairman. John Burton of Cornell University was the third private citizen chosen.

Other members named were: Treasury Secretary Robert B. Anderson, Labor Secretary James P. Mitchell, Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Arthur S. Flemming from the Executive Branch;

Govs. Ernest F. Hollings (D S.C.), Abraham A. Ribicoff (D Conn.), Robert E. Smylie (R Idaho) and William G. Stratton (R Ill.);

John W. Noble of Missouri, Elisha Barrett of New York and Mrs. Leslie Cutler of Massachusetts from state legislatures;

Mayors Anthony Celebrezze of Cleveland, Norris Poulson of Los Angeles, Gordon S. Clinton of Seattle and Don Hummel of Tucson;

Edward Connor of Wayne County, Mich., Clair Donnenwirth of Plumas County, Calif., and Edwin Michaelian of Westchester County, N.Y. from county governments;

Reps. L. H. Fountain (D N.C.), Florence P. Dwyer (R N.J.) and Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.). The White House said the three Senate members would be announced at a later date.

VETERANS' HOUSING LOANS

HR 2256 -- Reported by House Veterans' Affairs Committee (H Rept 25) Jan. 29, 1959.
- Passed by a 310-89 roll-call vote of the House Feb. 4. (See p. 348)
- Passed, amended, by voice vote of the Senate June 16.
- House agreed to Senate amendments June 17, by voice vote.

PL 86-73 -- Signed into law June 30.

Congress in 1959 raised the interest ceiling on veterans' loans guaranteed or made directly by the Veterans Administration. The same bill (HR 2256) also authorized a $100 million increase in the loan fund for direct loans to veterans.

President Eisenhower, who had asked that the interest ceiling be raised to 6 percent and was opposed to any increase in direct loan funds, reluctantly signed the bill, which set a 5.25 percent interest ceiling. He expressed hope that the increase of one-half percent would encourage private institutions to invest in guaranteed GI loans. Congress had cut the size of the increase in direct loan funds from $300 million, as voted by the House, to $100 million in order to make the bill more palatable to the President.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, PL 86-73:

Authorized an additional $100 million (over the $150 million already authorized) for the VA direct loan program to veterans in rural areas where private mortgage money is scarce. (The VA would have authority to draw loan funds from the Treasury until July 25, 1960.)

Increased from 4.75 percent to 5.25 percent the interest rate ceiling on GI guaranteed and direct loans and eliminated a requirement that GI interest rates must remain at least one-half percent below Federal Housing Administration rates.

Provided for coordination between the VA and FHA on certain processes.

Background

The Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1950 originally authorized a one-year direct loan program which empowered the Administration to make $150 million in loans to veterans living in rural areas and small cities and towns not near large metropolitan areas, and where other types of financing were not available. The loans were put on a revolving fund basis in 1951 and the program subsequently was extended from year to year.

In 1957 Mr. Eisenhower pocket vetoed a bill to provide additional direct loan funds. (1957 Almanac p. 600) The emergency housing bill of 1958 (PL 85-364) extended the direct loan program until July 25, 1960, authorized $150 million annually for fiscal 1959 and 1960, increased the maximum direct loan to $13,500 and raised the interest ceiling on GI loans to 4.75 percent. (1958 Almanac p. 229)

House

COMMITTEE -- Veterans' Affairs.

HEARINGS -- Jan. 28 and 29 on HR 2256.

ACTION -- Jan. 29 reported HR 2256 (H Rept 25) with amendments that increased the direct loan fund by $300 million, instead of $150 million. The report said 43,187 veterans were on the waiting list for direct loans and that only 15,000 could be taken care of with authorized fiscal 1960 funds, which were required to be spread out over the year. The bill also provided a higher interest rate ceiling of 5.25 percent.

Floor Action

The House passed HR 2256, with amendments, on a 310-89 roll-call vote Feb. 4. Prior to passage, the House rejected, on a 123-277 roll-call vote, a motion to recommit the bill and delete the loan fund increase. (For voting, see chart p. 348)

The Senate Feb. 5, in passing the first omnibus housing bill (S 57), also approved the interest raise and provided $150 million for direct VA loans. (See story p. 245)

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

John P. Saylor (R Pa.) -- Reinvest proceeds from the sale of direct loans in the areas in which they were made, without charge against the loan fund; Feb. 4. Voice vote.

Abraham J. Multer (D N.Y.) -- Permit the Veterans Administrator, when private capital is not available in an area, to make direct loans in metropolitan as well as rural areas; Feb. 4. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Charles M. Teague (R Calif.) -- Delete section providing $300 million for direct housing loans; Feb. 4. Standing vote, 55-90; teller, 83-123.

James Roosevelt (D Calif.) -- Keep the interest rate on direct loans at 4.75 percent; Feb. 4. Standing, 67-129.

DEBATE -- Feb. 4 -- Minority Leader Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.) -- If the Democrats vote to spend an additional $300 million the people will know "the budget busters are on the move."

Olin D. Teague (D Texas), sponsor of HR 2256 -- The $300 million is "permissive." If private capital will not do the job even with the higher interest rate, then "we will expect the VA to use these direct loan funds."

Senate

HR 2256 was placed directly on the Senate calendar without being referred to a committee. The Senate June 16, by voice vote, passed the bill with an amendment that reduced to $100 million the $300 million authorized by the House.

Because President Eisenhower had not requested funds for the loan program but had asked for an increase in interest rates, the cut-down version of HR 2256 was interpreted as a means of avoiding both a veto and further charges of Democratic "budget busting."

Democratic Sens. A.S. Mike Monroney (Okla.), Albert Gore (Tenn.) and Joseph S. Clark (Pa.) June 17 protested "precipitate passage" of the bill without advance notice to the Senate. They said they would have opposed the interest rate increase if they had been present. Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) replied that "proper procedures were followed." John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) offered the compromise version with Johnson's backing. (Monroney and Gore Feb. 5 were defeated, 27-58, in an attempt to remove the interest rate increase from the first housing bill (S 57). For voting, see chart p. 400)

DEBATE -- June 16 -- Sparkman -- Disagreed with the Administration position that no direct loans were needed but believed it was "wiser" to reduce the authorization from the House-approved figure.

FINAL ACTION

The House June 17 concurred in the Senate amendment and sent the bill to the White House.

The President June 30 signed HR 2256 into law (PL 86-73). In approving the measure, the President regretted that the VA administrator was not accorded the recommended "flexibility" to set rates above 5.25 percent. He said the VA would exercise "maximum caution in making direct loans until it can be determined whether the increase in the allowable interest rate for guaranteed loans will draw sufficient private capital to that program."

CITY TAX WITHHOLDING

HR 3151 — Reported by House Ways and Means Committee (H Rept 872) Aug. 11, 1959.

● Rejected by the House Sept. 1, by a 251-133 roll-call vote, on a motion to suspend the rules and amend and pass the bill, which required a two-thirds majority. (See p. 388)

HR 3151 would have authorized the Federal Government to withhold city payroll taxes from the salaries of Federal employees living in cities of 50,000 or more population that levy such taxes. Since 1952, the Federal Government has withheld state taxes from the salaries of Federal employees in states with withholding tax systems. HR 3151 would have authorized the Federal Government to do the same thing with municipal taxes. In 1959, five states -- Alabama, Kentucky, Missouri, Ohio and Pennsylvania -- permitted their cities to impose municipal payroll withholding taxes. The bill would have affected 20 to 40 cities in those states.

Brought to the House floor Sept. 1 under suspension of the rules procedure, HR 3151 fell five votes short of winning the two-thirds majority, or 256 "yeas," needed for passage under the suspension procedure.

Following the vote, supporters of HR 3151 appealed to the House Rules Committee to grant the bill a rule so that it could be brought to the floor again under regular procedures requiring only a majority vote for passage. The Rules Committee Sept. 2 denied the request. There was no Senate action.

HR 3151 was reported unanimously (H Rept 872) Aug. 11 by the Ways and Means Committee. As introduced by Rep. Thomas B. Curtis (R Mo.) and as reported, the bill had Treasury Department endorsement and would have applied only in cities of 75,000 or more. However, an amendment reducing the population figure to 50,000 was later approved by the Committee and included in the motion for passage under suspension of the rules that was made Sept. 1 by Committee Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.). The Treasury Department preferred the 75,000 population limit.

DEBATE -- Sept. 1 -- Proponents of the bill said the procedure it authorized was an equitable arrangement with the cities, which withhold Federal taxes from the salaries of their own employees. They maintained it would involve no substantial expense to the Federal Government.

The most vocal opponents of the measure were Representatives of New Jersey and Pennsylvania Districts bordering on Philadelphia. They criticized the Philadelphia wage tax, which is levied on persons who work in the city even if they live elsewhere. Courts had upheld the right of Philadelphia to collect the tax from employees of the Philadelphia Navy Yard, but further court tests had been initiated.

Opponents said the United States "should not aid in collecting this unjust tax," but backers of the bill said its passage would not affect the legal arguments over the validity of the Philadelphia tax.

ANTITRUST DOCUMENTS

S 716 — Reported by Senate Judiciary Committee June 29, 1959 (S Rept 451).

● Passed, amended, by the Senate July 29 by voice vote. (For roll-call vote on amendment, see p. 429)

Still in the House Judiciary Committee as Congress adjourned was a Senate-passed bill permitting the Attorney General to issue a written "civil investigative demand," enforceable by court order, for the production of business records needed by the Government for civil antitrust investigations.

The measure, requested by the President in his Economic Reports annually since 1956, would give the Justice Department the same authority already vested in the Federal Trade Commission. Without these powers, the Department could acquire such evidence only by relying on grand jury investigations or voluntary cooperation.

The Senate passed the bill by voice vote July 29 after accepting, also by voice vote, committee amendments clarifying definitions and stipulating that the Attorney General was not prevented from making the documents available to Senate or House Judiciary Committees. The Senate accepted, by a 61-27 roll-call vote, an amendment by Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) permitting an appeal to a Federal court to prevent or limit examination of secret processes, research or other privileged material either by the Committees or an antitrust agency. (For voting, see chart p. 429)

Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.), floor manager of the bill, said the amendment would make it impossible for committees to get "necessary information." He said the bill made ample provision to protect privileged material. Dirksen warned against the circulation of "trade secrets."

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, S 716:

Authorized the Attorney General to issue a civil investigative demand requiring any business to produce documentary material for examination in a civil antitrust investigation, but permitted a court appeal.

Exempted any document which would be privileged if subpenaed for a grand jury investigation.

Required the Attorney General to designate an antitrust investigator as document custodian, and authorized use of the documents before a court, grand jury or antitrust agency.

Stipulated that the material could not be examined without the owner's consent by any but authorized Justice Department or antitrust agency employees, provided that the Attorney General was not prevented from producing the material for examination by House and Senate Judiciary Committees.

Permitted court appeals against the examination of secret material by a Congressional committee or antitrust agency other than the Justice Department.

Authorized enforcement by court order when needed, and provided criminal penalties for obstruction.

1959 DEVELOPMENTS IN SPACE RACE

Two years after Russia launched the first earth satellite, Oct. 4, 1957, United States space policies still were in a state of flux, and scientific experts continued to warn that the Nation was failing to keep pace with the U.S.S.R. in this vital field. Meanwhile, Russia scored a new series of space achievements, culminating in its Sept. 14 announcement that it had hit the moon with a space rocket and its Oct. 4 announcement that a space satellite, Lunik III, had been launched successfully on a planned orbit beyond the moon.

Organizational Problems

Confusion over U.S. space programs stemmed in large part from a diffusion of responsibility for space functions and from the difficulty in distinguishing between military and non-military activities.

Each of the armed services engaged in satellite development in connection with military missile projects. In addition, after Russia's 1957 satellite launching, the Defense Department in February 1958 created the Advanced Research Projects Agency to take control of all major space projects and do long-term research in other areas. Most of ARPA's work was contracted to military and private agencies. ARPA subsequently was made subordinate to the Director of Defense Research and Engineering, a new post created by the Defense Reorganization Act of 1958. (1958 Almanac p. 133)

Also in 1958, Congress established a new civilian agency, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, to take over the functions of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics and to assume control over non-military aeronautical and space activities. (1958 Almanac p. 160)

An Oct. 1, 1958 executive order transferred from the Defense Department to NASA responsibility for non-military space projects such as lunar probes and scientific satellites which had been initiated by ARPA, as well as certain space-related projects of the Air Force -- principally in the field of "super-thrust" propulsion systems -- and the Navy's scientific satellite program, Project Vanguard.

VON BRAUN GROUP TRANSFERRED

Despite this realignment of functions, intergovernmental disputes over the space program continued. Many of them involved the Army Ballistic Missile Agency's team of rocket scientists headed by German-born Dr. Wernher von Braun, stationed at the Redstone Arsenal, Huntsville, Ala. The von Braun team had been responsible for the launching of the first U.S. satellite, Explorer I, Jan. 31, 1958 and had also engaged in other space activities which were viewed as "non-military" by the Administration. A year-long controversy over the fate of ABMA ended Oct. 21 with President Eisenhower's announcement that he would submit to Congress a plan calling for transfer of the von Braun team to NASA. He said the program of development of super-thrust vehicles, including the Army team's 1.5-million-pound-thrust Saturn, would be consolidated in NASA under the immediate direction of the Army team and would be "vigorously pressed forward." ABMA's military activities were to be retained by the Army Ordnance Missile Command.

Earlier, the Defense Department Sept. 23 announced a shift in programs to provide for gradual restoration to the individual military services of many space and missile projects. The announcement said ARPA would continue to be responsible for advanced research in such fields as missile defense, solid fuel propellants and materials. But it said programs that had reached engineering development phases would be turned over to the services. The Department said that eventually all responsibility for development, production and launching of military space boosters -- power plants for space vehicles -- would be given to the Air Force. Responsibility for payloads carried by space rockets and the ground equipment for the space program would be given to specific military services, it said.

1959 Activities

Although the military services retained many space-related functions, NASA was the focal point of "non-military" space projects in 1959. Like ARPA, NASA contracted out much of its work. Shortly after its establishment, NASA took over the Army's Jet Propulsion Laboratory and the Navy's Vanguard satellite program. It also assumed responsibility for most satellite launchings, including meteorological and communications satellites, the lunar probes and missile launchings being planned for Venus, Mars and other planets, and began developing its own space vehicles. The agency's most dramatic undertaking was Project Mercury, the man-in-space program.

VANGUARD WIND-UP -- Project Vanguard originally was a Navy program designed to put a satellite in orbit during the International Geophysical Year (July 1, 1957 - Dec. 31, 1958). Under Navy direction six vehicles were launched between Dec. 6, 1957 and June 26, 1958. Of these only one -- launched March 17, 1958, six weeks after the Army's Explorer I -- was successful. The Vanguard program was transferred first to ARPA, then to NASA. Under NASA auspices two Vanguards were launched successfully Feb. 17 and Sept. 17, 1959, winding up the Vanguard program.

PROJECT MERCURY -- This project was aimed at putting a man into orbit around the earth and bringing him back safely. During 1959 NASA placed a contract for the Mercury capsule, a man-carrying chamber to be substituted for a missile nose cone. It also began training seven "Astronauts" selected from 100 military test pilots who volunteered to participate in the program.

In a prelude to manned space flight, two monkeys, launched into space in a Jupiter missile developed by the Army's Huntsville team, were recovered alive May 28 after a 1,700-mile flight during which they reached an altitude of 300 miles.

LUNAR PROBES -- Under NASA sponsorship, both the Army and Air Force attempted lunar probes late in 1958 and in 1959. The most successful was the Army's Pioneer IV, launched March 3, 1959. The vehicle passed within 37,300 miles of the moon, then went into orbit around the sun. Another moon shot was unsuccessful Nov. 26, 1959.

SATELLITES -- Five U.S. earth satellites were launched successfully in 1958. The largest was the 8,700-pound Atlas-Score, launched Dec. 18, 1958, which carried a tape-recorded Christmas good will message from President Eisenhower that was broadcast to earth.

In 1959 eight more earth satellites had been sent into orbit by Nov. 1.

In addition, Pioneer IV, the 13.4-pound moon rocket launched March 3, went into orbit around the sun.

1959 Congressional Activities

U.S. space policies were under continuing scrutiny in Congress in 1959. A special unit of the Senate Aeronautical and Space Sciences Committee -- the Subcommittee on Governmental Organization for Space Activities, chaired by Stuart Symington (D Mo.) -- July 18 issued a unanimous report stating that U.S. space development efforts, both civilian and military, were handicapped by: Administration failure to develop a "comprehensive," long-range civilian-military space program; inadequate coordination of the work of NASA and the Defense Department's ARPA; and inadequate definition of the "various space roles and missions" of the three armed services. The Subcommittee said the division of responsibility between NASA and ARPA "did not require amendment at this time," despite the need for better liaison.

In the House, the Science and Astronautics Committee held hearings on various phases of the missile and satellite programs in 1959. It planned full-scale hearings in 1960 to try to determine, in the words of Chairman Overton Brooks (D La.), whether the U.S. must "continue to play second fiddle" in the space field.

SPACE FUNDS AUTHORIZED

S 1096 --	Reported by Senate Aeronautical and Space Sciences Committee March 5, 1959 (S Rept 82).
•	Passed by the Senate March 10, by a 91-0 roll-call vote. (See p. 401)
•	Reported, amended, by House Science and Astronautics Committee March 18 (H Rept 226).
•	Passed, amended, by voice vote of the House April 14.
•	Senate concurred in House amendment by voice vote April 15.

PL 86-45 --	Signed into law June 15.

Congress in 1959 authorized appropriations of $533,654,000 for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration in fiscal 1959 and 1960, exactly the amount requested by the Administration. Of the total authorization, $48,354,000 for fiscal 1959 was contained in S 1096, and $485,300,000 for fiscal 1960 was contained in HR 7007.

Actual appropriations under the combined authorization totaled $503,761,000 -- a cut of $29,892,700 below the requests. The bulk of the appropriations -- $500,575,000 for the two fiscal years -- was contained in the First Supplemental Appropriation Act for fiscal 1960. (See story p. 344) The remaining $3,186,300, to cover the cost of the Federal pay raise enacted in 1958, was contained in the Second Supplemental Appropriation Act for fiscal 1959. (See story p. 340)

Background

The National Aeronautics and Space Act of 1958 (PL 85-568) established a National Aeronautics and Space Administration as a civilian agency to direct the Nation's aeronautical and space activities, except for those which the President determined to be primarily associated with the national defense; the latter were placed under Defense Department jurisdiction. (1958 Almanac p. 160)

In the First Supplemental Appropriation Act for fiscal 1959, Congress appropriated $80 million for NASA but provided that no other appropriations could be made for the agency for any period before June 30, 1960 without prior authorization by Congress. (1958 Almanac p. 353)

In addition to this direct appropriation, NASA had available for fiscal 1959 $101.1 million previously appropriated to the defunct National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics and $154,619,532 in transfers from the Department of Defense.

Dr. T. Keith Glennan, NASA Administrator, Jan. 19, 1959 submitted to the Senate Aeronautical and Space Sciences Committee a draft authorization bill carrying $48,354,000 for fiscal 1959 and $485,300,000 for fiscal 1960. The Committee, however, decided the authorizations for the two years should be considered separately, and this was the course followed by Congress.

Fiscal 1959 Authorization (S 1096)

The final version of S 1096 authorized fiscal 1959 appropriations of $48,354,000 for NASA -- exactly the amount requested by the agency and carried in the original House and Senate bills. The Senate passed S 1096 March 10, by a 91-0 roll call. (For voting, see chart p. 401)

The House passed it by voice vote April 14, after accepting a committee amendment requiring NASA to notify the Congressional Space Committees if it planned to make use of its authority to divert construction funds to projects not specifically authorized by the bill. The Senate agreed to the House amendment by voice vote April 15.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, S 1096 authorized $48,354,000, broken down as follows:

$3,354,000 for salaries and expenses, intended to cover the cost of the Federal pay raise enacted by Congress in 1958. (1958 Almanac p. 212)

$20,750,000 for research and development, earmarked entirely for Project Mercury -- the program designed to put man into space. Of the total, $4 million was for design, engineering and construction of 12 satellite capsules; $16 million for four Redstone and four Atlas boosters for tests; $200,000 for data acquisition and handling; $500,000 for training equipment; and $50,000 for miscellaneous research and development.

$24,250,000 for construction and equipment, earmarked for three major items: $9 million for expansion of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory at Pasadena, Calif.;

$12,050,000 for nine new tracking stations and improved equipment; $3,200,000 for the development and testing of a new rocket engine capable of a 1-million-pound thrust.

The bill also:

Gave NASA emergency authority to divert up to $500,000 of the $24,250,000 construction and equipment authorization to other construction projects not specifically authorized in S 1096 but which might be necessary to pursue scientific breakthroughs.

Required NASA to notify the Senate Aeronautical and Space Sciences and the House Science and Astronautics Committees before using the emergency authority and barred its use for projects previously turned down by Congress.

Fiscal 1960 Authorization (HR 7007)

The final version of HR 7007 authorized $485,300,000 for fiscal 1960 -- exactly the amount requested by NASA.

As reported by the House Science and Astronautics Committee May 14 (H Rept 361) and passed by the House May 20, HR 7007 authorized $480,550,000. The House bill denied $4,750,000 requested for construction of a rocket propellant research center because NASA had been unable to decide on the location of a site. It also contained a provision requiring annual Congressional authorizations for NASA through fiscal 1965. The House considered the bill under suspension of the rules, a device prohibiting floor amendments and requiring a two-thirds vote for passage. It passed the bill by a 294-128 roll-call vote (282 "yeas" were required for passage). (For voting, see chart p. 360)

The Senate Aeronautical and Space Sciences Committee reported HR 7007 June 2 (S Rept 332) with three major amendments. It restored the $4,750,000 denied by the House for the rocket fuel research center after being told the location would be determined within three months. It also added a provision requiring NASA to notify the Senate and House Committees of plans for construction of any research and development project costing $250,000 or more and continued for an indefinite period the requirement for separate NASA authorization bills. The Senate passed the committee version of HR 7007 June 4, by an 81-1 roll-call vote, authorizing the full $485,300,000. (For voting, see chart p. 414)

The House June 8 accepted the Senate amendments by voice vote.

PROVISIONS -- As signed by the President, HR 7007 authorized the following appropriations:

Salaries and expenses	$ 94,430,000
Research and development	333,070,000
Construction and equipment	57,800,000
TOTAL	$485,300,000

HR 7007 also:

Required NASA to notify the Senate Aeronautical and Space Sciences and the House Science and Astronautics Committees of plans for construction of any research and development project costing $250,000 or more.

Gave the NASA administrator authority to use up to $5 million of construction and equipment funds for projects not specifically authorized by Congress, but required him to notify the Senate and House Space Committees of his intention to do so; barred use of the authority for projects previously denied by Congress.

Continued, for an indefinite period, the requirement for annual Congressional authorizations of NASA funds.

TVA REVENUE BONDS

HR 3460 -- Reported, amended, by House Public Works Committee April 14, 1959 (H Rept 271).

- Passed, amended, by the House May 7, by a 245-170 roll-call vote. (See p. 358)
- Reported, amended, by Senate Public Works Committee July 2 (S Rept 470).
- Passed, amended, by voice vote of the Senate July 9. (For roll-call vote on recommittal motion, see p. 425)
- House July 23 agreed to Senate amendments, by voice vote, through adoption of H Res 326. (For roll-call vote, see p. 378)

PL 86-137 -- Signed into law Aug. 6.

HR 3460 marked a victory in the Tennessee Valley Authority's four-year battle for the right to finance expansion of its power facilities by issuing revenue bonds. The bill limited to $750 million the value of bonds that could be outstanding at any one time and established a new schedule for repayment by TVA of funds previously appropriated by Congress. In an effort to placate opponents of public power, the bill also placed restrictions on expansion of the TVA service area. The $750 million bond limit was expected to be reached in approximately five years.

Main point of dispute in the 1959 debate was the question of budgetary controls over TVA construction projects financed by bond proceeds. As originally sent to the President, the bill directed that TVA's annual power construction program be sent to the President, who, in turn, would pass it along to Congress for consideration. The President could recommend changes, but any changes Congress made would be by concurrent resolution, not subject to Presidential veto. President Eisenhower signed the original bill only on the express understanding that this provision, which he termed "a clear invasion of the prerogatives of the Chief Executive," would be repealed. The repealer (S 2471) was enacted within a week, leaving TVA's power construction program at least technically free from both Congressional and Executive Branch control. However, TVA spokesmen said that as a practical matter the authority would submit its plans to the President and Congress anyway.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, HR 3460:

Authorized TVA to issue up to $750 million worth of bonds to finance the construction, acquisition, enlargement, improvement or replacement of facilities needed for the generation or transmission of electric power.

Specified that the principal and interest on the bonds would be secured solely by the sale of TVA power and that the bonds would not be obligations of or guaranteed by the U.S. Government.

Set a 50-year maturity on the bonds and authorized the TVA board to set all other terms.

Directed TVA to notify the Secretary of the Treasury at least 15 days before the sale of any bonds; if the Secretary did not approve the timing of the bond issue and the interest rates on the bonds within seven days, TVA could then sell up to $150 million worth of interim obligations to the Treasury at current terms; if no agreement on the bond issue had been reached in eight months, TVA could then go ahead with the issue without the Secretary's approval, using the proceeds to retire the interim obligations to the Treasury.

Provided for repayment by TVA of funds previously appropriated by Congress on the following basis: $10 million yearly for the first five fiscal years beginning in fiscal 1961, $15 million for each of the next five fiscal years and $20 million yearly after that until $1 billion had been repaid to the Treasury.

Required TVA to fix rates of power sales sufficient to cover all expenses plus an additional margin of profit to be determined by the TVA Board of Directors.

Limited any expansion of the area served by TVA on July 1, 1957 (about 80,000 square miles) to 2½ percent or 2,000 square miles, whichever was smaller, with the following specifications:

Expansion would not be permitted more than five miles beyond the boundaries of the 1957 area;

Power could not be sold, without specific Congressional authorization, to any city not currently served which had its own power distribution system on July 1, 1957 and a population of over 10,000 or to any other city with a population in excess of 5,000;

Expansion in any one state would be limited to 500 square miles and would be prohibited in any state not currently served by TVA;

Specific exemptions from the preceding conditions were made for the cities of Paducah, Princeton, Glascow, Fulton, Monticello and Hickman in Kentucky, Chicamauga and Ringgold in Georgia, Dyersburg, Covington, Oak Ridge and South Fulton in Tennessee and for the East Mississippi Electric Power Assn. in Mississippi.

CONTROL PROVISION

As originally signed into law, HR 3460 also contained this provision, which was subsequently repealed by enactment of S 2471:

Provided that the TVA board's power construction program would be submitted to Congress in the annual Federal budget, together with the President's recommendations, if any, and that Congress then would have 90 days to modify the TVA board's program by concurrent resolution; if Congress did not act within that time, the proposed construction could begin (the first power project was exempted from this requirement.)

Background

REFERENCE -- TVA Self-Financing (1957 Almanac p. 629).

TVA was established in 1933 "to improve the navigability and to provide for the flood control of the Tennessee River; to provide for reforestation and the proper use of marginal lands in the Tennessee Valley; to provide for the agricultural and industrial development of said valley; to provide for the national defense by the creation of a corporation for the operation of Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals in the state of Alabama and for other purposes." Throughout its existence, its power activities had been a subject of great public controversy.

By 1959, the TVA power system, comprising 47 hydroelectric plants and 15 steam plants, was the sole supplier of electric power over an 80,000-square-mile area including most of Tennessee and parts of six other states. Its largest customer, the Federal Government, used more than half of the power produced. TVA estimated in 1959 that its power needs were growing at a rate of about 12 percent a year; it anticipated a power shortage of about 600,000 kilowatts during the winter of 1961-62 and a shortage of 1,000,000 kilowatts by the following year.

Until 1953, TVA received direct Federal appropriations for construction of new power plants to help it keep pace with demand, but in subsequent years no money was appropriated for this purpose. From 1956 on, TVA used its power revenues to build new units at existing plants, but this expansion did not meet normal growth requirements.

REVENUE BOND PROPOSALS

President Eisenhower Jan. 17, 1955, in his fiscal 1956 Budget Message, disclosed that he had asked TVA to study ways to finance its expansion without using appropriations. The result was a request by the TVA board April 4, 1955 that it be permitted to issue revenue bonds. Shortly afterward -- on June 27, 1955 -- the Hoover Commission recommended that TVA be allowed to finance expansion through bond issues, "thus relieving the taxpayers of this burden."

In each of his subsequent Budget Messages Mr. Eisenhower asked Congress to authorize the TVA bond issues. In his fiscal 1960 message, Jan. 19, 1959, he said: "I again urge the Congress to take action early in this session to authorize the sale of revenue bonds by the Tennessee Valley Authority in order that the Authority may meet its needs for new generating facilities." As in previous messages, he said Congress should "retain budgetary control of the program."

PREVIOUS BILLS

Bills to permit TVA to issue revenue bonds were introduced in the 84th and 85th Congresses. In 1957 a bill based on proposals of TVA's three-man board was disapproved by the Bureau of the Budget and the Treasury Department.

On April 11, 1957, Robert E. Merriam, then Assistant Director of the Budget Bureau, wrote House Public Works Committee Chairman Charles A. Buckley (D N.Y.) that the bill in question was "inconsistent" with the President's program because it did not provide ample executive and legislative review, made no provision for repayment of the money already invested in TVA and did not limit the amount of the bond issue. A letter from W. Randolph Burgess, then Acting Secretary of the Treasury, listed the same objections and recommended that the whole program be directed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

In August 1957, the Senate passed a compromise measure (S 1869) embodying provisions nearly identical to those in HR 3460, the 1959 bill. The Senate bill was reported by the House Public Works Committee in 1958 but was held up in the Rules Committee and never reached the House floor. It met most of the Budget Bureau's objections to the earlier measure. (1958 Almanac p. 74)

House

COMMITTEE -- Public Works.

HEARINGS -- March 10-11 on self-financing proposals.

TESTIMONY -- Power companies and the National Assn. of Manufacturers opposed the bond proposal. The NAM called it a "grand design" to bypass the Congressional Appropriations Committees. Rep. Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa) said the plan would end any effective Congressional control of TVA.

G.A. Wessenauer, TVA power manager, said pending bills contained an "ironclad guarantee" that TVA power rates would be set high enough to repay not only the bonds issued but also the Government investment.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- March 3 -- Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) and House Minority Leader Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.), after a meeting with the President, said Mr. Eisenhower shared their view that TVA should be required to pay the "going rate of interest" and to repay the principal of the Government investment on an annual basis, that a limit should be placed on expansion of the TVA service area and that "adequate" control should be established on the issue of revenue bonds.

ACTION -- The Committee April 14 reported an amended version of HR 3460 (H Rept 271). The Committee approved the bill March 17 on a 19-14 vote after adopting an amendment limiting the expansion of facilities to the marketing area currently served by TVA -- about 80,000 square miles. Acting Chairman Clifford Davis (D Tenn.), sponsor of HR 3460 described the amendment as a compromise designed to make the bill more acceptable to opponents of public power.

Floor Action

The House May 7 passed HR 3460 by a 245-170 roll-call vote. A motion by Rep. Gordon H. Scherer (R Ohio) to recommit the bill and add to it language providing greater control by the Executive Branch and Congress was rejected by a 182-231 roll call. (For voting, see chart p. 358)

Scherer's proposals had been defeated previously when offered one by one as amendments to the bill. During the debate, which lasted two days, Republicans claimed the President would not sign the bill into law unless the self-financing program was subjected to annual budgetary review.

Democratic supporters of the legislation said it contained ample Congressional controls. They said the bill was needed if a power shortage was to be avoided in the TVA area by 1962.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 3460:

Authorized TVA to issue up to $750 million worth of bonds to finance the construction, acquisition, enlargement, improvement or replacement of facilities needed for the generation or transmission of electric power.

Specified that, except in cases of national emergency, TVA must notify the President and Congress before construction of a new power project was started; Congress would then have 90 days in which to adopt a resolution vetoing the project.

Limited TVA's service area to the boundaries in existence on July 1, 1957 (approximately 80,000 square miles).

Specified that the principal and interest on the bonds would be secured solely by the sale of TVA power, that the bonds would not be obligations of or guaranteed by the U.S. Government and would not add to the national debt.

Determined that the terms of the bond issues would be fixed by TVA, but that TVA must notify the Secretary of the Treasury before the sale of any bonds; the Secretary would then have 15 days in which to recommend changes in the terms of the sale but his recommendations would not be binding upon TVA.

Stipulated that the bonds would not be exempt from Federal income taxes.

Required TVA to return to the Treasury at least $10 million a year until it had repaid approximately $1.2 billion previously appropriated by Congress for TVA, and to pay interest on the Government's investment at the current average Treasury rate (about 3 percent).

Required TVA to fix rates of power sales sufficient to cover all expenses plus an additional margin of profit to be determined by the TVA Board.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Robert E. Jones (D Ala.) -- Insure that communities within the TVA service area engaged in law suits over power rights would still be eligible for TVA power; May 7. Voice vote.

Samuel S. Stratton (D N.Y.) -- Specify that TVA was not exempt from the Buy American Act; May 7. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Eugene Siler (R Ky.) -- Expand TVA service area to include Monticello, Ky.; May 7. Standing vote, 35-123.

Frank A. Stubblefield (D Ky.) -- Permit TVA to supply power to the Jackson Purchase Cooperative, comprising 11 Kentucky counties; May 7. Voice.

William C. Cramer (R Fla.) -- Require TVA to submit annual budgets for review by the Bureau of the Budget and Congress as specified in the Government Corporation Control Act of 1945; May 7. Teller vote, 129-170.

Cramer -- Delete a provision exempting TVA from including its receipts and expenditures in the Federal budget; May 7. Standing, 89-130.

John F. Baldwin Jr. (R Calif.) -- Require TVA to make its annual repayments to the Treasury before it paid interest to its bondholders; May 7. Voice.

Russell V. Mack (R Wash.) -- Require TVA to repay to the Treasury $20 million annually, instead of $10 million; May 7. Voice.

James C. Auchincloss (R N.J.) -- Require TVA to notify the Secretary of the Treasury at least 10 days before a bond sale and make the terms of the sale subject to the Secretary's approval; May 7. Voice.

Cramer -- Restore to the bill the provisions of the Government Corporation Control Act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to supervise the selection of depositories and the investment of TVA funds; May 7. Voice.

John H. Dent (D Pa.) -- Require that any power facility financed by the bonds be produced under U.S. labor and industry standards; May 7. Teller, 115-156.

Charles R. Jonas (R N.C.) -- Delete section excusing TVA from making annual payments to the Treasury in emergency conditions; May 7. Voice.

Jonas -- Specify that rates on the sale of power to a Government operation in the TVA area be no higher than the rates to any other customer; May 7. Voice.

BUDGET BUREAU CONTROL

DEBATE -- May 7 -- Cramer -- "My amendments are not Bureau of the Budget amendments; they are the people's amendments; they are the taxpayers' amendments.... Why should not a wholly owned Government corporation be subject to Government control? And Government control means Congressional control."

Frank E. Smith (D Miss.) -- "Despite all the smokescreen about Congressional control there is greater Congressional control in the bill offered by the Committee than in any amendment which will be offered. The amendments give control to the Bureau of the Budget and the Secretary of the Treasury."

Jones -- The first Cramer amendment requiring annual budgetary review "is the most vicious one that will be offered.... The position of the Bureau of the Budget has been one of hostility. It has stood in the way of orderly development of the electric energy needed to serve the people in that area as well as the defense plants."

Cramer -- "The bill in its present form, in my opinion, will not become law. I am sorry to see politics dominate these deliberations (because) a Presidential veto...is imminent."

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Public Works.

HEARINGS -- June 9-10 on HR 3460.

ACTION -- The Committee July 2 reported an amended version of HR 3460 (S Rept 470). The bill originally was reported June 23 (S Rept 426) but was recommitted for the addition of dissenting views.

The Committee amended the House-passed bill to permit TVA to increase its service area by 2½ percent or 2,000 square miles, whichever was smaller. The Committee also:

Deleted a House provision exempting the receipts and expenditures of bond proceeds from inclusion in the Federal budget.

Provided a temporary means of financing new power projects if the Secretary of the Treasury did not approve a bond issue: If the Secretary did not approve an issue within three days after he was notified, TVA could then sell up to $150 million in interim obligations to the Treasury at current terms; if no agreement on the disputed bond issue had been reached in eight months, TVA could then go ahead with the bond issue without the Secretary's approval, using the proceeds to retire the interim obligation to the Treasury.

Provided for repayment by TVA of funds previously appropriated by Congress on the following basis: $10 million yearly for the first five fiscal years after passage of the bill, $15 million for each of the next five fiscal years and $20 million yearly after that until $1 billion had been repaid to the Treasury.

Floor Action

The Senate July 9 passed HR 3460 by voice vote and returned it to the House. Passage was preceded by a lengthy debate which culminated in a motion by Norris Cotton (R N.H.) to send the bill back to the Public Works Committee. The Senate rejected the motion by a 17-53 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 425)

Much of the Senate controversy surrounding HR 3460 stemmed from the efforts of a group of Senators from states outside the TVA area to tighten a provision establishing geographical limitations on the territory served by low-cost TVA power. At the outset of debate the bill's floor manager, Sen. Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.), agreed to incorporate into the bill as a committee amendment a provision limiting expansion of the TVA service area to a five-mile strip around the periphery of the existing service area. The amendment, co-sponsored by Jennings Randolph (D W.Va.) and Herman E. Talmadge (D Ga.), also specified that TVA expansion in any one state could not exceed 500 square miles.

Objection was registered by Senators from states partially within the TVA transmission area. The opposition was led by John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.), who offered an amendment to replace the Talmadge-Randolph proposal with the milder language initially approved by the Public Works Committee. He said that by adopting the tighter restrictions on expansion, the Senate would render ineffectual the "yardstick" TVA had provided for measuring power rates and that private utility companies near the TVA area would be able to exert monopolistic powers over their customers.

Kerr, despite his "complete agreement" with the Cooper amendment, successfully urged the Senate to vote it down. "It is my conviction," he said, "that if the bill is to be passed by the Congress (so) that it will have a substantial chance of approval by the President, it must contain the language of the Talmadge-Randolph amendment."

An amendment offered by Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) and rejected by voice vote would have given TVA construction projects cleared by the Budget Bureau and recommended by the President priority over projects recommended by TVA's Board of Directors.

PRESIDENT'S COMMENT

The President, asked at his press conference July 15 for his opinion of the bill, said it had two "serious defects" -- failure to include "a proper restriction on the expansion" of TVA and to provide for financing "through the budgetary process."

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, HR 3460 was identical to the final version of the bill, including the Congressional control provision which later was repealed.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Francis Case (R S.D.) -- Increase from 10 to 15 days the time of notice to the Secretary of Treasury before the sale of bonds and from three to seven days the period during which the Secretary may approve the issue; July 9. Voice.

John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.) -- Add to the list of communities outside the TVA service area but still eligible to receive TVA power the city of Hickman, Ky.; July 9. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Cooper -- Delete from the territorial limitation provision the specification restricting expansion of the TVA service area to a five-mile periphery; July 9. Voice.

Robert C. Byrd (D W.Va.) -- Require Congressional approval of TVA's construction program before a new power project could be begun; July 9. Voice.

Dirksen -- Provide that the President's budget recommendations on TVA power construction (instead of the TVA board's proposals) would be deemed approved if Congress did not modify them within 90 days; July 9. Voice.

DEBATE -- July 9 -- Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) -- "The purpose of the (Dirksen) amendment is to transfer from the (TVA) Corporation to the President the power to make recommendations on which Congress shall act, if it sees fit to do so."

Dirksen -- Urged adoption of his amendment because "in a free government the best philosophy that can be followed is first to make it as hard as possible for the bureau heads and others to get money out of the Federal Treasury and, when they get it, to make it as difficult to spend as possible...."

Cooper -- The effect of Dirksen's amendment "would be to have the Congress pass on every facility to be constructed during the next five years.... It would place the Bureau of the Budget and the Congress in the business of managing TVA."

Francis Case (R S.D.) -- The bill will "recapture for the Congress some powers over the TVA which it does not have today."

Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) -- The limitation on expansion of TVA "is a more than reasonable concession to private power interests who have expressed an unfounded fear that TVA would put them out of business."

Wallace F. Bennett (R Utah) -- The bill gives the TVA area "the customary preferred treatment...denied to the rest of the United States."

Final Action

HR 3460 was cleared for the President's signature July 23 when the House, after overcoming GOP objections, adopted by voice vote a resolution (H Res 326) providing for acceptance of the Senate amendments. An earlier effort to agree to the Senate amendments by unanimous consent was blocked July 14 by an objection from Minority Leader Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.). At the request of HR 3460's supporters, the House Rules Committee reported H Res 326 July 22.

During the July 23 debate, Republicans objected to the procedure being followed, arguing that HR 3460 should be sent to a Senate-House conference committee. Under conference procedure, they said, a motion could be made to recommit the bill with instructions to add the budgetary control provisions sought by the Administration. As the resolution was reported, however, the only way the Republicans could alter the Senate version was to amend H Res 326 before it came to a final vote. Efforts to amend it were cut off when the House, by a 244-166 roll call, ordered the previous question, bringing the resolution to an immediate vote. (For voting, see chart p. 378)

BILL SIGNED

President Eisenhower Aug. 6 signed HR 3460 into law (PL 86-137). He said he had signed the bill only after being assured by Congressional leaders that the disputed control provision, which he termed "wholly unacceptable," would be repealed promptly.

The President said the provision "attempts to divorce TVA's construction program of new power-producing projects from executive review and allows the Congress to modify the Authority's program without regard to the views of the President and without opportunity for the President to exercise his constitutional role in the legislative process."

CONTROL PROVISION REPEALED

Only minutes after the President signed HR 3460 Aug. 6, the Senate passed and sent to the House a bill (S 2471) to repeal the controversial control provision to which Mr. Eisenhower objected. The House passed the bill Aug. 11, and President Eisenhower signed it Aug. 14 (PL 86-157).

Earlier, in view of the President's apparent unwillingness to sign HR 3460 as it was cleared by Congress, Senate supporters of TVA had tried to repeal the disputed provision before it reached the President's desk. S 2471 was reported by the Senate Public Works Committee Aug. 4 (S Rept 607), but when it came to the Senate floor later the same day it was blocked by a technicality. The Senate parliamentarian held that under Senate rules a bill could not be amended after it had been cleared by Congress and before it had been signed into law. Senate Democrats then secured a unanimous consent agreement assuring quick action on S 2471 and Congressional leaders of both parties notified the President that if he signed HR 3460, Congress would immediately enact S 2471.

Effect of Legislation

Despite enactment of HR 3460 and S 2471, some confusion remained over the degree of independence from executive and legislative control which TVA would enjoy. However, legal experts in the White House, TVA and the American Public Power Assn. agreed that under the new legislation neither the President nor Congress has the power to tell TVA how to spend its bond money, except by enactment of a new law.

As a practical matter, they said, TVA would submit its power construction plans to the President and Congress but would not be bound to follow their suggestions as long as no appropriated money was involved.

A TVA spokesman cautioned: "You can hardly overemphasize the power of the President. As President, he certainly has a lot to say over what TVA shall do whether it is spelled out in the law or not." (The President appoints the three-member TVA board, subject to Senate confirmation.)

Nonetheless, the new legislation at least technically freed TVA's bond-financed power construction program from outside control. As finally enacted, it not only dropped the provision for Congressional control to which President Eisenhower objected, but it also affected these other laws:

- GOVERNMENT CORPORATION CONTROL ACT -- This sets forth the rules Government corporations like TVA must obey. Section 104 states the Act "shall not be construed as preventing Government corporations from carrying out and financing their activities as authorized by existing law, nor as affecting the provisions of Section 26 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act" under which TVA is authorized to use its revenues for power facilities. The Democratic majority of the House Public Works Committee in its report (H Rept 271) on HR 3460 said Section 26 exempted TVA's bond proceeds from the Government Corporation Control Act. The majority said Congress would have to pass "substantive legislation" to gain control over the bond revenues. "The annual budget presentation and appropriation committee review (of other phases of TVA's operation), however," the majority said, "bring to the attention of Congress any actions of a corporation which may call for such substantive legislation." The TVA Board in a letter to President Eisenhower on HR 3460 agreed that bond proceeds were not subject to the Control Act.
- GOVERNMENT CORPORATIONS APPROPRIATION ACT -- HR 3460 repealed a section of the Government Corporations Appropriation Act for fiscal 1948 forbidding TVA from using its power revenues to build new plants without Congressional approval.
- TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY ACT -- HR 3460 added a section which said in part that "the issuance and sale of bonds by the corporation and the expenditure of bond proceeds for the purposes specified herein, including the addition of generating units to existing power-producing projects, shall not be subject to the requirements or limitations of any other law...."

SAN LUIS PROJECT

S 44 -- Reported, amended, by Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee (S Rept 154) April 8, 1959.

● Passed by the Senate, amended, by voice vote, May 12.

HR 7155 -- Reported by House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee (H Rept 399) May 27.

The Senate in 1959 passed a bill authorizing Federal construction of the San Luis irrigation unit as part of the Central Valley project in California. The $290 million dam and reservoir would be built under a partnership agreement with the state of California, which would use part of the impounded water for its proposed Feather River project. A similar bill was passed by the Senate in 1958. (1958 Almanac p. 74)

The Senate passed S 44 by voice vote May 12, after rejecting, by a 24-57 roll-call vote, a recommittal motion by John J. Williams (R Del.), who opposed increasing farm land production. (For voting, see chart p. 410)

The Senate adopted two amendments to the bill reported by its Interior and Insular Affairs Committee April 8 (S Rept 154). One, offered by Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) and adopted by voice vote May 7, prohibited use of water from the Federal unit on newly irrigated lands for the production of surplus price-supported crops.

The other, offered by Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) and adopted by a standing vote May 12, struck from the committee bill a section that would have exempted landowners who received water from the state's share of the San Luis project from the historic 160-acre limitation of Federal reclamation law. Douglas said the exemption would perpetuate a "system of big landed estates" and benefit 120,000 acres of land held by "the Southern Pacific Railway, which has dominated politics in the state of California for many years."

The bill's sponsors, Thomas H. Kuchel (R Calif.) and Clair Engle (D Calif.), denied Douglas' charges and said the Federal Government had no right to impose its reclamation law upon a "wholly divisible" project paid for by California's taxpayers. Wayne Morse (D Ore.) said the courts, not the Senate, should decide to what extent Federal laws applied.

S 44 was not acted on by the House in 1959, but the House Interior Committee May 27 reported a companion bill (HR 7155 -- H Rept 399) which included a specific state exemption from Federal reclamation laws.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, S 44:

Authorized the Interior Department to construct and maintain the San Luis dam and reservoir under a cost-sharing agreement with the state of California and under Federal reclamation laws.

Set Jan. 1, 1962 as the final date for negotiating an agreement with California, after which an entirely Federal project could be built, 90 days after notice to Congress.

Authorized $290,430,000 for construction of the San Luis unit, plus necessary funds for distribution systems and drains that local interests did not build (at an estimated cost of $192,650,000) and for operation and maintenance.

Prohibited production of surplus price-supported crops on newly irrigated lands serviced by the Federal project.

TRINITY RIVER PROJECT

A four-year battle over public vs. private power in the Trinity River water project in California appeared ended in 1959 when a House subcommittee tabled legislation to authorize the Federal Government to enter into a "partnership" agreement with a private firm for construction of power plants at the site. Subsequently Congress appropriated $2,354,625 to begin Federal development of Trinity River power.

The Trinity project was first authorized in 1955, when Congress enacted a bill (PL 84-386) authorizing $225 million for Federal development, including irrigation and reclamation activities as well as power generation. The law, however, directed the Secretary of Interior to investigate and report to Congress on the possibility of contracting with a private company for construction and operation of the power facilities. During Congressional hearings in 1955, the Pacific Gas and Electric Co. of California proposed a partnership agreement with the Federal Government under which PG&E would build the power units and pay $3.5 million annually for the use of falling water. (1955 Almanac p. 446)

Interior Secretary Fred A. Seaton early in 1957 endorsed a revised PG&E proposal to build and maintain three plants at a cost of $60 million, with annual payments to the Government of $4.6 million over a 50-year period for use of falling water. Seaton later revised the plan, increasing estimated costs to preference customers, including Federal installations, by $29 million, and recommended the agreement. He held it would bring budgetary savings that could be diverted to other needed reclamation work.

The partnership plan was backed by California Chambers of Commerce and the state's Farm Bureau. Opponents included rural electric cooperatives, water and power users groups and the National Farmers Union. They held that partnership would bring higher rates and reverse the basic concept of reclamation and public preference laws.

In 1958, more hearings were held, but shortly before adjournment 17 members of the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee asked Seaton to delay the project pending further study by Congress.

In 1959, after two days of hearings, the House Interior Committee's Irrigation and Reclamation Subcommittee Aug. 11 voted 13-9 to table two bills (HR 5499, 5521) to authorize the partnership. The next day Senate-House conferees considering the first public works appropriation bill (HR 7509) agreed to include $2,415,000 to begin Federal development of Trinity power.

Although President Eisenhower vetoed HR 7509 because it included unbudgeted "new starts" in construction, he singled out the Trinity River project in his Aug. 28 veto message as one project that should go ahead. He said if Congress "continues its refusal...to save $60 million of taxpayers' money through providing for construction...by non-Federal interests," any revised bill should include funds for Federal development, "since the dam is now being built and it is essential that power facilities be in place when the reservoir is full."

The revised public works bill (HR 9105), passed over a second veto, carried the Trinity River funds, cut by 2½ percent as part of an across-the-board cut in all public works funds. (See story p. 315)

WATER POLLUTION

HR 3610 --
- Reported by House Public Works Committee (H Rept 294) April 23, 1959.
- Passed by a 255-143 roll-call vote of the House June 9. (See p. 364)
- Reported, amended, by Senate Public Works Committee (S Rept 835) Aug. 28.
- Passed, with amendments, by a 61-27 roll-call vote of the Senate Sept. 9. (See p. 444)

The House and Senate in 1959 passed different versions of a bill (HR 3610) to increase Federal grants to communities for sewage plant construction. The bill's supporters, faced with a probable pocket veto if the measure went to the White House in the last days of the session, postponed final action until 1960.

The House version of HR 3610 doubled the size of the annual program to $100 million a year for 10 years. The Senate version authorized $80 million annually. President Eisenhower sought gradual Federal withdrawal from the program.

Background

REFERENCE -- Water Pollution (1956 Almanac p. 570)

Congress in 1956 amended the 1948 Water Pollution Control Act by authorizing capital grants to help communities build sewage plants. The grants were $50 million a year for 10 years, although Chairman John A. Blatnik (D Minn.) of the House Public Works Rivers and Harbors Subcommittee pressed for twice that amount. The Federal Government paid up to 30 percent of the cost of a sewage plant.

President Eisenhower in his January 1959 Budget Message said that in fiscal 1960 the Federal grants should be reduced to $20 million ($45 million was appropriated in fiscal 1959). He said after fiscal 1960 the states should take over the program with the help of telephone-user taxes which he said Congress should let the Federal Government relinquish. Blatnik, however, with the support of such city pressure groups as the American Municipal Assn. and U.S. Conference of Mayors, pressed anew for his original $100 million-a-year program.

House

COMMITTEE -- Public Works.

ACTION -- April 23 reported a bill (HR 3610 -- H Rept 294) to increase Federal aid to communities building sewage treatment plants. The bill doubled the existing annual authorization to $100 million a year for 10 years. It also raised the Federal cost ceiling of an individual project from $250,000 to $500,000, or 30 percent of the cost, whichever figure was smaller.

In a minority report, 11 Republican members of the Committee said they would offer floor amendments to provide for state matching of Federal grants.

Floor Action

The House June 9 passed HR 3610 on a 255-143 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 364)

Rep. William C. Cramer (R Fla.) spearheaded an attempt to amend the bill. His amendment would have required state legislatures, starting in fiscal 1963, to make a contribution to each of the Federally aided projects. The amendment, opposed as an attempt to kill the whole program, failed on a 60-130 standing vote. Cramer then tried to recommit the bill, with instructions to add the amendment, but that motion failed on a 156-240 roll-call vote.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 3610:

Authorized appropriations of $100 million a year for 10 years to help communities build sewage treatment plants.

Raised the maximum Federal share of a plant's cost to 30 percent or $500,000, whichever was smaller.

Specified that no grant of more than $250,000 could be made for a project in any state until all other applications for $250,000 or less within the state had been approved.

Authorized several communities to pool their ceiling limitations and join together to build a sewage plant.

Authorized the Surgeon General to reallocate a state's unused Federal money to other states.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

William C. Cramer (R Fla.) -- Require the states, starting in fiscal 1963, to match Federal grants to community sewage plants dollar for dollar, and limit each Federal grant to 25 percent of the project's cost; June 4. Standing vote, 60-130.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Public Works.

ACTION -- Aug. 28 reported an amended version of HR 3610 (S Rept 835) authorizing $80 million a year for 10 years. The Aug. 28 action reversed an Aug. 11 Committee vote authorizing $60 million a year for 10 years.

Floor Action

The Senate Sept. 9 passed HR 3610 on a 61-27 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 444)

The Senate-passed bill differed from the House version in two major respects: It authorized annual grants of $80 million, rather than $100 million, for 10 years, and it limited the Federal contribution to a single project to 30 percent or $400,000, whichever was less, rather than 30 percent or $500,000 as in the House bill.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Pat McNamara (D Mich.) -- Direct the Surgeon General to require contractors on Federally aided sewage plant projects to pay prevailing wages in accordance with the Davis-Bacon Act; Sept. 9. Voice vote.

Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.) -- Remove the proposed $500,000 maximum Federal contribution on projects where several communities pool their entitlements; Sept. 9. Voice.

Winston L. Prouty (R Vt.) -- Give the states six months beyond the close of a fiscal year to use up the Federal grant money allocated to them for that year; Sept. 9. Voice.

Air Pollution

President Eisenhower Sept. 22 signed a bill (HR 7476 -- PL 86-365) extending the Federal Air Pollution Control Act of 1955 for four years, through June 30, 1964, and continuing its annual authorization at $5 million. As passed by the House Sept. 1, HR 7476 extended the act for two years at $5 million; the Senate version, passed Sept. 9, extended it for four years at $7.5 million. Both chambers Sept. 14 agreed to a conference report providing the four-year, $5-million extension.

AEC AUTHORIZATION

S 2094 -- Reported by Joint Atomic Energy Committee June 11, 1959 (S Rept 386).
• Passed by the Senate and by the House by voice votes June 15.
PL 86-50 -- Signed into law June 23.

S 2094, the Atomic Energy Commission's annual construction authorization measure, authorized fiscal 1960 appropriations of $165.4 million for new AEC facilities, and another $55.5 million for AEC's civilian power reactor demonstration program. Funds for these and other previously authorized projects, as well as for AEC operating expenses, were provided subsequently in a $2.7 billion appropriation bill. (See p. 340)

Passage of S 2094 marked a lull in the long-standing controversy between the Democratic majority on the Joint Atomic Energy Committee and the Administration over the pace and scope of nuclear power development in the United States. Some of the heat generated by the dispute was dissipated when, in mid-1958, Lewis L. Strauss was replaced as chairman of the AEC by John A. McCone. But the commission continued to find itself in a tug-of-war between the economy-minded Bureau of the Budget and the expansionist-minded Joint Committee. S 2094 was a compromise measure, authorizing more than the President desired but less than Democrats wanted. By common agreement, the more controversial points at issue were put off until 1960.

PROVISIONS -- As enacted, S 2094:

Authorized $165.4 million for construction of AEC military and research facilities, including these sums above budget requests: $5 million for stepping up power of the Shippingport, Pa., reactor, $11 million for construction of an advanced power reactor using nuclear superheat, $18.5 million for an improved submarine reactor, $4.4 million for two physical research facilities, and $1 million for biomedical research.

Authorized $55.5 million for the civilian power reactor demonstration program, and set a ceiling of $10 million on the value of fuel charges that can be waived.

Authorized $7 million for research and development assistance to Euratom.

Extended for five years, until Sept. 1, 1964, the compulsory licensing provisions of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, covering the leasing of privately held patents.

Background

REFERENCE -- AEC Construction Funds (1958 Almanac p. 313); Atomic Construction (1957 Almanac p. 583); Atomic Energy Reactors (1956 Almanac p. 542); Expansion of Atomic Energy Program (1954 Almanac p. 534).

In August 1958, the Joint Committee issued its "Proposed Expanded Civilian Nuclear Power Program" calling for achievement of competitive nuclear power in the United States by 1970, and in high-cost free world nations by 1968, at an estimated additional cost of $875 million over a five-to-seven-year period. AEC was to provide "positive leadership" by assuming responsibility for building and operating prototype reactors and, in the event that private industry failed to do so within a reasonable time, for building full-scale demonstration reactors.

AEC Chairman McCone accepted the Committee's goals in testimony Feb. 17, 1959, but left to private industry the responsibility for building prototype power plants. To that end he proposed that, for the first time, the Government offer construction subsidies of up to 50 percent of the costs, in addition to established forms of research and development assistance. He requested a $115 million authorization for fiscal 1960 -- the pared-down amount approved by the Budget Bureau after the AEC requested $186 million.

Joint Committee Democrats reacted sharply. Rep. Chet Holifield (D Calif.) called the request "pitifully small." Sen. Albert Gore (D Tenn.) said it was "timid." Chairman Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) said, "At the present time, AEC appears to be on dead center in its atomic power program." On Feb. 27 McCone modified AEC's request in some particulars, but asked for no more money.

Committee Bill

The Joint Committee June 2 unanimously approved clean bills (S 2094, HR 7537) authorizing the amounts shown above under "Provisions." The Committee reduced by $21 million an authorization of $51 million voted in 1958 for a gas-cooled reactor, to comply with a change in AEC plans. The Committee also cut in half AEC's $14 million request for Euratom, because of slower-than-anticipated progress.

In its report (S Rept 386) filed June 11, the Committee noted that there was "general agreement" on the objectives of the civilian power program and stated that "some progress" had been achieved in reaching agreement on means. "Questions which remain unresolved," the report stated, "include that of the pace and level of support of the program, and the nature and extent of financial support of private reactor prototypes in the demonstration program." The Committee put off until 1960 action on AEC's request for authority to offer construction subsidies to private builders, and on a May 27 request for authority to build a $110 million, two-mile-long, linear accelerator.

The Senate and the House June 15 passed S 2094 as reported, by voice votes and after brief debate.

OTHER NUCLEAR PROJECTS

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- After a hearing July 23 by its Research and Development Subcommittee on progress of the nuclear aircraft program, the Joint Committee Sept. 23 issued a report criticizing the "lack of concrete objectives and target dates either for a ground test prototype propulsion system or for early flight." The report said it was "in the national interest to achieve nuclear flight as early as possible, not only to meet stated military requirements, but also to provide a boost to world confidence in America's scientific capabilities."

The House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee Aug. 27 reported a bill (HR 4 -- H Rept 1057) authorizing $500,000 for a study of the feasibility of constructing a nuclear-powered icebreaker. Congress in 1958 approved actual construction of such a vessel, but President Eisenhower vetoed the bill. (1958 Almanac p. 252) The House did not act on HR 4 before adjournment, and the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee Sept. 1 voted to defer action until 1960 on another bill (S 2577) that would authorize construction of an icebreaker.

DRAFT EXTENSION

HR 2260 -- Reported by House Armed Services Committee (H Rept 27) Feb. 2,1959.
- Passed by the House on a 381-20 roll-call vote Feb. 5. (See p. 348)
- Reported by Senate Armed Services Committee (S Rept 96) amended, March 9.
- Passed by the Senate, amended, on a 90-1 roll-call vote March 11. (See p. 401)
- House agreed to Senate amendment by voice vote March 12.

PL 86-4 -- Signed into law March 23.

Congress in 1959 extended the draft for four years, until July 1, 1963. In doing so, it rejected suggestions that the whole military personnel program be reviewed, modified and improved.

The extension was requested by the Administration on the grounds that it was needed to maintain the military manpower level at 2.5 million men. Opponents criticized the extension as unfair to young men of draft age, since all were not drafted, and as a poor method for providing the kind of highly skilled men needed in the modern army.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, HR 2260:

Extended until July 1, 1963: the induction provisions of the Universal Military Training and Service Act and the Dependents Assistance Act of 1950; provisions suspending strengths of the armed forces; and, authority to draft physicians, dentists and allied specialists.

Authorized special pay for physicians, dentists and veterinarians entering active duty after July 1, 1959.

Background

Except for a 17-month period between March 1947 and June 1948, the United States has had a draft law continuously since 1940, when the Selective Service Act became law. This was superseded by the Selective Service Act of 1948 and later by the Universal Military Training and Service Act of 1951.

At the beginning of 1959, the monthly draft call was 9,000 men, while those eligible for the draft totaled about 2.2 million. President Eisenhower asked for a four-year extension of the draft in his Jan. 19 Budget Message.

House

COMMITTEE -- Armed Services.

HEARINGS -- Jan. 26-30 on HR 2260, to extend the Selective Service induction authority, which was due to expire June 30, 1959.

TESTIMONY -- Jan. 26 -- Asst. Secretary of Defense Charles C. Finucane supported the Administration's request for a four-year extension of the draft, saying that although only the Army used it, the authority was needed to keep up voluntary enlistments in all of the services. Without the draft, he said, the armed services would fall 700,000 short of the 2.5 million men needed.

Spokesmen for the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S. urged no more than a two-year extension, together with an amendment reducing the maximum age for induction from 26 to 20 or 21. But Committee Chairman Carl Vinson (D Ga.) said he thought "we have no choice" but to approve the four-year extension.

Jan. 27 -- Testifying in support of the Administration's bill (HR 2260) were Army Chief of Staff Maxwell D. Taylor; Admiral James S. Russell, Vice Chief of Naval Operations; Gen. Randolph McC. Pate, Marine Corps Commandant; and Gen. Curtis LeMay, Air Force Vice Chief of Staff. All acknowledged that their services would like to have more manpower; all, however, refused to criticize the cutbacks ordered by the Administration, or to affirm the charge by Rep. F. Edward Hebert (D La.) that they were testifying under a "gag" imposed by the Secretary of Defense.

Jan. 28 -- Lt. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, Selective Service Director, said that some form of "compulsion" was needed to build up the Nation's civil defense capabilities, and suggested that men excused from the draft for physical or mental reasons, "80 percent of whom are making a living," could be channelled into civil defense work. Rep. Leonard G. Wolf (D Iowa) proposed a two-year extension. Rep. William H. Meyer (D Vt.) said continuance of the draft would result in "too much militarism."

ACTION -- The Committee Feb. 2 reported HR 2260 (H Rept 27) after voting Jan. 30, 34-1, for the four-year extension. Rep. Arthur Winstead (D Miss.) voted "nay."

The report said it was "manifestly clear" the draft was "indispensable to our security." It noted criticism that chances of being drafted were so slim that the age of liability should be reduced but said such chances were "substantially greater than some would have us believe." It gave statistics showing that of the 1,100,000 men aged 26 on June 30, 1959, 70 percent had entered military service, and estimated that by 1963, 55 percent of those becoming 26 would already have been in the service.

The "most significant point" in respect to the current age spread of 19 to 26, the report said, was the fact that 50 percent of the inductees volunteer and, "for practical purposes, select the period of time when they wish to fulfill their military obligation."

Floor Action

The House Feb. 5, by a 381-20 roll-call vote, passed HR 2260. (For voting, see chart p. 348) The House rejected by voice votes an amendment to limit the extension to two years and a recommittal motion by Rep. Noah M. Mason (R Ill.).

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Arthur Winstead (D Miss.) -- Provide that no draftee "shall be compelled to bear arms" against U.S. citizens except in a national emergency declared by Congress; Feb. 5. Standing vote, 42-135. (The amendment was designed to prevent the President from sending Federal troops to uphold court orders on school desegregation, as he had in Little Rock, Ark.)

Leonard G. Wolf (D Iowa) -- Extend provisions of HR 2260 to July 1, 1961, instead of 1963; Feb. 5. Voice.

DEBATE -- Feb. 5 -- In opposing efforts to limit the draft to two years Democratic and Republican leaders said it might give a misleading impression abroad. Armed Services Committee Chairman Carl Vinson (D Ga.) promised a study of deficiencies in the draft law.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Armed Services.

HEARINGS -- March 3-5 on HR 2260.

Defense Secretary Neil H. McElroy filed with the Committee a statement saying "our military posture would be dangerously weakened" if the draft law was not extended. The extension also was urged by other officials.

Maj. Gen. William H. Harrison Jr., president of the National Guard Assn., in March 4 testimony said Congress should revise a section of the law which automatically places men in the ready reserve training program after two or more years in the active reserve. He suggested that it be made a voluntary program and advocated a sharp increase in the number of volunteers accepted for six-month military training camps.

ACTION -- The Committee March 9 reported HR 2260 (S Rept 96) with an amendment to continue special pay provisions for medical men entering active duty. Chairman Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) said the current Berlin crisis led the Committee to defer action on proposed amendments to correct what he termed "injustices and inequalities" in the reservist program. The report said, "International conditions today are such that it would be foolhardy not to continue the authority to induct."

Floor Action

The Senate March 11 passed HR 2260, with the committee amendment, by a 90-1 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 401)

Senate passage followed defeat, by a 24-67 roll-call vote, of an amendment to limit the extension to two years and rejection, on a 24-68 roll call, of an amendment which would have set up a special commission to study military programs and alternatives to the draft. The single dissenting vote on passage was cast by William Langer (R N.D.).

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Wayne Morse (D Ore.) -- Limit draft extension to July 1, 1961, instead of 1963; March 11. Roll-call vote, 24-67.

Francis Case (R S.D.), as modified by Morse -- Add a new section, to provide for establishment of a Commission on Military Manpower to study and report by Jan. 31, 1961, on current training programs and alternatives to the draft; March 11. Roll call, 24-68.

DEBATE -- March 10 -- Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) -- Any law which was compulsory "as regards young men" could not "be entirely fair to all of them," but HR 2260 was "the best we can do...so long as selective service was required."

Morse -- The manpower needed was the kind highly skilled and trained in complex, modern warfare, and the draft "has been a military manpower expediency crutch on which the country has been leaning for too long a time."

March 11 -- Russell -- There was more involved in the draft than its mere extension, and if the bill was not enacted, U.S. military strength would be reduced by about 500,000 after July 1.

Case -- Anyone with legislative experience knew "that once the draft was extended the pressure would be off for review, examination, modification and improvement."

FINAL ACTION

The House March 12 approved by voice vote the Senate amendment to HR 2260, sending the measure to the White House. The President March 23 signed the bill into law (PL 86-4), thereby extending the draft until July 1, 1963.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- A four-year extension of the military reserve program, approved by Congress, was signed by the President July 17 (HR 3368 -- PL 86-96).

The reserve training program became law in 1955 as an amendment to the Armed Forces Reserve Act of 1952 and was due to expire Aug. 1, 1959. (1955 Almanac p. 334) The law permits men between 17 and 18½ to enlist for six months of active military service and a total of eight years in the active reserve program. Satisfactory participants are exempted from the regular draft program.

The House Armed Services Committee reported HR 3368 (H Rept 84) Feb. 26 and the measure passed the House March 13. The Senate Armed Services Committee reported HR 3368 (S Rept 438) June 29 and the bill was passed by voice vote July 6.

LAKE MICHIGAN WATER

HR 1 --
- Reported, amended, by House Public Works Committee (H Rept 191) March 9, 1959.
- Passed, amended, by the House, on a 238-142 roll-call vote, March 13. (See p. 352)
- Referred to the Senate Public Works Committee by a 49-21 roll-call vote of the Senate March 18. (See p. 402)
- Reported, with amendments, by the Senate Public Works Committee Aug. 25. (S Rept 808).
- Referred to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee by a 54-34 roll-call vote of the Senate Sept. 2. (See p. 439)

The Senate in 1959 skirted the hotly debated issue of permitting Chicago to divert additional Lake Michigan water into the Illinois Waterway in an effort to solve the city's sewage problems. HR 1 was passed by the House in March, but when it reached the Senate a dispute arose over which committee should consider it. On a roll call the bill was referred to the Public Works Committee, which reported it in August. On Sept. 2, after seven days of debate, the Senate sent it to the Foreign Relations Committee for further consideration.

As in previous years, the legislation was opposed by Canada and Senators from states bordering on the Great Lakes on the grounds that it would create a hazard to shipping in the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence Seaway.

Earlier Canadian protests were a major reason for vetoes of similar bills in 1954 and 1956.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 1:

Authorized a three-year study and evaluation of diversion of Lake Michigan water into the Illinois Waterway, Chicago's sanitary canal system, under supervision and direction of the Secretary of the Army.

Authorized the state of Illinois and Metropolitan Sanitary District of Greater Chicago to divert, for a one-year period, an additional 1,000 cubic feet per second of Lake Michigan water. (The annual authorized diversion currently is 1,500 cubic feet per second.)

Stipulated that the diversion begin one and one-half years after funds were made available for the project, with studies on the diversion's effects on the Great Lakes and their connecting waterways to precede and follow the diversion.

Insured regulation of the diversion to maintain a uniform water flow at Pekin, Ill.

Directed correlation of findings by the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare and Army Secretary, to be followed by a report to Congress.

Background

The backbone of Chicago's sewage disposal systems is a network of canals and rivers carrying waste into the Mississippi River. The city accomplished this flow away from Lake Michigan and toward the Gulf of Mexico by reversing the direction of the Chicago River, which originally flowed north into Lake Michigan. Now city waste goes into the Chicago River, flows south through the Sanitary and Ship Canal into the Des Plaines River, then the Illinois River, the Mississippi and, finally, the Gulf of Mexico. Barges and other vessels use this Illinois Waterway.

Most of the city's waste goes through a $425-million system of treatment plants before being dumped into the waterway. However, some waste goes into the waterway untreated. The Metropolitan Sanitary District of Greater Chicago, an independent agency, takes relatively clean water out of Lake Michigan and pumps it into its canals.

The Secretary of War on March 3, 1925 gave Chicago a permit authorizing the city to take up to 8,500 cubic feet per second (cfs) out of Lake Michigan for its sewage and navigation purposes. The permit was slated to expire Dec. 31, 1929. In the meantime other Great Lakes states filed a suit to nullify the permit. The Supreme Court April 21, 1930 decreed that Chicago had to reduce its diversion of Lake Michigan water to 1,500 cubic feet per second as of Dec. 31, 1938.

The 1,500-cfs limitation several times was lifted temporarily, during dry periods when navigation was threatened. But the 1930 Supreme Court decree remained in effect.

Chicago claimed it must take an additional 1,000 cfs out of Lake Michigan to purify its sewage-laden canals and to raise their levels for navigation. The issue had been before Congress since 1952.

● HISTORY OF CONGRESSIONAL ACTION:

82nd Congress -- The House Public Works Committee June 16, 1952 reported a bill (HR 8165 -- H Rept 2173) authorizing the diversion. No further action.

83rd Congress -- The House Feb. 4, 1954 and the Senate Aug. 20, 1954, by voice votes, passed a bill (HR 3300) authorizing the diversion. President Eisenhower pocket vetoed it Sept. 3, 1954. (1954 Almanac p. 519)

84th Congress -- The House July 6, 1955, by voice vote, and the Senate July 27, 1956, by a 43-33 roll call, passed a bill (HR 3210) similar to the one vetoed. President Eisenhower vetoed it. (1956 Almanac p. 570)

85th Congress -- The House May 22, 1957, by a 222-144 roll-call vote, passed a bill (HR 2) authorizing the diversion. The Senate Public Works Committee Aug. 20, 1958 reported (S Rept 2482) the bill but the Senate adjourned before taking final action. (1958 Almanac p. 325)

● COURT ACTION:

An application by six Great Lakes states -- Wisconsin, Minnesota, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Michigan and New York -- for a review of the 1930 decree was considered by the Supreme Court in 1958. The six states wanted the 1930 decree amended to require Chicago to return to Lake Michigan the water it diverted for domestic purposes. On June 29, 1959 the Court appointed a special master, Judge Albert Maris, to investigate the issue.

● 1959 BILLS:

In the 86th Congress, Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) Jan. 14 and Rep. Thomas J. O'Brien (D Ill.) Jan. 7 introduced identical bills (S 308, HR 1) to authorize Chicago to divert an additional 1,000 cfs of water from Lake Michigan. The bills provided for a three-year diversion experiment consisting of four phases: (1) A six-month study period to develop actual diversion plans; (2) A 12-month survey of the waterways to determine existing conditions; (3) A 12-month period of study while the additional 1,000 cfs were being taken out of the lake; (4) Six months to prepare a final report to Congress. The actual diversion of water would last for only one year.

House

COMMITTEE -- Public Works.

HEARINGS -- Feb. 17-18, March 3 on HR 1.

TESTIMONY -- Feb. 17 -- Robert Moses, chairman of the New York State Power Authority, said the proposed diversion might cost his agency $1,038,000 in potential power revenues at its Niagara and St. Lawrence plants. He said that if Chicago took water from a system jointly owned by Canada, then Canada would have to be allowed to divert additional water from Niagara, the St. Lawrence and the Columbia River Basin.

March 3 -- Representatives from the State Department and Budget Bureau opposed HR 1 on the grounds it would impair U.S. relations with Canada.

ACTION -- The Committee March 9 reported HR 1 (H Rept 191) with amendments. The Committee said objections to HR 1 were applicable only to a permanent diversion and not a temporary one such as HR 1 provided. It said the anticipated loss of power produced at Niagara and on the St. Lawrence River would be infinitesimal compared to the total and should not block a badly needed study.

Floor Action

The House March 13 passed HR 1, with amendments, by a 238-142 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 352)

As passed by the House, HR 1 was a modified version of the bills vetoed by President Eisenhower in 1954 and 1956. In an attempt to overcome objections of Canada and the Great Lakes states, the House-passed version provided specifically that the actual water diversion be for only one year instead of the three years provided in previous bills.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Charles A. Vanik (D Ohio) -- Broaden scope of study to cover effect on Great Lakes and their connecting waterways instead of Lake Michigan alone; March 13. Voice vote.

Robert H. Michel (R Ill.) -- Insure maintaining a uniform water flow of 8,000 cubic feet per second at Pekin, Ill., when feasible; March 13. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Gardner R. Withrow (R Wis.) -- Restrict total annual diversion at all times to 2,500 cubic feet per second; March 13. Voice.

John D. Dingell (D Mich.) -- Include in study an analysis of municipal and industrial waste disposal treatment practices and storm overflows in Chicago, to determine whether maximum efforts are being made to solve sewage problems; March 13. Standing 51-125.

Dingell -- Have final report submitted to Governors of Great Lakes states and to Canadian officials 45 days before submittal to Congress; March 13. Voice.

H.R. Gross (R Iowa) -- Provide that no Federal funds be made available for the studies; March 13. Standing, 67-134.

DEBATE -- March 12 -- Gordon H. Scherer (R Ohio) -- The bill's purpose was "to get the foot in the door," so that from year to year the diversion could be increased, but if Chicago were willing to spend the money and do the job itself, no diversions would be needed.

John A. Blatnik (D Minn.) -- The study was "desperately needed," and there was no validity to arguments the diversion would become permanent.

March 13 -- Dingell -- Predicted the President would veto the bill, because, "after all, citizens of our Great Lakes states outnumber the citizens of Illinois."

Senate

The Senate March 18, by a 49-21 roll-call vote, directed that HR 1 be sent to its Public Works Committee for consideration. The vote followed heated debate in which the bill's opponents, led by Sen. Alexander Wiley (R Wis.), held that the measure should go to the Foreign Relations Committee because of Canadian opposition, and not to Public Works, which reported a similar bill favorably in 1958. (For voting, see chart p. 402)

PUBLIC WORKS COMMITTEE ACTION

COMMITTEE -- Public Works, Flood Control, Rivers and Harbors Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- July 13, 14, 27 and Aug. 7 on HR 1 and S 308.

TESTIMONY -- July 13 -- Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) said Canada's objections resulted from "a very big case of nationalism." Subcommittee Chairman Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.) said he thought Canada had been "much too zealous about its sovereignty" in Great Lakes matters.

July 14 -- Douglas said Chicago would be willing to pay for any damages to shipping or power facilities which Canada might claim resulted from the additional diversion.

Aug. 7 -- Sen. William Proxmire (D Wis.) said the Public Health Service had written him that the proposed investigation could be made without the temporary diversion. Proxmire said the letter "totally demolished" the case for the bill.

The Subcommittee also received statements from Budget Bureau Director Maurice H. Stans and Govs. Nelson A. Rockefeller (R N.Y.) and Gaylord A. Nelson (D Wis.) in opposition to HR 1. Stans recommended a study without diversion and Rockefeller said the plan disregarded the rights of the people of New York. Nelson said Chicago was trying to use the diversion instead of supplying expensive new sewage facilities.

BILL REPORTED

ACTION -- The full Committee Aug. 25, by an 8-6 vote, reported HR 1 with amendments (S Rept 808).

The Committee amended the House-passed bill by broadening the scope of the proposed study to include sanitation and pollution abatement problems. A second amendment required prior consultation with Canada before a permanent increase in the diversion rate could be made.

Floor Action

The Senate Sept. 2, by a 54-34 roll-call vote that reversed an Aug. 31 decision, sent HR 1 to its Foreign Relations Committee. Seven roll-call votes were taken during the seven days of debate. (For voting, see charts p. 438, 439)

On Aug. 26, the Senate adopted, on a 66-21 roll call, a motion by Mike Mansfield (D Mont.) to table a motion by Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) to delay consideration of HR 1 until Aug. 27. This was followed by a 72-19 roll-call vote adopting a motion by Mansfield to proceed with consideration of the bill.

On Aug. 28 the Senate rejected, by a 26-41 roll-call vote, a motion by George D. Aiken (R Vt.) to table the bill. Then, the Senate voted 55-2 to recess until the next day. On Aug. 31 the Senate, by a 38-42 roll-call vote, rejected a motion by Mansfield to table a motion by Francis Case (R S.D.) to refer HR 1 to the Foreign Relations Committee with instructions to report back to the Senate by April 1, 1960. This was followed by a 41-46 roll-call vote rejecting the Case motion. The final roll call on Sept. 2 sent the bill to the Foreign Relations Committee without specifying when it should be reported back. The motion was made by John Marshall Butler (R Md.).

FILIBUSTER CHARGED

Opponents of the bill had held the floor almost continually since Aug. 26 and Douglas, the bill's chief supporter, charged its most vocal opponent, Proxmire, with conducting a filibuster. An argument over procedural matters caused the Senate to adjourn Aug. 29 after meeting for only 19 minutes.

DEBATE -- Aug. 26 -- Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.) -- Although the diversion would lower the Lake Michigan water level by one-quarter of an inch annually, the level "varies by as much as 18-20 inches every year," so how could the bill "hurt anyone?"

Aug. 27 -- Proxmire -- Quoted an April 9 note in which the Canadian government protested that "any additional diversion of water out of the Great Lakes watershed would be inconsistent with existing agreements."

Aug. 31 -- Pat McNamara (D Mich.) -- "If a diversion of 1,000 cubic feet per second were permitted for a three-year period, it would take 15 years after the diversion was terminated for the level of the lakes to reach their previous depth." He proposed authorizing a study but no water diversion.

Sept. 1 -- Douglas -- "Actual diversion for one year is necessary to a really significant test because there are factors such as temperature...which either must be determined for the actual conditions or are seasonal, thereby requiring a full year of data."

Sept. 2 -- J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) -- If the bill is referred to the Foreign Relations Committee "I see no reason why that should mean the end of" it.

Douglas -- "I submit that this bill maps out the only logical step to take. Let us take this matter, so vitally affecting health and sanitation, out of pressure politics and put it instead into the hands of experts."

Kerr -- There is no "basis for negotiation with Canada with reference to the water rights in Lake Michigan." The waters of that lake are "the property and the responsibility and resource of the United States of America."

BOND INTEREST RATES

HR 9035 -- Reported by House Ways and Means Committee (H Rept 1148) Sept. 3, 1959.
- Passed by the House by a 378-7 roll-call vote Sept. 4. (See p. 392)
- Reported, amended, by Senate Finance Committee (S Rept 909) Sept. 5.
- Passed, amended, by the Senate by an 86-1 roll-call vote Sept. 8. (See p. 443)
- Senate and House agreed, by voice votes, to the conference report (H Rept 1183) Sept. 12.

PL 86-346 -- Signed into law Sept. 22.

Enactment of HR 9035, authorizing the President to raise interest rates on the Government's Series E and H savings bonds, followed a three-month debate between Congressional Democrats and the Administration over interest rates, management of the public debt, and their impact upon inflation. President Eisenhower had precipitated the issue by asking Congress to remove the statutory ceiling on the rate of interest the Treasury is permitted to pay, not only on Series E and H savings bonds, but on all long-term Treasury obligations with maturities of five or more years. In the end, Congress refused to act with respect to the ceiling on long-term issues, and the President was forced to accept what was much the smaller half of the loaf he had sought. But the issue was certain to be revived in 1960.

PROVISIONS -- As enacted, HR 9035:

Amended the Second Liberty Bond Act, which limits the rate of interest on Series E and H savings bonds to 3.26 percent, to permit the President to increase the rate when he determines the national interest so requires, but to no more than 4.25 percent.

Provided for nonrecognition of gain or loss, for tax purposes, on the exchange of U.S. obligations, to facilitate the refinancing of outstanding Treasury securities, in advance of their final maturities.

Authorized issuance of U.S. obligations to Government trust funds at the issue price, whether or not at par.

Background

The interest rate controversy of 1959 was foreshadowed when the Treasury Feb. 6 disclosed that its attempt to refund $9.2 billion of maturing notes and certificates held by the public had fallen short by $2.1 billion. The "attrition" occurred when holders of the $2.1 billion worth of maturities refused to accept either of the securities offered by the Treasury in exchange -- a one-year certificate paying 3.75 percent interest and a three-year note bearing 4 percent interest -- and asked for cash instead. As a result, the Treasury was forced to raise new money by offering $1.5 billion in seven-month tax anticipation bills.

This episode served to point up three major facets of the Treasury's debt management problem: the rising cost of borrowing money, the shortening of debt maturity, and the potentially inflationary consequences of these two trends:

● Interest Rates -- After a sharp drop during the 1957-58 recession, market interest rates resumed their upward movement, reflecting strong demand for funds throughout the economy. The Treasury, forced to raise $12.5 billion in new cash to finance the Government's fiscal 1959 deficit while at the same time refinancing about $80 billion of maturing debt, found itself in stiff competition with other borrowers for available funds, as was demonstrated by the heavy "attrition" experienced in the February refinancing operation. Inevitably, the Treasury was forced to pay a higher rate of interest, that on three-month bills rising from a low of 1 percent in mid-1958 to more than 4 percent in September 1959. Inevitably, too, these higher rates pushed up the cost of servicing the $285-billion public debt, the estimate for fiscal 1960 rising from $8 billion in January to $9 billion in September.

● Shortening Maturity -- By mid-1959 approximately $182 billion of the total national debt was in marketable public issues (the balance was largely in savings bonds and in special issues held by Government trust funds). Of this portion, 75 percent was scheduled to mature within five years. The average maturity of the marketable debt had shortened from 64 months in mid-1953 to 55 months in mid-1959. Even more important, from the Treasury's point of view, was the fact that $73 billion, or about 40 percent of the marketable debt, would mature and need to be refinanced within one year.

This situation connoted a continuation of the Treasury's heavy dependence on the volatile short-term money market under competitive conditions that promised to bar any early reduction in interest rates. To ease the pressures in this area would require shifting a substantial portion of short-term debt into longer-term issues. Here, however, the Treasury was estopped by the legal ceiling, imposed in 1918, of 4.25 percent on interest payable on bond issues maturing in more than five years. Yields on top-quality corporate bonds had risen to 4.5 percent by September 1959; some long-term Treasury issues outstanding were selling at a heavy discount. There was no chance that the Treasury could float a long-term, 4.25 percent issue at par without risking a disastrous failure.

● Inflationary Impact -- Faced with the prospect of having to place increasing reliance on the short-term market (where there was no legal ceiling on interest rates to contend with), the Treasury foresaw that this would mean, in practice, reliance on the country's commercial banks. With $53.4 billion of the marketable debt in their vaults on June 30 (and $41 billion of it in short-term obligations), the banks could absorb a good deal more, but only at the cost, in effect, of putting more money in circulation, without any corresponding increase in national output. Such a development, if of significant size, could have a marked impact on the general price level at a time when the Administration was committed to an all-out war against inflation.

President's Message

These were the considerations that prompted President Eisenhower to send a special message to Congress June 8, asking for removal of the interest-rate ceilings on Series E and H Savings bonds, and for an increase in the statutory limit on the public debt. (For text of message, see p. 659; for action on debt limit, see p. 277)

In his message, he noted that Treasury obligations faced strong competition in the money market from Government-insured mortgages, tax-exempt state and municipal bonds, corporate borrowings and even stocks. Although he asked for removal of the 3.26 percent ceiling on savings bonds (which were being cashed in larger amounts than they were being purchased), he noted that the Treasury proposed raising the interest rate only to 3.75 percent.

In asking for removal of the 4.25 percent ceiling on long-term issues, he said: "The Treasury recently has done substantial short-term borrowing, but it must avoid undue shortening of the public debt and therefore should continue to sell intermediate and longer term bonds whenever market conditions permit. It should not be prohibited from doing so by the existence of an artificial ceiling which under today's conditions makes it virtually impossible to sell bonds in the competitive market."

House

COMMITTEE -- Ways and Means.

ACTION -- Sept. 3 reported (H Rept 1148) HR 9035 after a series of false starts, Administration admonitions and attempts to break a deadlock in the Committee. Major developments during this period:

June 10 -- Secretary of the Treasury Robert B. Anderson told the Committee it "is simply not so" that removal of the interest rate ceilings would lead to a general increase in interest rates. The Treasury, he said, had "not believed it appropriate" to circumvent the 4.25 percent ceiling on long-term issues by offering them at a discount.

June 11 -- Federal Reserve Board Chairman William McChesney Martin Jr. rejected the suggestion that the "Fed" help to peg Government bond prices by increasing the purchases in the open market. This could not be done, he told the Committee, without "converting the Federal Reserve System into an engine of inflation." (Bonds so purchased would add to reserves of the commercial banking system, permitting a multiple expansion of bank loans, investments and deposits.)

June 23 -- Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas) met with Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.) and other Democratic members of the Committee; they agreed to ask Anderson to submit alternative legislative proposals.

July 8 -- By a 17-7 vote the Committee tentatively agreed to a draft bill giving the President discretionary authority to raise interest rates on savings and long-term bonds. Committee Democrats insisted, however, on provisions limiting the President's authority to two years and expressing the "sense of Congress" that the Federal Reserve System should purchase Treasury securities of "varying maturities" -- a euphemism for pegging Government bonds.

July 15 -- President Eisenhower told his news conference that these two provisions -- the two-year limit and the "sense of Congress" clause -- were "very bad." Speaker Rayburn replied that "we can sit here and wait" until the Administration presented an acceptable alternative.

Aug. 12 -- Over the opposition of Chairman Mills and nine other Democrats, the Committee voted 15-10 to approve a clean bill (HR 8637) which carried a three-year limit on the President's authority to increase interest rates and a watered-down version of the "sense of Congress" clause. Secretary Anderson, who was present at the closed-door session, said he was "pleased."

Aug. 18 -- The Committee reversed itself and voted 14-11 to suspend action on HR 8637. Opposed to the step were the Committee's 10 Republicans and one Democrat, Burr P. Harrison (Va.). Secretary Anderson promptly labeled the action "a matter of grave concern."

Aug. 25 -- In another special message to Congress, the President said the Committee's action was "a grave disappointment to me." Reiterating his arguments that removal of the interest-rate ceilings was essential "to preserve our financial integrity and to protect our currency," he said that "no issue of greater importance has come before this session of Congress." He warned that, "if the requested legislation is not enacted, those in the Congress who are unwilling to pass it must assume full responsibility for the possibly serious consequences."

Aug. 26 -- Commenting on the President's message, Rayburn said there was no possibility that the House would act on the full request "because there is not the slightest chance the Senate will do anything this year." He left the door open, however, for action on savings bonds alone.

Sept. 3 -- The Ways and Means Committee reported a new bill (HR 9035 -- H Rept 1148) authorizing the President to exceed the statutory limit of 3.26 percent interest payable on Series E and H savings bonds in the "national interest." Earlier, by an 11-14 vote, the Committee had rejected an amendment to give the President comparable authority with respect to the 4.25 percent ceiling on long-term bonds. All of the Committee's GOP members signed a minority report warning that, unless the latter authority were granted, "the debt due within 12 months will amount to almost $100 billion by December 1960."

Floor Action

The House Sept. 4, by a roll-call vote of 378-7, passed HR 9035. It rejected, by a 134-255 roll-call vote, a motion by Rep. Richard M. Simpson (R Pa.) to recommit the bill with instructions to extend the President's interest-raising authority to long-term bonds. Ways and Means Chairman Mills had argued that there was no "real urgency" to the long-term interest rate issue, and that interest rates were at or near their peak and were "bound to fall." (For voting, see chart p. 392)

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 9035:

Authorized the President to raise the interest rate on Series E and H savings bonds when in the national interest.

Provided for nonrecognition of gain or loss, for tax purposes, on the exchange of U.S. obligations, to facilitate the refinancing of outstanding Treasury securities in advance of their final maturities.

Authorized the issuance of U.S. obligations to Government trust funds at the issue price, whether or not at par.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Finance.

ACTION -- Sept. 5 reported (S Rept 909) HR 9035 after rejecting, by a 5-10 vote, an amendment to set a maximum interest rate on Series E and H savings bonds of 4.25 percent. As reported, the bill differed in only one respect from that passed by the House. The provision relating to nonrecognition of gain or loss was amended to apply solely to the exchange of E bonds for H bonds, not to the exchange of all types of U.S. obligations. (On E bonds interest is collected when the bonds are cashed; on H bonds, generally of higher denomination, interest is paid semi-annually.)

Floor Action

The Senate Sept. 8 passed HR 9035, by an 86-1 roll-call vote, after voting 45-41 to limit the President's interest-raising authority to 4.25 percent. Democrats insisted the limit was necessary to keep the interest rate from going "high as the moon." (For voting, see chart p. 443)

Debate starting Sept. 7 revealed that Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) had agreed to take up the bill only after being assured by Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) that Republicans would not attempt to amend the bill to cover the long-term interest rate issue. When Sen. Prescott Bush (R Conn.) announced that he would offer such an amendment, Sen. Johnson stated: "If an attempt is made to load the bill down with other amendments...I am going to join with other Members of the Senate to see, if we can, that no legislation is enacted in that field."

Outnumbered, Bush withdrew his amendment, saying he was certain "that Senators who would vote against this amendment today will have to reverse their positions within 12 months, and I do not want to put a hurdle in their way because Senators do find it difficult to reverse their positions from time to time."

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.) -- Limit President's authority to raise interest rate on Series E and H savings bonds to a maximum of 4.25 percent; Sept. 8. Roll call, 45-41.

Conference

House conferees balked at accepting the 4.25 percent limit voted by the Senate on grounds it would become the "floor" rather than "ceiling" on savings bond interest rates, since potential purchasers might hold off buying until the rate was raised to the allowable limit. They also objected, as did the Treasury, to the Senate's provision limiting the "advance refunding" arrangement to exchanges of E for H bonds.

Conferees finally agreed, however, to accept the 4.25 percent limit in the Senate bill while retaining the House bill's provisions respecting exchanges. The conference report (H Rept 1183) was agreed to Sept. 12 by voice votes of Senate and House.

At his Sept. 17 news conference, President Eisenhower said that Congress' "very flat refusal to take care of the matter of our long-range financing is one of the most serious things that has happened to the United States in my time." He added his view that "the financial community, insurance companies, the banks and everybody else has a job to do on educating our public, so that the Congress will feel the heat of truth about this matter and do something." In signing HR 9035 on Sept. 22, however, the President made no reference to the issue. The Treasury Sept. 23 made effective, retroactive to June 1, an interest rate of 3.75 percent on all Series E and H bonds outstanding and to be issued.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- The Treasury Oct. 1 added a dramatic fillip to the interest rate controversy by offering $2 billion worth of notes, to mature in four years and 10 months, at an interest rate of 5 percent -- the highest paid by the Government since 1929. (Maturing in less than five years, the issue was not subject to the 4.25 percent ceiling.)

The highly successful issue was heavily oversubscribed and won wide public favor as the "Magic Fives." But on Oct. 7 the administrative committee of the Democratic Advisory Council, describing the issue as a "banker's bonus," said the Eisenhower Administration "has made a seven-year mess of fiscal and monetary policy."

ANTITRUST ENFORCEMENT

S 726 — Reported by Senate Judiciary Committee March 5, 1959 (S Rept 83).
- Passed by the Senate March 18 by voice vote.
- Reported, amended, by House Judiciary Committee June 26 (H Rept 580).
- Passed, amended, by the House July 6 by voice vote.
- House version agreed to July 8, with clerical amendments, by voice vote of the Senate.
- Senate amendments agreed to by the House July 13 by voice vote.

PL 86-107 — Signed into law July 23.

S 726 tightened enforcement powers under the Clayton Antitrust Act. It made cease and desist orders issued under the Act by five Federal agencies final, without the necessity of court enforcement orders, unless appealed to the courts within 60 days. Violation was made punishable by $5,000 fine. The orders, issued mainly by the Federal Trade Commission, are directed against such activities as monopolistic mergers, exclusive dealing arrangements and price-fixing agreements.

President Eisenhower Jan. 20 repeated earlier requests for the new enforcement legislation. The two Judiciary Committee reports said effective enforcement of the Clayton Act had long been handicapped by inadequate, cumbersome and expensive procedures. Under existing law, the reports said, the FTC (which had sought legislation similar to S 726 for more than 20 years) had to have evidence of Clayton Act violation before issuing a cease and desist order; if the order was then violated, the FTC had to prove the violation and obtain a court order for the violator to cease and desist; and the violator could be punished only if, after the court order was issued, the FTC was able to prove that the violation was continuing and therefore in contempt of court.

Legislation similar to S 726 was passed in 1958 by the Senate but received no House action. (1958 Almanac p. 76) The bill had to go before each house twice in 1959 because of minor amendments in wording which did not affect the substance of the bill.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, S 726:

Declared that cease and desist orders issued in antitrust cases under the Clayton Act by the Federal Trade Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Communications Commission, the Civil Aeronautics Board and the Federal Reserve Board would be final without court enforcement orders, unless appealed to the courts within 60 days; provided further that the findings of the commission or board as to the facts, if supported by "substantial" evidence, would be conclusive.

Made any person who violated an order to cease and desist after it becomes final liable to a civil penalty of $5,000 for each violation, with each day of a continuing violation being deemed a separate offense.

SMALL BUSINESS CAPITAL

S 2611 -- Reported by Senate Banking and Currency Committee (S Rept 833) Aug. 27, 1959.
● Passed by voice vote of the Senate Sept. 10.

The Senate in 1959 passed a bill amending the Small Business Investment Act of 1958 to give the Small Business Administration authority to set the terms under which small business investment companies (SBICs) could provide equity capital for small businesses. The measure, designed to stimulate activity under the 1958 law, was not acted on by the House during the first session.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, S 2611:

Eliminated from the 1958 Act a provision stating that SBICs could furnish equity capital to small businesses only through purchase of debenture bonds convertible into the stock of the borrowers.

Rescinded other restrictions on equity financing under the 1958 law, including a requirement that a firm receiving equity capital from an SBIC purchase SBIC stock worth 2 to 5 percent of the amount of the equity capital.

Authorized the SBA to issue regulations governing the terms and manner in which SBICs could provide equity capital to small business concerns.

Eliminated from the 1958 Act a statement that it was the "primary purpose" of an SBIC to furnish equity capital to small businesses. (The Committee report said this change was intended to place "long-term loans and equity lending on an equal footing.")

Background

The Small Business Investment Act of 1958 was intended to help small businesses obtain equity capital and long-term credit. The Act created the Small Business Investment Division (SBID) within the Small Business Administration and provided for SBID loans to state and Federally charted small business investment companies, which in turn would furnish equity capital and long-term loans to small businesses. (1958 Almanac p. 258)

On Jan. 3, 1959 the House Select Small Business Committee, in a final report (H Rept 2718) on its 1958 studies of small business problems, said problems of high priority included national marketing of small business investment company securities and securing of needed capital for small businesses.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Select Small Business.

HEARING -- June 3 to review Small Business Administration programs, especially operations under the Small Business Investment Act of 1958.

SBA Administrator Wendell B. Barnes, in prepared testimony, recommended amending the Act to eliminate current requirements that small businesses receiving equity capital from a small business investment company must purchase stock of the company equal to 2 to 5 percent of the capital provided. Barnes also proposed amendments designed to provide more "flexibility" for investment companies in financing small businesses.

A spokesman for the National Assn. of Small Business Investment Companies proposed an 11-point program of legislative recommendations "geared to encouraging the formation and growth of the new (investment) companies...." NASBIC recommendations included exempting SBICs from personal holding company tax and from the penalty tax on accumulated earnings and profits, and, also, allowing the companies a tax deduction on 15 percent of the interest received on long-term loans.

BANKING COMMITTEE ACTION

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency, Small Business Subcommittee.

HEARING -- June 22 on S 2611, to amend the Small Business Investment Act of 1958.

TESTIMONY -- June 22 -- Barnes made recommendations similar to those given the Select Small Business Committee on June 3. He also urged deletion of provisions stating that the furnishing of equity capital must be a primary function of the companies and permitting investment companies to act as depositories for fiscal agencies of the Federal Government, which he said was unnecessary.

ACTION -- The full Committee Aug. 27 reported S 2611 (S Rept 833). The report said that the amendments of the 1958 Act were designed to encourage formation of SBICs.

Floor Action

The Senate Sept. 10 passed S 2611 by voice vote, sending the measure to the House. Sen. William Proxmire (D Wis.), sponsor of the bill, said it was designed to encourage establishment of SBICs by liberalizing the kind of investments which the companies could make in small businesses.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- Sept. 23 -- President Eisenhower signed a bill (HR 47 -- PL 86-376) which amended the Internal Revenue Code to exempt SBICs from the personal holding company tax and to provide that husband and wife be treated as one shareholder in relation to certain small business corporations. The bill also permitted personal tax exemptions for children placed in homes by adoption agencies. The small business provisions were added by the Senate Finance Committee, which reported HR 47 (S Rept 913) Sept. 8. The Senate Sept. 10 and the House Sept. 14 agreed to the amendments.

SBA LOAN AUTHORITY

HR 8599 -- Reported by House Banking and Currency Committee (H Rept 946) Aug. 19, 1959.
● Passed by voice vote of the House Aug. 24.
S 2612 -- Reported by Senate Banking and Currency Committee (S Rept 834) Aug. 27.
HR 8599 -- Passed, amended, by voice vote of the Senate Sept. 10.
● House agreed to Senate amendments Sept. 11.
PL 86-367 -- Signed into law Sept. 22.

An increase of $75 million in the Small Business Administration's revolving fund that provides business loans was approved by Congress and the President in 1959.

The increase raised to $575 million the amount which the SBA could obligate for loans to small businesses. The additional loan authority was expected to carry the program through fiscal 1960. (1958 Almanac p. 257)

SBA Administrator Wendell B. Barnes had requested a $200-million increase, and the House originally voted the full amount. However, the Senate limited the increase to $75 million, and the House accepted the Senate version.

BANK MERGERS

S 1062 -- Reported April 17, 1959, by Senate Banking and Currency Committee (S Rept 196).
- Passed by the Senate May 14 by voice vote. (For roll-call vote on amendment, see p. 411)

The terms of S 1062 as passed by the Senate represented an attempt to patch up differences within the Administration on how Congress should legislate to prevent bank mergers and transfers of assets that would tend to lessen competition. There was no House action on the bill.

Two bills (S 1004 and S 1062) to control bank mergers were considered by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. S 1004 embodied President Eisenhower's approach as outlined in his Jan. 20 Economic Report and endorsed by the Justice Department. It was sponsored by Sen. Alexander Wiley (R Wis.). The bill would have controlled bank mergers by amending the Clayton Antitrust Act, which is enforced by the Justice Department.

S 1062, co-sponsored by Committee Chairman A. Willis Robertson (D Va.), J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) and Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.), required banks planning mergers or acquisition of assets of other banks to receive prior consent from the Treasury Department, the Federal Reserve Board or the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., each of which supervises different kinds of banks.

Before approving S 1062 the Senate Committee added to it a requirement that the supervisory agency seek a report from the Justice Department on the antitrust aspects of a proposed bank merger.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, S 1062: Amended the Federal Deposit Insurance Act to provide that, before consenting to a bank merger or consolidation, the supervisory agency concerned must (a) consider various banking factors, (b) seek the views of the other two agencies, (c) consider whether the merger's effect "may be to lessen competition unduly or to tend unduly to create a monopoly" and (d) obtain a report from the Attorney General on the competitive factors involved.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency.

HEARINGS -- March 18-19 on S 1062.

TESTIMONY -- March 18 -- Spokesmen for the Federal Reserve Board, FDIC and Treasury endorsed S 1062 as introduced by Sens. Robertson, Fulbright and Capehart. Ray M. Gidney, Comptroller of the Currency, said jurisdiction over mergers should be vested in the three bank supervisory agencies, "which are best qualified" to consider the factors involved, rather than in the Justice Department.

March 19 -- House Judiciary Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) said S 1062 should be strengthened before being approved.

Representatives of several bankers' associations also testified.

ACTION -- The Committee April 17 reported S 1062 (S Rept 196). It was amended, at the request of the Justice Department, to require the banking agency considering a proposed merger to request a report from the Attorney General on the competitive factors involved in the merger.

Floor Action

The bill was passed by voice vote of the Senate May 14.

Debate centered on an amendment offered by Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) in the nature of a substitute. It would have (a) prohibited, with stated exceptions, consent to any merger whose effect "may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly," (b) provided for a public hearing when any one of the three supervisory agencies or the Attorney General disapproved a merger, (c) provided for court review of any disputed decision and (d) required a semi-annual report to Congress covering all mergers approved.

In introducing his amendment, O'Mahoney produced a letter from Deputy Attorney General Lawrence E. Walsh endorsing it in preference to S 1062. The amendment, Walsh wrote, "substitutes the court-tested language of section 7 of the Clayton Act for the novel and uncertain standards of S 1062." But the amendment was rejected, by a 29-55 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 411)

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) -- Require semiannual reports to Congress, from the three supervisory agencies, covering all mergers approved; May 14. Voice vote.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) -- Adopt substitute measure prohibiting mergers that "substantially" lessen competition; May 14. Roll call, 29-55.

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- Substitute "substantially" for "unduly" in the text of S 1062; May 14. Standing.

DEBATE -- May 13 -- A. Willis Robertson (D Va.), floor manager of the bill -- The Committee believed there are times "when it would be in the public interest to approve mergers even though the mergers substantially lessen competition."

NATIONAL DEBT LIMIT

HR 7749 -- Reported by House Ways and Means Committee (H Rept 556) June 16, 1959.
- Passed by the House by a 256-117 roll-call vote June 19. (See p. 372)
- Reported by Senate Finance Committee (S Rept 432) June 25.
- Passed by the Senate by voice vote June 25.

PL 86-74 -- Signed into law June 30.

The Public Debt Act of 1959 (HR 7749) authorized a $2 billion increase in the permanent national debt ceiling, from $283 billion to $285 billion, and a temporary increase to $295 billion through June 30, 1960, to replace a $288 billion temporary limit which expired June 30, 1959.

President Eisenhower June 8 asked Congress to increase the permanent debt ceiling to $288 billion and the temporary limit to $295 billion. The President's combined request was his third in one-and-one-half years. Congress early in 1958 authorized a temporary $5 billion increase to $280 billion. Recession-induced declining tax revenues led the President later in 1958 to request, and Congress to vote, a $288 billion temporary limit, as well as a $283 billion permanent limit. (1958 Almanac p. 267)

The House Ways and Means Committee, in reporting HR 7749 June 16 (H Rept 556), rejected the President's request for a permanent $5 billion increase and instead recommended a permanent $2 billion increase, to $285 billion and the temporary limit of $295 billion. The report said Secretary of Treasury Robert B. Anderson had estimated that the public debt subject to a ceiling would be $285 billion as of June 30, the end of fiscal 1959, and that the Federal budget in fiscal 1960 would be balanced. The temporary increase would take care of fluctuations in the debt situation during fiscal 1960.

The House took up the bill under a rule barring amendments and limiting debate -- a procedure criticized by both Democrats and Republicans. The Senate Finance Committee and the Senate itself approved the bill without amendment and with little discussion.

BOND EXCHANGE

S Res 130 -- Reported by Senate Banking and Currency Committee (S Rept 534) July 17, 1959.
● Adopted with amendments by the Senate Aug. 20, by a 56-29 roll-call vote. (See p. 437)

S Res 130 expressed the Senate's opposition to a complex financial transaction proposed by the Administration as a means of helping to balance the fiscal 1960 Federal budget. The proposal called for an exchange of $335 million worth of mortgages held by the Federal National Mortgage Assn. for an equivalent amount of Treasury bonds held by the public. The transaction was designed to permit FNMA to operate in fiscal 1960 without recourse to budgetary expenditure. The proposal also would permit the Treasury to retire the bonds received in the exchange, reducing the public debt by an equivalent amount.

A simple resolution, S Res 130 had no force of law; its Democratic sponsors hoped, however, that its adoption would dissuade the Administration from carrying out the exchange, for which no additional legislative authority was necessary. On Oct. 20, nevertheless, FNMA announced that it would offer $150 million worth of mortgages in exchange for the bonds.

PROVISIONS -- As adopted by the Senate, S Res 130:

Expressed the sense of the Senate that the proposed mortgage-bond-trading plan should not be carried out because of resultant Federal revenue losses and adverse effects on the home mortgage market.

Expressed the sense of the Senate that the Federal Government's obligations in its economic policies included a balanced budget whenever possible, retirement of public debt and orderly management and liquidation of the existing FNMA mortgage portfolio, with minimum loss to the Government.

Background

In his Jan. 19 Budget Message to Congress, President Eisenhower described the proposal. He said that the special assistance program, under which FNMA buys certain types of insured mortgages, had operated without net cost in the past three years but was expected to cost a net $678 million in fiscal 1959, "as a result of the 1958 housing bill's billion-dollar program...to purchase mortgages on low-cost housing at terms favorable to the borrowers." (1958 Almanac p. 229)

In fiscal 1960, FNMA would endeavor to reverse that situation, he said. "To make this possible without diverting the flow of net funds from the mortgage market, an estimated $335 million in Government-owned mortgages will be offered to investors in exchange for certain Government bonds which then will be retired."

The mortgages proposed for the exchange were part of a block of 4-percent mortgage loans guaranteed by the Veterans Administration, aggregating about $1 billion and acquired by FNMA prior to Nov. 1, 1954. The bonds for which they were to be exchanged were part of a 2.75 percent nonmarketable issue maturing in 1980.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency.

ACTION -- July 17 reported (S Rept 534) a resolution (S Res 130), which had been introduced June 8 by Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) and 12 other Senators, expressing disapproval of the proposed exchange. The Committee concluded that the exchange would not be compatible with FNMA's responsibility, under its charter, to manage and liquidate its mortgage portfolio "in an orderly manner, with a minimum of adverse effect upon the home mortgage market, and a minimum loss to the Federal Government."

According to the report, the exchange would cost the Government $13.4 million in potential revenue, representing the spread between FNMA's return of 4 percent on the VA mortgages, and the Treasury's cost in interest payments on the 2.75 percent bonds. A further tax loss, amounting to as much as $8.4 million in fiscal 1960, would be entailed, the report said. Finally, the report argued, the exchange could serve to depress the home mortgage market.

In separate views, GOP Sens. Wallace F. Bennett (Utah) and Prescott Bush (Conn.) defended the proposed exchange on grounds that it would permit FNMA to unload "some of its least desirable low-interest-rate assets pursuant to the Congressional direction to liquidate," help to balance the budget, and avoid adding $335 million to the public debt in fiscal 1960.

Floor Action

The Senate amended, then adopted S Res 130 Aug. 20, by a 56-29 roll-call vote. No Democrats voted against it, only three Republicans voted for it. (For voting, see chart p. 437) GOP Members called the resolution's statement that the exchange plan was "not in the public interest" a "politically inspired" attempt to censure the President. On Clark's motion, the Senate agreed to delete the phrase in order to "eliminate... the hard feelings which have developed."

Earlier, six roll-call votes had been taken on the resolution. First, the Senate adopted, by a 51-38 roll-call vote, a motion by Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) to table a recommittal motion by Senate Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.). It adopted, by an 88-0 roll-call vote, an amendment by Sen. Albert Gore (D Tenn.) expressing the sense of the Senate on Government policies to be pursued for fiscal and economic stability. The Senate rejected, by a 34-54 roll-call vote, a motion by Dirksen to table the resolution and also rejected, by a 33-55 roll-call vote, a motion by Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) to eliminate from S Res 130 all but the Gore amendment. It rejected, by a 33-55 roll call, a motion by Wallace F. Bennett (R Utah) to postpone further consideration of S Res 130 until 1960.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Albert Gore (D Tenn.) -- Describe the Government's obligations in economic policy and management and liquidation of FNMA portfolio; Aug. 20. Roll call, 88-0.

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), as modified by Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) -- Eliminate from S Res 130 the words, "is not in the public interest"; Aug. 20. Voice.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) -- Eliminate Section I of S Res 130 and retain only the language of Gore's amendment; Aug. 20. Roll call, 33-54.

DEBATE -- Aug. 20 -- Clark -- Firmly believed the legislature "has the right and also the duty" to state its feelings on "a transaction of this sort."

Prescott Bush (R Conn.) -- The bond exchange was part of the Administration's "sound money policy" and S Res 130 was "purely a political attack," raising the "tired old argument about a tight money policy and high interest rates."

Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) -- Senators should have proposed either to change the law or to repeal it. S Res 130 was a "futile and meaningless" approach.

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) -- S Res 130 was not a censure of the President but merely "an expression of a view, an expression of policy on the part of the majority of a committee."

RENEGOTIATION ACT

HR 7086 --
- Reported by House Ways and Means Committee May 14, 1959 (H Rept 364).
- Passed by the House May 27, by a 382-7 roll-call vote. (See p. 362)
- Reported, amended, by Senate Finance Committee June 18 (S Rept 407).
- Passed, amended, by voice vote of the Senate June 23.
- Conference report (H Rept 619) agreed to by voice votes of the House and Senate July 1.

PL 86-89 -- Signed into law July 13.

Congress in 1959 approved a three-year extension, through June 30, 1962, of the Renegotiation Act of 1951, the law that enables the Defense Department to recapture excessive profits by reviewing military procurement contracts. A series of House amendments designed to strengthen the bargaining position of contractors in proceedings before the Renegotiation Board was knocked out of the final bill after Rep. Carl Vinson (D Ga.), chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, said the amendments would increase the profits of missile and aircraft manufacturers by $1 billion a year.

PROVISIONS -- As signed by the President, HR 7086:

Extended the Act through June 30, 1962.

Increased the salary of the General Counsel of the Renegotiation Board to $19,000, the same amount paid to the general counsels of other Federal agencies involved in renegotiation proceedings.

Directed the House and Senate Armed Services Committees to make a comprehensive study of the procurement policies of Federal agencies and to send their findings to the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, which then would conduct a study of the entire renegotiation process. The results of the first study would be reported to Congress by Sept. 30, 1960 and the second by March 31, 1961.

Provided for a five-year carry-forward of renegotiation losses in place of the current two-year carry-forward period.

BACKGROUND -- Prior to 1959, the Renegotiation Act of 1951 (PL 82-9) had been extended four times, the longest period being for two years, from Dec. 31, 1956 to Dec. 31, 1958. (1956 Almanac p. 594)

In 1958 President Eisenhower asked the 85th Congress to extend the act for two more years. Instead, Congress extended it only six months -- through June 30, 1959 -- so that a broad review of the renegotiation procedure could be made early in 1959. (1958 Almanac p. 77)

In his 1959 Budget Message, the President asked for an extension but did not specify any period of time. The Defense Department later suggested extending the act through Sept. 30, 1961.

House

COMMITTEE -- Ways and Means.

HEARINGS -- April 27-29.

ACTION -- May 14 reported a bill (HR 7086 -- H Rept 364) providing a four-year extension. HR 7086 also amended the Act to strengthen the position of defense contractors in renegotiation proceedings.

In supplemental views submitted with the report, nine Committee Republicans objected to the bill because the broad study of the program mentioned the year before had never been made. They also said the term "excessive profits" required further statutory definition, that proceedings before the Renegotiation Board bore "the aura of a tribunal," that renegotiation limited the number of firms willing to undertake defense contracts and that renegotiation hampered efficient defense procurement.

Floor Action

The House May 27 passed HR 7086 by a 382-7 roll-call vote after rejecting, on a 153-246 roll call, a motion by Rep. Richard M. Simpson (R Pa.) to recommit the bill and limit the extension to 27 months. (For voting, see chart p. 362)

The Ways and Means Committee bill was attacked by Chairman Carl Vinson (D Ga.) of the House Armed Services Committee as "an act for the financial aid of some of the wealthiest defense contractors in the Nation." The bill also drew criticism from House Republicans who objected to what they called the "unprecedented" four-year extension period. Republicans Thomas B. Curtis (Mo.) and Bruce Alger (Texas) opposed extension of the Act because they said it gave arbitrary powers to the Renegotiation Board to deny industry normal profits.

PROVISIONS -- As sent to the Senate, HR 7086:

Extended the act through June 30, 1963.

Provided for U.S. Court of Appeals review of decisions made on renegotiation cases in the Tax Court.

Required the Renegotiation Board, when reviewing procurement contracts, to consider the pricing policies of contractors to allow them a fair profit when the contractors made savings by sub-contracting part of their work to small business concerns.

Required that before the Board ordered a contractor to return excessive profits, it make available to the contractor all documents and furnish a statement indicating that it had considered all factors in the case.

Increased from two to five years the period in which contractors could carry forward their losses sustained from renegotiation.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Carl Vinson (D Ga.) -- Eliminate all committee amendments and merely extend the act for an additional four years; May 25. Voice vote.

Richard M. Simpson (R Pa.) -- Extend the act for 27 months -- until Sept. 30, 1961; May 25. Voice.

DEBATE -- May 25 -- Wilbur D. Mills (D Ark.) -- "Since 1951 some 4,400 cases were certified to the Renegotiation Board. Of these cases 3,288 were renegotiated, resulting in a recovery to the Government of $723 million."

Simpson -- "I am personally convinced that the Renegotiation Board has in fact found 'excessive profits' when none existed (and) has not given proper recognition to contractor efficiency and to the incentive element in defense contracts."

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Finance.

HEARINGS -- June 2-3.

ACTION -- June 18 reported an amended version of HR 7086 (S Rept 407). The Committee deleted the House provisions and merely provided a 30-month extension with the stipulation that the entire renegotiation process be thoroughly examined by Congress before the next expiration date. The Committee action followed testimony by Vinson reiterating the arguments against the bill that he had made earlier on the House floor.

Floor Action

The Senate June 23 passed HR 7086 by voice vote. Following a brief explanation of the bill by Finance Committee Chairman Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.), two amendments cleared earlier by the Committee were adopted. The first, offered by Byrd, added six months to the 30-month extension period originally recommended. The second, offered by John Marshall Butler (R Md.), stated that no profit limitation could be written into a contract that would be subject to renegotiation proceedings.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, HR 7086:

Extended the Act through June 30, 1962.

Increased the salary of the General Counsel of the Renegotiation Board to $19,000.

Directed the House and Senate Armed Services Committees to make a comprehensive study of the procurement policies of Federal agencies and to send their findings to the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, which then would conduct a study of the renegotiation process. The results of the first study would be reported to Congress by Sept. 30, 1960 and the second by March 31, 1961.

Specified that no Federal agency could insert a profit limitation device into a contract subject to the Act.

Conference

REPORT -- Senate-House conferees June 30 reported a compromise version of HR 7086 (H Rept 619) providing a three-year extension. The conferees deleted all but one of a series of House amendments, retaining only the provision increasing from two to five years the period in which contractors could carry forward any losses caused by renegotiation. They also knocked out the Senate amendment barring profit limitation devices in contracts subject to renegotiation.

ACTION -- Both chambers agreed to the conference report July 1 by voice votes.

INTERSTATE TAXATION

S 2524 --	Reported by Senate Finance Committee (S Rept 658) Aug. 11, 1959.
H J Res 450 --	Reported by House Judiciary Committee (H Rept 936) Aug. 18.
S 2524 --	Passed, amended, by the Senate by voice vote Aug. 20. (For roll-call votes see p. 435-36)
•	Passed, amended, by the House by voice vote Aug. 25.
•	Conference report (H Rept 1103) agreed to by the House, by a 359-31 roll-call vote, Sept. 2 (see p. 390); and by the Senate, by voice vote Sept. 3.
PL 86-272 --	Signed into law Sept. 14.

In 1959 Congress passed a law designed to clarify state taxation of interstate business by providing a rule for determining what income would be subject to such taxation.

PROVISIONS -- As signed by the President, S 2524:

Prohibited a state from levying a tax on the net income of a business if its only activity within the state was (1) the solicitation of orders for tangible personal property, to be approved and filled from outside the state, or (2) the solicitation of orders for a client or customer, if the orders were to be approved and filled from outside the state. The exemption would stand if orders were solicited through an independent agent working for a number of businesses even if the agent maintained an office within the state.

Provided that the exemption would not apply to any corporation incorporated under the laws of the state or any individual living in the state.

Prohibited states, after the date of enactment of the bill, from assessing taxes forbidden by the act for taxable years that ended before the enactment. Taxes which were assessed or collected before enactment would be valid.

Ordered the House Judiciary and the Senate Finance Committees, separately or jointly, to study all matters pertaining to interstate taxation of business and report to their houses, recommending uniform standards to be observed by the states, by July 1, 1962.

Background

The question of a state's right to tax a company which is located in another state but which does business in the first state came up as a result of Supreme Court decisions on four cases early in 1959. The cases were: Portland Cement and Stockham Valves, decided Feb. 24, involving Minnesota and Georgia tax laws; and E.T. and W.N.C. Transportation v. Currie, and Brown-Forman, decided March 2, involving North Carolina and Louisiana laws.

The Court ruled that states could tax that portion of a company's income which was earned through operations within their boundaries. Thirty-five states have business income taxes applicable to interstate commerce.

The Senate Small Business Committee June 30 issued a report (S Rept 453) saying the Supreme Court did not clearly define the kind or amount of business activity which would bring a business under the taxing jurisdiction of the individual states. The report said that since no two states had the same tax provisions, the costs and operational difficulties of compliance might force some firms out of interstate commerce.

The Committee said Congress should not forbid states to tax interstate businesses, since the latter benefited from state facilities and should pay a fair share of the costs; but it should establish uniform standards.

The report contained a draft bill embodying two courses of action favored by the Committee. Chairman John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) June 29 introduced the measure (S J Res 113) which provided for creation of a study commission to recommend uniform standards for state taxation of interstate businesses.

S J Res 113 also provided a temporary definition of "doing business" within a state for deciding tax jurisdiction: states would be permitted to tax income from interstate commerce only if the concern in question had a "place of business" in the state.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Finance.

HEARINGS -- July 21-22 on S J Res 113 and other bills to clarify the interstate taxation situation.

ACTION -- Aug. 11 reported a clean bill (S 2524 -- S Rept 658) which would prohibit state taxation of companies whose only business within the state was the solicitation of orders to be approved and filled from outside the state. It exempted both company salesmen and independent commission agents if their orders were filled from outside the state.

There was no time limit on the effectiveness of the bill but Committee Chairman Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) called the bill a "stop-gap." The Committee report said the establishment of a committee to deal "solely with the intergovernmental problems attendant to taxation" was being considered.

A minority report signed by Sens. Albert Gore (D Tenn.) and Eugene McCarthy (D Minn.) questioned both the desirability of Congressional action in this field and the equity of the solution proposed in S 2524. They said the bill "would constitute an unwise precedent on Congressional action to curb the power and statutory rights of the states by curtailing the ability and choice of the states to raise sufficient revenue to carry out proper and necessary state functions." They claimed S 2524 was "nothing more than a protective measure for a few manufacturing states and a few companies which do a multi-state business of a specified type."

The Treasury Department did not support the bill; instead, it recommended giving the states time to develop a solution "without Congressional assistance."

Floor Action

The Senate Aug. 20 passed S 2524, amended, by voice vote. A section exempting from taxation businesses which maintained offices within a state solely for the use of their sales agents was deleted on a 65-29 roll-call vote. The Senate agreed to an amendment establishing a 14-member commission of legislative, Federal and state officials to recommend legislation in the entire field of intergovernmental tax matters. (For voting, see charts p. 435-36)

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

J. Allen Frear Jr. (D Del.) -- Add Title II, creating a commission to study intergovernmental tax problems; Aug. 19. Voice vote.

Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.) -- Exempt businesses maintaining offices whose "sole" -- not "primary" -- purpose was to serve sales agents operating as described in the bill; Aug. 20. Voice. (Adoption of the Talmadge amendment (below) nullified Kerr's amendment.)

Herman E. Talmadge (D Ga.) -- Eliminate as a basis for tax exemption the maintenance of offices solely for salesmen; Aug. 20. Roll call, 65-29.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Albert Gore (D Tenn.) -- Substitute for the Frear amendment (above) a provision for studies by the Senate Finance, Commerce and Judiciary Committees; Aug. 19. Tabled by a 49-44 roll call. (The tabling motion initially was rejected by a 46-47 roll call, then reconsidered by a 48-46 roll call and agreed to.)

John J. Sparkman (D Ala.) -- Limit the effect of the bill to taxable years beginning before July 1, 1962; Aug. 20. Roll call, 37-57.

Russell B. Long (D La.) -- Exempt from taxation businesses whose gross sales within the state were less than $250,000; Aug. 20. Voice.

Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.) -- Strike Title I, the tax exemption provisions; Aug. 20. Roll call, 31-62.

DEBATE -- Aug. 19 -- Harry Flood Byrd (D Va.) -- "Unless immediate action is taken at this time it is feared that the states will amend their laws to further encroach upon interstate commerce as a result of the Supreme Court decisions."

McCarthy -- "The bill...constitutes an invasion of the taxing rights of the states."

John Carroll (D Colo.) -- "I warn my colleagues to consider what this measure would do to their states." It might easily cost them "hundreds of millions of dollars of revenue...I believe this measure should be put over and studied for a year."

Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) -- Disputed Gore's argument that small businesses would be hurt, rather than helped, by enactment of the bill.

House

COMMITTEE -- Judiciary.

HEARINGS -- None.

ACTION -- Aug. 18 reported H J Res 450 (H Rept 936).

Floor Action

The House Aug. 25, by voice vote, passed S 2524, amended by the substitution of the language of H J Res 450.

The House bill prohibited a state from imposing a tax on an interstate business unless the company or one of its agents had "maintained an office, salable inventory or other place of business" in the state during the tax year. The Senate bill had used the place from which orders were filled as the criterion of taxability. The House imposed a time limit on the effectiveness of the bill; the Senate did not. Both versions provided for further study of the situation, the House's through Congressional committees, the Senate's by establishing a three-partite commission.

Conference

REPORT -- The conference report on S 2524 (H Rept 1103) was filed Sept. 1. House conferees accepted the Senate definition prohibiting taxation if the only activity of a business was the solicitation of orders to be filled from outside the state. They also accepted a Senate provision prohibiting assessment, after enactment of the bill, of taxes on income earned before the enactment. A time limit on the effectiveness of the bill, contained in the original House version was dropped. Senate conferees accepted the House bill's designation of Congressional committees, rather than an independent commission, to further study the situation.

ACTION -- The House Sept. 2, by a 359-31 roll-call vote, and the Senate Sept. 3, by voice vote, agreed to the conference report. (For voting, see chart p. 390)

HOUSE DEBATE -- Sept. 2 -- Wright Patman (D Texas) -- No House hearings were held on the bill and it was not handled by the Ways and Means Committee which has jurisdiction over taxes. "The small business people are not asking for this particular law.... This bill will be a great advantage to interstate chains.... What is proposed here is permanent legislation."

Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.) -- Although the original time limit was dropped, the bill "is temporary in its nature because of the accompanying provision for a study."

William E. Miller (R N.Y.) -- "We have received literally thousands of communications from small businesses asking for this tax relief."

TARIFF AMENDMENTS

HR 2411 -- Reported by House Ways and Means Committee (H Rept 68) Feb. 24, 1959.
- Passed by voice vote of the House March 23.
- Reported, amended, by Senate Finance Committee (S Rept 665) Aug. 11.
- Passed, amended, by voice vote of the Senate Aug. 25. (For roll-call vote on amendment, see p. 438)
- House agreed to Senate amendments Sept. 3.

PL 86-262 -- Signed into law Sept. 14.

As signed into law, HR 2411 authorized the duty-free importation of tourist literature, models of inventions, various fine arts and valuable tapestries.

As passed by the House March 23, the bill amended only the tariff law on tourist literature.

The Senate Finance Committee, which reported the bill (S Rept 665) Aug. 11, amended it to provide for the free importation of models of inventions, original paintings and various other fine arts and handwoven tapestries, as well as tourist literature. The Committee also added an amendment increasing the tariff on imported wood moldings used in the construction of homes. This amendment was opposed by the State and Treasury Departments.

The Senate Aug. 25, by voice vote, passed HR 2411 with the committee amendments except for the increase in the tariff on wood moldings. An amendment to delete that provision was agreed to by a 64-23 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 438)

Sen. Ralph Yarborough (D Texas), sponsor of the floor amendment, Aug. 21 said he had received "more protests about this bill than any other bill since I have been in the Senate, except the labor bill." Clinton P. Anderson (D N.M.), who sponsored the Senate Finance Committee amendment increasing the tariff rate, said a Texas wood molding manufacturer moved his plant to Mexico so he could hire cheap labor and undersell U.S. manufacturers, taking advantage of a 1915 ruling that classified wood moldings as raw lumber.

The House agreed to the Senate amendments by voice vote Sept. 3, sending the bill to the White House.

RESERVE REQUIREMENTS

S 1120 -- Reported by Senate Banking and Currency Committee (S Rept 195) April 17, 1959.
- Passed, amended, by the Senate by voice vote May 13.
- Reported by House Banking and Currency Committee (H Rept 403) May 28.
- Passed, amended, by the House by voice vote July 1. (For roll-call vote on recommittal motion, see p. 374)
- Conference report (H Rept 651) agreed to by the House July 14 and the Senate July 15 by voice votes.

PL 86-114 -- Signed into law July 28.

The principal provision of S 1120, dubbed the "vault cash" bill, authorized the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System to permit member banks to count cash on hand toward meeting their reserve requirements. Cash held by all member banks in November 1958 totaled $2.2 billion; of that sum, $1.3 billion was held by 6,007 members designated as country banks, amounting to almost 25 percent of their required reserves. By permitting member banks, and particularly country banks, to count this cash in satisfying their reserve requirements, the Board of Governors intended to eliminate certain inequities in the reserve structure and to provide greater flexibility within the system.

S 1120 also amended the law under which reserve requirements of member banks are decreed by the Board of Governors within statutory ranges for each of three categories: country banks, reserve city banks, and central reserve city banks. For country banks, the legal range was from 7 to 14 percent of demand deposits; for 274 reserve city banks in 49 reserve cities, from 10 to 20 percent of demand deposits; and for 32 central reserve city banks in New York and Chicago, 13 to 26 percent. S 1120 lowered the minimum and maximum limits for central reserve city banks to 10 and 22 percent, respectively, and raised the maximum limit for reserve city banks from 20 to 22 percent. It also provided for termination of the "central reserve city" classification in three years, after which banks in that category would be grouped with reserve city banks.

PROVISIONS -- As enacted, S 1120:

Authorized the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System to permit member banks to "count all or part of their currency and coin as reserves."

Reduced the minimum and maximum reserve limits for central reserve city banks from 13 and 26 percent, respectively, to 10 and 22 percent of demand deposits, and raised the maximum limit for reserve city banks to 22 percent of demand deposits.

Authorized the Board to permit a reserve city or central reserve city member bank to carry lower reserves than other banks in the same city, based upon the nature of the bank's business rather than, as in the past, its geographical location.

Terminated, effective July 28, 1962, the "central reserve cities" classification.

Authorized the Board to designate which holding company affiliate (where there is more than one with respect to the same bank or group of banks) is to establish and maintain the reserves required by law.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency.

ACTION -- April 17 reported S 1120 (S Rept 195) with three provisions: those, as finally enacted, authorizing the application of vault cash to reserves and the lowering of reserve requirements for individual banks (the central reserve maximum was reduced to 20 percent in this version), and one terminating immediately the central reserve city classification. It was not the purpose of the bill, the report stated, "to interfere with the monetary policy objectives of the Federal Reserve Board."

Floor Action

The Senate passed S 1120 May 13, by voice vote, after agreeing, by voice vote, to an amendment by Sen. Prescott Bush (R Conn.) postponing for three years the termination of the central reserve city classification. Earlier Bush had modified his amendment, at the request of Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.), to include the provision respecting holding company reserves that was contained in the final version.

House

COMMITTEE -- Banking and Currency.

ACTION -- May 28 reported S 1120 (H Rept 403) in the form approved by the Senate, but minus the holding company provision. The report noted that the Board of Governors had testified they intended to put the "vault cash" provision "into effect gradually, so as to avoid the disturbing effect upon our economy that would result from suddenly increasing reserves by the $2 billion now held in vault cash." (The first step was taken Dec. 1.)

In a lengthy dissent, Rep. Wright Patman (D Texas) described S 1120 as the "bond giveaway" bill, contending it would result in transferring "to the private banks about $15 billion worth of U.S. bonds and other interest-bearing obligations of the United States which are now owned by the public." Reps. Henry S. Reuss (D Wis.) and Byron L. Johnson (D Colo.) opposed reduction of the maximum reserve requirement for central reserve city banks from 26 to 20 percent, saying "it is far better for the Federal Reserve to have the power and not need it, than to need the power and not have it."

Floor Action

The House July 1 passed S 1120 by voice vote, after rejecting, by a 60-309 roll-call vote, a motion to recommit the bill to the Banking and Currency Committee for further study. (For voting, see chart p. 374) An amendment by Rep. Reuss, raising the maximum reserve requirement for reserve city and central reserve city banks to 22 percent, was agreed to by voice vote.

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

Henry S. Reuss (D Wis.) -- Raise the ceiling on reserve requirements for reserve city banks from 20 to 22 percent of demand deposits; July 1. Voice vote.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Byron L. Johnson (D Colo.) -- Amend Reuss amendment by setting maximum at 26 percent; July 1. Standing, 29-74.

Johnson -- Add statement that "the purpose of this act is solely to permit the Board of Governors to remove inequities;" July 1. Standing, 37-71.

Wright Patman (D Texas) -- Delete all of the bill except the vault cash provision; July 1. Standing 30-100.

Patman -- Require a transfer of $15 billion in Government obligations from Federal Reserve banks to the Treasury; July 1. Voice.

Conference

Conferees on S 1120 agreed (H Rept 651) to accept the Javits holding company provision, added by the Senate, and the Reuss maximum reserve amendment, added by the House. The report was agreed to by the House July 14 and the Senate July 15, by voice votes.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT: Congress Aug. 26 completed action on another bill (HR 8160) liberalizing lending and borrowing powers of national banks. As signed into law Sept. 9 (PL 86-251), the bill: increased the ceiling on a bank's borrowing authority from 100 percent of capital to 100 percent of capital plus 50 percent of surplus; liberalized exceptions to the rule that a bank can lend no more than 10 percent of its capital and surplus to one borrower; liberalized some of the restrictions on real estate loans by national banks; and authorized appointment of an additional Deputy Comptroller of the Currency. Most of these provisions had been part of the Financial Institutions Act of 1957, passed by the Senate but never acted upon by the House. (1957 Almanac p. 675)

PUBLIC BUILDINGS ACT

HR 7645 --	Reported, amended, by House Public Works Committee (H Rept 557) June 17, 1959.
•	Passed, amended, by voice vote of the House July 8.
S 1654 --	Reported, amended, by Senate Public Works Committee (S Rept 694) Aug. 13.
HR 7645 --	Passed, amended, by voice vote of the Senate Aug. 25.
•	House agreed to Senate amendments Aug. 26.
PL 86-249 --	Signed into law Sept. 9.

HR 7645, the Public Buildings Act of 1959, vested in the Administrator of General Services authority for purchase, construction and alteration of Federal buildings, while reserving for Congress the right to disapprove of major projects. Existing law provided for Congressional review only through annual appropriations actions.

New legislation was required because authority for public building construction under existing law had been exhausted. The Senate and House versions of HR 7645 differed in only minor respects. The bill was backed by the Eisenhower Administration.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, the Public Buildings Act of 1959:

Vested with the General Services Administration sole authority to acquire, construct and alter most Federal buildings.

Required the GSA to submit to the Senate and House Public Works Committees lists of all proposed building projects.

Required the Committees' approval of new projects costing more than $100,000 and remodeling projects costing more than $200,000 before appropriations for them could be made.

Permitted the Committees to rescind their approval if no appropriation was made within one year after initial approval of a project.

Set a ceiling of 30 on the number of pending projects, costing more than $100,000 apiece, which could be kept on approval status in the absence of an appropriation.

Required the GSA to report to Congress annually on all projects and to conduct a continuing survey of Federal building needs.

Background

Prior to enactment of HR 7645, the basic authority for construction of Federal buildings was embodied in the Public Buildings Act of 1926. Under the 1926 act and its amendments, about $620 million was authorized and appropriated. The last such appropriation was in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act for fiscal 1959.

After World War II Congress made two major legislative changes in the Federal building program.

The Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 established the General Services Administration and centralized Government housekeeping responsibilities in the new agency. (1949 Almanac p. 692)

The Lease-Purchase Act of 1954 authorized use of private capital to finance construction of Federal buildings and provided for Government repayment over a 10-25 year period. (1954 Almanac p. 402) That Act expired July 22, 1957 and all activity under it was cut off in 1958. (1957 Almanac p. 684; 1958 Almanac p. 348)

SEA TRANSPORTATION

S 990 -- Reported by Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee June 10, 1959 (S Rept 385).

HR 4002 -- Reported by House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee July 14 (H Rept 652).

- Passed by the House by voice vote July 20.
- Passed, amended, by the Senate by voice vote Aug. 6.
- Conference report (H Rept 990) agreed to Sept. 9 by a 53-34 roll-call vote of the Senate (see p. 444) and Sept. 10 by voice vote of the House.

P. L. 86-315 -- Signed into law Sept. 21.

Congress in 1959 again refused to endorse a proposal by Sen. John J. Williams (R Del.) to curtail sea-going junketing by Members of Congress and Government officials. A similar prohibition covering travel on railroads and airlines had been law for some time.

Williams proposed banning free or cut-rate travel by Government employees and officials on ships flying the U.S. flag but he would have permitted the Government to contract for lower rates on transporting Federal employees on official business. The proposal was offered as an amendment to a relatively minor bill (HR 4002) which removed statutory voyage limitations on ships purchased from the Federal Government for exclusive use on the Great Lakes. HR 4002 was specifically designed to permit a Lake Erie passenger vessel, the S.S. Aquarama, to expand its operations to Atlantic coastal ports during the months when tourist activity on the Great Lakes is slack.

The Williams amendment was first accepted by the Senate by voice vote but was subsequently knocked out of the final version of HR 4002 by a Senate-House conference committee on grounds that it was not germane to the original bill and would have broader effects than was intended. The Senate Sept. 9 adopted the conference report by a 53-34 roll-call vote over the objections of Williams. (For voting, see chart p. 444) The House adopted the conference report Sept. 10 by voice vote.

The ban on sea-going junkets contained in the Williams amendment also was agreed to by the Senate in 1958, during debate on a bill authorizing Federal subsidies for the construction of two superliners. It was deleted by a conference committee, however, before the measure was signed into law (PL 85-526). Hearings were held by the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee on a separate bill incorporating the provisions of the Williams amendment, but no further action was taken. (1958 Almanac p. 249)

AIR FORCE LAND TRANSFER

HR 2247 -- Reported by House Armed Services Committee Aug. 4, 1959 (H Rept 764).

- Passed by the House Aug. 31 by a 205-94 roll-call vote. (See p. 388)
- Reported by Senate Armed Services Committee Sept. 3 (S Rept 896).
- Passed by the Senate Sept. 9 by voice vote.

PL 86-310 -- Signed into law Sept. 21.

Despite objections that the Federal Government was giving more than it would get, Congress in 1959 passed a bill authorizing the conveyance of 4.7 acres of Air Force property to Sacramento County, Calif., in return for the county's agreement to process sewage from certain Air Force buildings. The property included a sewage treatment plant built by the Air Force and leased to the county since 1950.

The House Aug. 31 passed HR 2247 by a 205-94 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 388) Debate centered on how fair the trade would actually be. Rep. Thomas B. Curtis (R Mo.) said the amount the Government would have to pay to a private sewage company or to a municipality in lieu of sewer taxes "would be infinitesimal compared to the value of the plant and land.... The request is essentially to benefit a large, private home construction project." But Rep. John E. Moss (D Calif.) countered: "This is not giveaway legislation. The Federal Government is getting more...than it gives" and the Department of the Air Force approves the bill. Sacramento County "has greatly improved the capacity of the Camp Kohler plant, spending an estimated $485,000," he said.

After being told by Sen. Wayne Morse (D Ore.) Sept. 9 that the Government would "get a fair trade," the Senate passed the bill by voice vote without debate.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, HR 2247:

Authorized the Secretary of the Air Force to give Sacramento County, Calif., 4.7 acres of land and the right to convey sewage over additional land.

Made the transfer subject to an agreement by which the county would process sewage for certain Air Force buildings and accept requirements for possible additional service. The property would revert to the Air Force if these conditions were not fulfilled.

HIGHWAY PROGRAM

HR 8678 — Reported by House Public Works Committee (H Rept 1120) Sept. 1, 1959.
- Passed by the House, amended, Sept. 3 by a 243-162 roll-call vote. (See p. 390)
- Reported by Senate Public Works (S Rept 902) and Finance (S Rept 903) Committees Sept. 4.
- Passed by the Senate, amended, Sept. 5 by a 70-11 roll-call vote. (See p. 442)
- House Sept. 9 agreed to Senate amendments by voice vote.

PL 86-342 — Signed by the President Sept. 21.

Congress in 1959 enacted emergency revenue legislation to keep work on the 41,000-mile National Interstate and Defense Highway System from falling too far behind schedule.

The Interstate System, on which major work began in 1957, was scheduled for completion in 1972. By 1959 it became clear the program faced two major financing problems. The first involved long-term financing. When Congress in 1956 set up financing and work schedules, it was estimated the Federal Government's 90 percent share of Interstate System costs would be $25 billion. Accordingly, Congress authorized payments of $25 billion to the states over the life of the program and imposed various taxes to cover the $25 billion obligation. But new estimates in 1958 and 1959 showed costs would be far greater than anticipated, and the Federal share would actually come to $36 billion. That meant that unless Congress authorized an additional $11 billion in payments to the states (and raised additional revenues to cover them), the Interstate System could not be completed.

A more immediate problem was an impending deficit for fiscal years 1960-64 in the Highway Trust Fund. (The deficit was caused by special spending authorized in 1958.) The Highway Trust Fund had been established in 1956 to receive the revenues earmarked for Federal-state highways and to pay out the Federal obligations. Under the 1956 law, the Trust Fund was not permitted to operate at a deficit. It was clear in 1959 that unless additional revenues were found, or the "pay-as-you-go" requirement suspended, the Federal authorization for the Interstate System would have to be cut for several fiscal years, bringing the total program below even the $25 billion pace authorized in 1956.

By common consent, there was no action in 1959 to solve the long-range problem. Its solution was postponed until at least January 1961 when the Commerce Department was scheduled to send Congress two major studies, covering interstate construction costs and the Highway Trust Fund revenue structure.

To cover immediate deficits, President Eisenhower in 1959 asked Congress to raise the Federal gasoline tax from 3 cents to 4½ cents a gallon for fiscal 1960-64. Congressional Democrats balked, saying additional highway-user taxes would be unfair. After a session of controversy, Congress voted to raise the tax 1 cent for 21 months, ending June 30, 1961, and to divert part of various automobile taxes from the Treasury's general fund to the Highway Trust Fund in fiscal 1962-64. The new revenues were expected to bring $3,472,000,000 into the trust fund and to permit interstate work to go forward only a bit more slowly than the $25 billion pace previously scheduled.

PROVISIONS -- As enacted, HR 8678, the Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1959, contained these provisions:

TITLE I — Reduced the fiscal 1961 Federal allocation for the Interstate System from $2.5 billion to $2 billion because revenues would be insufficient to support the original authorization.

Approved the cost estimates for the Interstate System, submitted to Congress Jan. 7, 1958 (HDoc 300, 85th Congress, 2nd session), as the basis for making apportionments to the individual states for fiscal 1962.

Directed the Secretary of Commerce to study and report to Congress by Jan. 14, 1960 on the advisability of extending the Interstate System to Alaska and Hawaii.

Exempted portions of the Interstate System within the existing boundaries of incorporated cities, or in areas already zoned for commercial or industrial use by state law, from the national standards of billboard regulation. (Under the 1958 law, exemption of such portions had been left to negotiations between the states and the Secretary of Commerce.)

Increased from $10 million to $13 million the fiscal 1960 authorization for bridges over Federal dams.

Increased from $16 million to $18 million the fiscal 1960 authorization for construction and repair of parkways on Federal lands, in order to permit relocation of the Natchez Trace Parkway.

Permitted the Secretary of Commerce to use a $30 million catastrophe-repair fund not only for Federal-aid highways, but also for repair of any highways on Federal lands; for the latter, the Secretary could pay the entire repair cost, instead of the 50 percent to which he was limited for repairs to Federal-aid roads (including the interstate) not on Federal lands.

TITLE II — From Oct. 1, 1959 through June 30, 1961, imposed a temporary, 1-cent a gallon increase in the Federal tax on gasoline, diesel and special motor fuels.

For the three fiscal years 1962-64, diverted 5 percentage points of the Federal excise tax on new automobiles and 5 percentage points of the Federal excise tax on auto parts and accessories from the Treasury's general fund into the Highway Trust fund.

For tax purposes, effective Jan. 1, 1960, redefined a "producer" of gasoline so that independent wholesale distributors would not have to pay the 4-cent gasoline tax until they sold their gasoline to service stations or other customers; previously, they had to pay it at the time they bought their stocks. (This provision was expected to produce a $33 million revenue loss to the Government in the first year of operation and losses of $3 million to $11 million thereafter.)

Imposed a 1 cent a gallon tax on gasoline held by independent wholesalers as floor stocks on Oct. 1, 1959.

Background

REFERENCES -- 13-year Highway Program (1956 Almanac p. 398); Federal Highways, Billboard Regulation (1958 Almanac p. 140)

Congress in 1944 enacted legislation looking toward eventual construction by the states, with Federal aid, of a 40,000-mile National System of Interstate Highways, linking all vital centers of the Nation. The first money authorization was not provided until 1952 -- for fiscal years 1954-55, at $25 million annually. (1952 Almanac p. 331) A second authorization, for $175 million annually in fiscal 1956-57, was made in 1954. (1954 Almanac p. 499)

It was not until 1956, however, that Congress gave the program a long-term financing and construction schedule.

Under the 1956 law (PL 84-627) the program's name was changed to National Interstate and Defense Highway System. Congress approved Federal payments of 90 percent of the construction costs, with the states paying 10 percent. The entire cost was estimated at $27.6 billion, making the Federal share $25 billion. (The 1956 law also authorized an additional 1,000 miles, bringing the Interstate System to 41,000 miles but the law specified that the additional mileage was not to be included in cost computations until later. The actual cost of this additional mileage was estimated in 1959 at $1 billion, but this is not taken into account in any of the figures given below.)

The 1956 law stated that construction was to be completed in 1972. To effectuate this, Congress authorized $25 billion in payments to the states and set up a 13-year schedule, covering fiscal 1957-69, during which the states could commit the entire $25 billion. The amounts the states were permitted to commit each year were called allocations. Since completion of work and the need for payment would necessarily lag behind commitment of funds, actual payments for work blueprinted in any fiscal year would take place several years after that fiscal year. Thus, actual payments for work allocated from 1957-69 were scheduled to end only in 1972.

Revenue Provisions

To finance the $25 billion Federal obligation, Congress established the Highway Trust Fund, to draw revenues in fiscal 1957-72 from various new and old Federal highway-user taxes. The fund was to finance not only the Interstate System, but also the Federal Government's 50 percent share of the cost of Federal-aid primary, secondary and urban roads (so-called ABC roads). Revenues assigned to the Highway Trust Fund, it was estimated, would bring in $37-$38 billion in the 16-year period.

The so-called Byrd (D Va.) amendment to the 1956 law specified that the Highway Trust Fund could not operate at a deficit at any time. If a deficit threatened, the Secretary of Commerce was to reduce apportionments to the individual states so that obligations could be paid when they came due. The law gave ABC roads first call on money in the Trust Fund; cuts to avoid future deficits were therefore likely to be made entirely from Interstate System apportionments. (1956 Almanac p. 398)

1958 Action

In 1958 new cost estimates revealed that to complete the Interstate System, the Federal allocation would have to be raised to $36 billion.

Congress in 1958 boosted Interstate allocations by $800 million for fiscal 1959-61, but did not vote additional revenues. (See table above) In addition, as an anti-recession measure, Congress increased fiscal 1959 ABC authorizations by $400 million. To do this, it had to suspend the Byrd amendment as it applied to fiscal 1959 and 1960, since it was expected that in later years, when the states asked payments for commitments made for fiscal 1959-60, the Highway Trust Fund would not have enough money to pay. (1958 Almanac p. 140)

The net long and short-term results were outlined by Federal Highway Administrator Bertram D. Tallamy in hearings Feb. 26-27, 1959 before the Senate Public Works Public Roads Subcommittee, and later in a document sent to Congress by the Treasury Department (H Doc 92).

The Highway Trust Fund, he said, would net $38.8 billion in fiscal 1957-72. Of this, about $15 billion would go for ABC roads, leaving $23 billion for the Interstate System -- not only less than the $25.8 billion already allocated but also $13 billion less than the $36 billion actually needed to complete the system.

In the short run the Highway Trust Fund faced a $490 million deficit in fiscal 1960 and large deficits for the three succeeding years. One reason was the increased spending authorized in 1958. A second was revenues were not coming into the trust fund at the anticipated pace; the fund would net less before 1964 than had been expected, and more after 1964 than had been expected. To prevent the immediate anticipated deficits, the Secretary of Commerce, under the Byrd amendment, would have to reduce interstate apportionments to nothing for fiscal 1961 and to $500 million for fiscal 1962. Additional, though not so drastic, reductions would be necessary in succeeding years.

President's Request

In his Jan. 19 Budget Message President Eisenhower asked Congress to raise the Federal gasoline and other fuels taxes 1½ cents for fiscal years 1960-64, enough, he said, to meet the deficits.

The President's request met sharp and unfavorable response from many sources. State officials said the increase would drain the cream from one of the few good tax sources remaining to the states; highway-user groups said Federal highway-user taxes already exceeded the cost of Federal road programs, but much of the revenue was going into the general fund to be expended for general purposes.

As early as Sept. 16, 1958, the American Automobile Assn. had adopted a resolution opposing motor fuel tax increases; similarly, the American Petroleum Institute Dec. 27, 1958 said Federal revenue from highway-user taxes was $3.6 billion in 1958 but only $2.1 billion of that had gone into the Highway Trust Fund. The President's proposal was also criticized by the American Trucking Assns. Inc. and by Sen. Albert Gore (D Tenn.), author of the 1956 highway law.

Gov. Price Daniel (D Texas) Jan. 25 said 28 Governors had agreed to join him in opposing President Eisenhower's proposal. House Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas) Jan. 20 said the tax proposal stood little chance of adoption because the states felt "they should have that field of taxation -- or what's left of it."

When no highway legislation had emerged after four months of the session, President Eisenhower repeated his highway tax request. In a special message to Congress May 13, he rejected such alternative financing proposals as suspension of the Byrd amendment or diversion of the automobile excise tax to the Highway Trust Fund.

The same day, Sen. Richard L. Neuberger (D Ore.), supporting the President's request in a floor speech, said Governors of 34 states had "exerted strong pressure" on the Senate Public Works Public Roads Subcommittee not to obey the President. One of those mentioned was the Governor of his own state, Mark Hatfield (R).

House

The House Public Works Committee May 5-7 held hearings on HR 5950, sponsored by Roads Subcommittee Chairman George H. Fallon (D Md.), a co-author of the 1956 law. The bill raised the interstate allocation for fiscal 1962 to $2.5 billion. (Financing provisions were to be added later by the Ways and Means Committee.)

Discussion centered on whether allocations should be boosted to the full $36 billion by 1969, so the Interstate System could be completed in 1972, or whether the increase in allocations should be scheduled for after 1969, necessitating a stretch-out of the target completion date. If the former were done, additional money would have to be raised by new taxes imposed before 1972; if the latter, money could be provided merely by keeping the Highway Trust Fund (and the taxes already feeding it) in existence beyond 1972.

Federal Highway Administrator Tallamy and nearly all other witnesses agreed no long-range allocation or revenue changes should be made before 1961, when the two studies of the program would become available. Tallamy, reporting on interstate progress, said a recent report (H Doc 74) showed construction was completed or under way on 11,463 miles of the system, about 28 percent. Preliminary surveys and plans were completed or underway on an additional 16,843 miles, he said.

Under Secretary of Commerce John J. Allen Jr. (Ex-Rep. R Calif. 1947-59) opposed HR 5950 as likely to increase immediate deficits. For positions taken by public organizations see Revenue Hearings, below.

REIMBURSEMENT ISSUE

The Committee May 19-20 also held hearings on HR 6303, sponsored by Chairman Charles A. Buckley (D N.Y.). The bill authorized Federal reimbursement to the states of $4,295,600,000 for 11,000 miles of roads built wholly at state expense from Aug. 7, 1947 to June 30, 1957 and later designated as part of the Interstate System. Tallamy endorsed the principle but suggested postponing a decision until the System was completed. The 1956 highway law had left the matter for future decision by Congress.

BILLS APPROVED

The Public Works Committee May 24 approved HR 5950 by a 24-10 vote and June 3 approved HR 6303, both amended. As approved, HR 5950 raised interstate allocations for fiscal 1962 to $2.5 billion and suspended the Byrd amendment for fiscal 1961 and 1962. HR 6303 was amended to reimburse the states for roads built between Aug. 7, 1947 and enactment of the bill. (Neither bill was ultimately reported.)

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- June 24 -- President Eisenhower repeated his 1½-cent tax increase request. A report by Tallamy issued with the President's statement said 25 states would have to suspend letting contracts by the end of the year unless the financing problem was solved.

June 25 -- During Senate debate on the corporate and excise tax extension bill (HR 7523), Sen. Neuberger offered an amendment raising the gasoline tax 1½ cents through July 1, 1961. It was rejected, 33-46. Sen. Gore offered an amendment channeling certain percentages of truck, bus, trailer, lubricating oil and auto parts taxes from the general fund into the Highway Trust Fund, bringing the latter $964 million. It was rejected, 32-47. (For voting, see charts p. 420-21)

Revenue Hearings

With Fallon's bill (HR 5950) before it, the House Ways and Means Committee July 22-24 held highway revenue hearings. Major public organizations took these stands before Ways and Means or, earlier, at the Public Works Committee hearings:

The American Road Builders Assn. and the American Assn. of State Highway Officials endorsed HR 5950, opposing a stretch-out. The National Good Roads Assn. took the same position and also said it favored repealing the Byrd amendment, financing additional costs by borrowing, cutting other Government expenditures and plugging "notorious" tax loopholes.

The American Municipal Assn. supported HR 5950 and repeal of the Byrd amendment, with financing through deficit spending pending the 1961 studies. The Associated General Contractors of America endorsed HR 5950. The American Trucking Assns. Inc. opposed a stretch-out or tax increases, favoring deficit spending pending the 1961 studies.

The American Farm Bureau Federation opposed any gasoline or other highway tax increases as well as deficit financing. It recommended a stretch-out lasting as long as it would take the Highway Trust Fund to raise enough money if it were continued in existence beyond 1972.

American Automobile Assn. -- Opposed allocations cutbacks for fiscal 1961 and 1962, opposed increasing the fuel tax or diverting any taxes from the general fund to the Highway Trust Fund, and favored issuing short-term bonds pending the 1961 studies.

National Oil Jobbers Council -- Favored using all highway-user taxes for the Highway Trust Fund.

National Congress of Petroleum Retailers -- Members were "overwhelmingly opposed" to a gasoline tax increase.

National Assn. of Motor Bus Operators -- Opposed a gasoline tax increase, favored one or all of these three measures: sale of revenue bonds, repeal of Byrd amendment, use of all highway-user taxes for Highway Trust Fund.

Assn. of American Railroads -- Favored adhering to the Byrd amendment, with a program stretch-out beyond 1972, a reduction of the Federal share of 90 percent or an increase in highway-user taxes, preferably the latter; said diesel fuel taxes should be increased more than motor-car gasoline taxes and the special tax on heavy vehicles (trucks) should be increased from $1.50 to $2 per 1,000 pounds.

National Grange -- Opposed fuel tax increases, favored revenue bond issue.

AFL-CIO -- Favored permitting the Highway Trust Fund to borrow from the general fund to keep the program on schedule.

COMMITTEES DISAGREE

The Ways and Means Committee July 29 voted 15-10 for a new highway financing plan. The action set off a tug-of-war between Ways and Means and Public Works that was resolved only a few days before the session ended.

The July 29 Ways and Means plan called for boosting interstate allocations to $36 billion but stretching them out through fiscal 1975, a six-year drop behind the target date. To pay for this, as well as the $19 billion ABC road program, the Committee proposed extending the current financing of the Highway Trust Fund, permitting it to float a $1 billion revenue bond issue and diverting 2 percentage points of the Federal auto excise tax to the trust fund in fiscal 1961-64. Altogether that would bring in $53 billion (including existing revenues) during 1957-76, almost enough to cover all costs. Two GOP members, Richard M. Simpson (Pa.) and John W. Byrnes (Wis.), called the bond plan a "raid on the Treasury."

The Public Works Committee Aug. 6 rejected the Ways and Means plan. Instead, it recommended a four-year stretch-out, with $36 billion in allocations to be completed in 1973.

In its turn, Ways and Means Aug. 13 rejected the Public Works action and voted 16-9 for a compromise plan that, ultimately, was the one passed by Congress. (For provisions, see Bill Reported, below.)

The Aug. 13 Ways and Means plan was incorporated in a bill (HR 8678) introduced Aug. 14 by Fallon and referred to the Public Works Committee. For two weeks, however, Public Works Democrats balked at approving the bill, since it implied a six-year stretch-out of the interstate program. An additional complication was provided by Chairman Buckley's championship of the reimbursement principle: he favored adding a provision stating that Congress ultimately intended to reimburse the states for the roads mentioned in his bill, HR 6303.

A compromise worked out by Speaker Rayburn was rejected Aug. 25 by a 12-13 vote of the Ways and Means Committee, which then threatened to take its financing plan directly to the House floor. President Eisenhower issued a statement calling the Committee plan "a step in the right direction," but he criticized its tax-diversion provisions. (For text, see p. 660)

In secret caucus Aug. 27, the Public Works Democrats yielded to the Ways and Means Committee. Rep. Robert E. Jones (D Ala.) said the action was "an affirmation that we are going to stand by the Speaker and try to get a Democratic bill."

BILL REPORTED

The Public Works Committee Sept. 1 approved the Ways and Means financing provisions, 26-6, added a reimbursement provision, 25-7, and reported HR 8678 (H Rept 1120). Sections of the report dealing with financing (Title II) were written by Ways and Means. Provisions:

TITLE I -- Reduced the fiscal 1961 allocation for the Interstate System from the $2.5 billion provided in the 1958 law to $2 billion.

Approved the interstate cost estimates that had been submitted to Congress Jan. 7, 1958 as the basis for making apportionments to the individual states for fiscal 1962. (Under the 1956 law, Congress stated that the annual Federal allocation was to be apportioned among the states in such a way as to bring all work to an end uniformly in 1972. New estimates of the cost of the entire program and the rate of progress in each state were to be made every few years and apportionments adjusted to get work in all states on a uniform schedule. Additional new estimates were to be submitted in 1961, 1966, 1967, 1968.)

Declared it the intention of Congress to reimburse the states equitably, in money or mileage, for the costs of roads, bridges and tunnels contracted for or built wholly at state expense between Aug. 2, 1947 and June 30, 1957 and then designated as part of the Interstate System.

TITLE II -- Through June 30, 1961, raised the Federal gasoline, diesel and special motor fuels taxes 1 cent a gallon. The increase did not apply to gas used for certain specified non-highway purposes, or by local transit systems or farmers on the farm. (They were to pay the increase but it would be refunded.)

For fiscal 1962-64, diverted 5 percentage points of the Federal auto excise tax and 5 percentage points of the Federal auto parts and accessories taxes from the general fund to the Highway Trust Fund. (The 10 percent auto and 8 percent parts-accessories taxes were scheduled to drop to 7 percent and 5 percent, respectively, June 30, 1960. But this did not affect the revenue put into the Highway Trust Fund by this provision, since neither tax was dropping below 5 percent.)

For tax purposes, effective Jan. 1, 1960, redefined a "producer" of gasoline so independent wholesale distributors would not have to pay the 4 cent tax until they sold their gasoline to service stations or other customers. Previously, they paid at the time they bought their gasoline from actual producers. That meant they had to carry the tax cost during the period between purchase and ultimate sale; and also that they paid tax on gasoline which, while they were holding it in inventory, was reduced through seepage and evaporation. (The Ways and Means Committee said the average wholesaler, with the tax raised to 4 percent, would have to pay $960 a year in taxes on gasoline he never sold because of evaporation and seepage. The Committee said large integrated oil firms that owned their own service stations enjoyed an unfair advantage under existing law, since they did not pay the tax until a motorist bought gasoline from a service station pump; they therefore avoided paying a tax on stock lost through seepage, etc.)

Imposed a 1 cent a gallon tax on gasoline held as floor stocks by independent wholesalers on Sept. 1, 1959. This ensured that the gasoline, when sold, would be taxed at the full new 4 cent rate.

MINORITY VIEWS

In supplemental views, 10 Public Works Committee Democrats protested the gasoline tax increase as an unfair additional burden on the American motorist. They said the Administration's "underlying purpose" in asking for the tax increase was to "provide a surplus in the general budget at the expense of the highway user."

Other supplemental views, signed by six Republicans and one Democrat, criticized their Committee's plan to reimburse the states for state-built roads. They said such reimbursement should be left to the determination of future sessions of Congress which will be faced with the actual problem of paying the states.

The report included a recapitulation of the Ways and Means Committee's report on the financing provisions which included supplemental views of six Republicans who said they had "lent their reluctant support" to the financing plan as the only proposal that could be agreed upon by a majority of the Committee's membership. Separate views of Richard M. Simpson (R Pa.) and Albert H. Bosch (R N.Y.) criticized the plan because it failed "to maintain pay-as-you-go highway financing," diverted general fund revenues to the Highway Trust Fund and constituted a "prejudgment of future fiscal policy...inimical to debt retirement and conducive to deficit financing in fiscal years 1960 through 1964."

Floor Action

The House Sept. 3, by a 243-162 roll-call vote, passed HR 8678. (For voting, see chart p. 390) Only one change was made in the Committee bill -- the reimbursement provision, which was a Public Works Committee amendment to the bill as introduced, was defeated on a 98-170 teller vote. HR 8678 was considered under a closed rule.

Senate

The Senate Finance Committee Sept. 4 held a hearing on Title II of HR 8678. Federal Highway Administrator Tallamy submitted a chart showing that, if the bill were passed, and if in addition the taxes supporting the Highway Trust Fund were extended from 1972 through 1976, the Interstate System could be finished and paid for by 1977 at the full $36 billion level required. Hawaii's two Senators, Hiram L. Fong (R) and Oren E. Long (D), submitted a request for extension of interstate roads to Hawaii.

Chief issues at the hearing, however, were:

(1) Financing Adequacy. Tallamy said that since the new revenues HR 8678 provided for fiscal 1960 would not begin accumulating until late in the fiscal year, it would be necessary for the Trust Fund to borrow $359 million from the Treasury immediately to meet pressing commitments, and to repay the money later in the fiscal year. Sen. Albert Gore (D Tenn.), however, said the bill would produce revenues for fiscal 1960 of only $333 million, against a predicted deficit of $490 million, and that the Highway Trust Fund would therefore have to default on vouchers to the states for $157 million. Tallamy said he would "carry vouchers over to the extent of about two or two-and-a-half weeks' business from this fiscal year (1960) to the next fiscal year (1961) and then taper off during the course of the next fiscal year."

(2) Contract Controls. Tallamy said the Bureau of Public Roads would have to impose "contract controls" on the fiscal 1960 apportionments to lower them so that future defaults would not be necessary. Under the 1956 highway law, commitment and payment of money proceeded as follows: (a) Congress authorized an allocation for a given fiscal year; (b) two years before that year, the Bureau of Public Roads apportioned the allocation among the individual states; if it determined that the Trust Fund would not have enough money to meet obligations from the apportionment when they came due, the bureau under the Byrd amendment was permitted, before making the initial apportionment, to reduce it below the level allocated by Congress, to whatever level the Trust Fund would be able to support; (c) once Congress approved the apportionment, it became a binding commitment on the Federal Government, and the states could proceed to let contracts in the full amount of their apportionments; (d) each contract was subject to approval by the bureau for design standards and other technical matters; (e) when the contracts were completed, the Highway Trust Fund paid the states the Federal share on the contracts.

For fiscal 1960, Tallamy explained, Congress had allocated $2.5 billion and the bureau had apportioned the full amount. But when it came time to pay, the Trust Fund would have only $1.8 billion; the Administration had therefore decided not to approve contracts for fiscal 1960 in excess of $1.8 billion; and during the year, it would require the states to place contracts at a pace that could be supported from week to week by the Trust Fund when the obligations became due for payment.

Gore argued that this plan was illegal. The Administration, he said, did have authority under the Byrd amendment to make initial apportionments lower than the allocations authorized by Congress. But once an apportionment was made, it was binding, and the Administration had no legal right to restrict state commitments further by refusing to approve individual contracts that were technically adequate.

SENATE BILL REPORTED

The Senate Public Works Committee, which held no 1959 hearings on highway bills, Sept. 4 reported (S Rept 902) Title I of HR 8678. The Finance Committee Sept. 4 reported (S Rept 903) Title II. The bill was the same as the House-passed version with these changes:

TITLE I — Contained new provisions (1) directing the Secretary of Commerce to study whether the Interstate System should be extended to Alaska and Hawaii and report by Jan. 14, 1960; (2) exempting portions of the Interstate System within existing boundaries of incorporated cities, or already in areas state-zoned for industrial and commercial use, from the national billboard control policy; (3) raising the fiscal 1960 authorization for construction and repair of parkways on Federal lands from $16 million to $18 million; (4) permitting the Secretary of Commerce to use a $30 million disaster-repair fund not only for Federal-aid highways but for any highways on Federal lands, and to pay the entire repair costs for such highways.

TITLE II — Changed the date of imposition of the 1 cent a gallon gasoline tax increase and of the floor stocks tax to Oct. 1, 1959 and permitted, instead of required, wholesale distributors to qualify as producers.

The Finance Committee said the bill would add $333 million in fiscal 1960 to the Highway Trust Fund; $577 million in 1961; $877 million in 1962; $831 million in 1963; and $854 million in 1964 -- a total of $3,472,000,000; that, coupled with the $38.8 billion under existing law, would give the Trust Fund $42.3 billion income from 1957-72, enough to pay for $15 billion in ABC roads and $27.4 billion in interstate roads (which could be allocated through 1971).

Before approving Title II, the Finance Committee voted 4-12 against a Gore amendment to rescind 1 percent of all fiscal 1960 appropriations and divert the sum to the Highway Fund; 5-11 against a Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) proposal to cut the gas tax increase to a half cent; and 7-9 against a proposal to repeal the 4 percent income tax dividend credit and put five percentage points of the auto excise tax into the Trust Fund immediately. Gore, Russell B. Long (D La.), Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.) and Douglas, in dissenting views in S Rept 903, opposed the bill because, they said, it would require a program stretch-out, a $157 million default in fiscal 1960, and would impose unfair additional highway-user taxes.

In a dissent in S Rept 902, Public Works members John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.), Thomas E. Martin (R Iowa),

Winston L. Prouty (R Vt.), Hugh Scott (R Pa.) and Richard L. Neuberger (D Ore.) opposed the billboard amendment, which was sponsored by Sen. Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.)

Floor Action

The Senate passed the Finance-Public Works version of HR 8678 Sept. 5 by a 70-11 roll-call vote. Three attempts to change the financing provisions, and a Neuberger amendment to strike the billboard provision, were rejected, all on roll calls. (For voting, see chart p. 442) The only floor amendment agreed to was an increase in the authorization for bridges over Federal dams.

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.) -- Increase from $10 million to $13 million the fiscal 1960 authorization for construction of bridges over Federal dams; Sept. 5. Voice vote.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Albert Gore (D Tenn.) -- Repeal the current 4 percent tax credit on dividend income and transfer in fiscal 1961-64 certain portions of the Federal excise tax on new cars from the general revenues to the Highway Trust Fund; Sept. 5. Roll-call vote, 35-50.

Pat McNamara (D Mich.) -- Effective in fiscal 1961, reduce the Federal excise tax on automobiles in three steps, cutting it to 5 percent by fiscal 1963; Sept. 5. Roll call, 7-77.

Eugene J. McCarthy (D Minn.) -- Repeal the tax credit on dividend income and divert to the Highway Trust Fund in fiscal 1961-64 certain portions of the Federal tax on autos, in addition to raising the gasoline tax; Sept. 5. Roll call, 40-43.

Richard L. Neuberger (D Ore.) -- Delete provision exempting commercial and industrial areas in cities from the 1958 Federal-Aid Highway Act's billboard regulation provision; Sept. 5. Roll call, 39-44.

"SLOW-UP" CRITICIZED

DEBATE -- Sept. 5 -- Gore -- The bill provides for a "severe slow-up" of the highway program which means the Interstate Highway System would not be completed until 1977, five years later than scheduled. His proposal to divert 40 percent of the auto excise tax to the Highway Trust Fund in fiscal 1961 would result in a fund increase of $520 million, more than enough to make up the fund's current $493 million deficit. Repeal of the tax credit would bring into the general revenues $335 million.

Long (La.) -- The dividend income tax credit is a "completely unnecessary, unjustified tax advantage" for "wealthy people." If more money is needed, repeal of the credit is "the obvious way to get it."

Hugh Scott (R Pa.) -- Instead of trying to close tax loopholes, the Senate should "face the basic problem" and let highway users pay for better highways.

Neuberger -- "We have never had any doctrine of taxation to the effect that every dollar collected should go to the particular purpose to which it is related."

Thomas H. Kuchel (R Calif.) -- Acceptance of the Gore amendment would put the Nation deeper into debt.

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- Sept. 4 -- House Public Works Chairman Buckley appointed an 18-member Special Subcommittee on the Federal-Aid Highway Program, to investigate alleged extravagance and routing irregularities on the Interstate System. John A. Blatnik (D Minn.) was appointed chairman, with Buckley a member ex-officio.

Final Action

The bill was cleared for the President Sept. 9 when the House, by voice vote, agreed to the Senate amendments. The President signed the bill (PL 86-342) Sept. 21 but said it would not solve the immediate financing problem and indicated contract controls would be imposed for fiscal 1960. He also said he had ordered his special assistant for public works planning, Maj. Gen. John S. Bragdon (ret.), to study the financing problem.

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- Sept. 15 -- Congress cleared the fiscal 1960 mutual security appropriation bill (HR 8385 -- see story p. 191) which carried an authorization permitting the Highway Trust Fund to borrow $359 million from the Treasury to meet immediate commitments. During debate on the bill Sept. 14, the Senate agreed to a Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) amendment that struck out language specifying that the $359 million was to be repaid the Treasury in fiscal 1960.

Sept. 16 -- Gore wrote the President opposing imposition of contract controls and saying there would be a $157 million default in fiscal 1960.

Oct. 6 -- The Bureau of Public Roads, Commerce Secretary Frederick H. Mueller said Oct. 11, had ordered contract controls for fiscal 1960. Despite Congress' allocation of $2.5 billion for interstate roads in that year and apportionments already made in the same amount, the bureau would permit the states to commit only $1.8 billion and, during the year, it would require the states to commit work at a pace scheduled by the bureau. Mueller said states that wished to commit work at the full $2.5 billion level of apportionments "may elect to do so" but with the "clear written understanding" that they could not collect for such additional commitments until the Highway Trust Fund had enough money to meet them -- not before late 1963 at the earliest.

Oct. 9 -- In a letter to Gore, the President said the Administration "fully intends promptly to honor bills presented to it by the various states" during fiscal 1960. He also said that the condition of the Highway Trust Fund permitted no alternative to the imposition of contract controls for fiscal 1960, but that if Congress in 1960 agreed "to provide, in an acceptable manner," additional revenues, the controls could be lifted.

Oct. 12 -- Rep. Gordon H. Scherer (R Ohio), third-ranking GOP member of the Public Works Committee, said the Bragdon study group was preparing to recommend reducing interstate building costs by eliminating or cutting back interstate projects in industrial and urban areas, or lowering design standards -- changes that would be "a rape of the very heart" of the program.

Scherer also said the new investigating subcommittee appointed by Buckley had been set up solely to bypass George H. Fallon (D Md.), chairman of the regular Roads Subcommittee, because Fallon had resisted Buckley's reimbursement plan. Scherer also said he hoped the new Subcommittee would not try to make the Bureau of Public Roads and state highway departments the scapegoats, with charges of inefficiency, for the Highway Trust Fund's financing difficulties. Scherer spoke at the annual meeting of the Assn. of State Highway Officials in Boston.

Oct. 13 -- Blatnik, at the association meeting, said the new Subcommittee would spend two to four years investigating reports of graft and irregularities in the Federal highway programs. He said Scherer would "have to answer to his own colleagues" for his remarks.

CIVIL RIGHTS

Congress made little progress on new civil rights legislation in 1959 though it extended the life of the Civil Rights Commission until Nov. 8, 1961. The Commission Sept. 8 issued a major, controversial report.

Numerous civil rights bills were submitted early in the session. When Congress adjourned, a House bill approved by the Judiciary Committee was bottled up in the Rules Committee and the Senate Judiciary Committee was holding fast to a Subcommittee-approved bill.

One of the key controversies, as in 1957, was over the so-called "Part III issue." In 1957 the Eisenhower Administration's civil rights bill contained, in Part III, provisions which would have empowered the Attorney General to initiate civil suits to safeguard all civil rights. The 1957 law, as passed, gave him this power in the case of voting rights but Congress refused to empower him to institute suits for the protection of other civil rights. (1957 Almanac p. 553)

The Part III powers were not proposed by the Administration in 1959. Administration spokesmen said such legislation would only further antagonize the South and inhibit all civil rights progress. Part III provisions were struck from 1959 bills by House and Senate Judiciary Subcommittees.

A three-way split in Congressional sentiment on the civil rights bill thus developed: Southerners held to their traditional opposition to any civil rights legislation while Northerners split between "moderate" legislation, as proposed by the Administration, and "strong" legislation, backed by the liberals.

At the end of 1959 key provisions of the 1957 act were being tested in the courts and the Civil Rights Commission and the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division, both created by the 1957 statute, were seriously hamstrung in their efforts to carry out the act.

Major Proposals

These were the three major legislative proposals that were under consideration in 1959:

● THE JOHNSON BILL -- Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) Jan. 20 introduced a bill (S 499). Its features:

1 -- An anti-bombing provision, barring interstate transportation of explosives and conspiracies to intimidate people with bombs.

2 -- Extension of the life of the Civil Rights Commission, created by the Civil Rights Act of 1957.

3 -- A grant of subpena powers to the Justice Department in investigations of voting rights cases.

4 -- Establishment of a Federal Community Relations Service to assist in the conciliation of disputes over segregation and integration.

● THE ADMINISTRATION BILL -- President Eisenhower Feb. 5 submitted a seven-point program, embodied in HR 4457 and S 942 and 955-60. Its features:

1 -- An anti-mob bill, making interference with a Federal court school desegregation order a Federal crime.

2 -- An anti-bombing bill, making it a Federal crime to cross state lines to avoid prosecution for bombing a school or church.

3 -- A bill to give the Justice Department the right to inspect voting records and requiring the preservation of those records.

4 -- Extension of the life of the Civil Rights Commission.

5 -- A bill to give statutory authority to the President's Committee on Government Contracts, which seeks to eliminate discrimination in private employment.

6 -- A bill authorizing limited technical and financial aid to areas faced with school desegregation problems.

7 -- Provision of emergency schooling for armed forces children in event public schools are closed by integration disputes.

● 'LIBERAL' BILLS -- A bipartisan bloc of liberals in both House and Senate sponsored or co-sponsored such bills as HR 3147 and S 810. They exceeded the other measures in providing:

1 -- Authority for the Federal Government to develop and enforce, through the courts, school desegregation plans.

2 -- Authority for the Attorney General to file civil suits to end segregation of schools and other practices ruled discriminatory by the courts.

HR 3147 was introduced by House Judiciary Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D N.Y.); S 810 was co-sponsored by Sens. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) and 15 other Democrats and Republicans.

House

COMMITTEE -- Judiciary, Subcommittee No. 5.

HEARINGS -- 17 days between March 4-May 1 on HR 3147 and other civil rights proposals.

TESTIMONY -- Administration and House Republican witnesses generally opposed any proposals that went beyond the President's recommendations.

Southern spokesmen expressed opposition to any new legislation in the field.

Advocates of "strong" civil rights legislation urged that the Attorney General be given Part III powers. The Americans for Democratic Action, National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People and other civil rights groups endorsed Celler's bill.

ACTION -- June 17 the Subcommittee approved an amended version of HR 3147 that contained, in essence, the Administration's proposals plus Part III authority.

BILL REPORTED

Aug. 20 the full Judiciary Committee, which July 28 had voted 18-13 to delete the Part III authority, reported a clean bill (HR 8601 -- H Rept 956). It would:

● Make interference by threats or violence with court-ordered school desegregation decrees a Federal crime.

● Require election officials to preserve their records for two years and permit inspection by the Justice Department.

● Extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission for two years.

● Make it a Federal crime to flee across state lines to avoid prosecution for bombing any building or vehicle.

● Authorize the Government to provide educational facilities for children of military personnel in cities where public schools were closed to avoid integration.

Everything in the bill had been endorsed by President Eisenhower except the anti-bombing provision, which the President wanted limited to schools and churches.

But three other provisions recommended by the President were deleted from the bill:

● A grant of statutory authority to the President's Committee on Government Contracts was rejected July 29.

● A policy statement describing the 1954 Supreme Court school desegregation decision as "the supreme law of the land" and affirming that "state and local governments... are now obligated to take steps toward the elimination of segregation in their public schools" was deleted Aug. 4.

● Authorization for limited Federal technical and financial aid to areas facing school desegregation programs was removed Aug. 5.

Chairman Celler Aug. 5 said an "unholy alliance" of Southern Democrats and Republicans was responsible for the removal of these provisions. He called the bill "a step forward," however.

The majority report conceded that "some progress" toward the elimination of discrimination had been made in the past four years but said the hearings "clearly indicate the need for additional legislation to implement the enforcement of civil rights. There have been...incidents of disorder and violence in the field of desegregation in public education, many state statutes have been enacted to impede and obstruct the rulings of our Federal courts in desegregation cases (and there has been) interference with the fundamental American right to vote."

A minority report, signed by Democratic Reps. Chelf (Ky.), Willis (La.), Forrester (Ga.), Tuck (Va.), Ashmore (S.C.), Dowdy (Texas), Whitener (N.C.) and Loser (Tenn.) and Republican Reps. Poff (Va.) and Cramer (Fla.), said the bill was still "fundamentally wrong" and "bad in principle," despite the fact that many of its "unwarranted, unnecessary" provisions had been removed.

Reps. John V. Lindsay (R N.Y.) and William T. Cahill (R N.J.) endorsed HR 8601 but urged the House to add provisions to authorize aid to areas with school desegregation problems, to authorize the Attorney General to file civil suits to secure non-voting rights, and to give legislative sanction to the Committee on Government Contracts.

RULES COMMITTEE

When the first session adjourned, HR 8601 was pigeon-holed in the Rules Committee. But Celler had taken steps to bring it to the House floor by filing a motion to discharge the bill from the Committee; the motion reportedly had received more than half the necessary 219 signatures when Congress went home Sept. 15 and would be open for more signatures when the second session convened.

Celler and other Northern Democrats charged Aug. 23-24 that the four Republicans on the Rules Committee had joined with its four Southern Democrats to bottle up the civil rights bill, as part of an agreement by which many Southern Democrats supported the Landrum-Griffin labor bill. (See story p. 156)

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Judiciary, Constitutional Rights Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- Intermittently, between March 18-May 8.

TESTIMONY -- Most of the controversy in the early hearings centered on the Part III issue. The case for the "strong" bill was argued by Douglas March 19; Attorney General Rogers argued the "moderate" stand March 20. The last few weeks of hearings were devoted primarily to testimony by Southerners.

ACTION -- June 17 the Subcommittee voted 5-3 to remove Part III authority from the bills under study. Sens. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.), Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.), Sam Ervin Jr. (D N.C.), John L. McClellan (D Ark.) and Roman Hruska (R Neb.) supported the motion, and Subcommittee Chairman Thomas C. Hennings Jr. (D Mo.), John A. Carroll (D Colo.) and William Langer (R N.D.) opposed it.

On July 15 it approved a clean bill (S 2391) which would: extend the Civil Rights Commission to Jan. 31, 1961 and require state and local election officials to preserve voting records for three years and to make them available for inspection by Federal law enforcement agents. Willful violation of this requirement would be punishable by imprisonment for five years or a $5,000 fine, or both.

The full Judiciary Committee Aug. 3 voted 10-5 to begin consideration of S 2391. The bill was still under consideration when Congress adjourned Sept. 15.

ACTION SCHEDULED

While S 2391 was bottled up in Committee, proponents of a "strong" bill threatened to bring up civil rights legislation on the floor by offering it as an amendment to other types of bills, including one bill, dear to Southern Senators, that concerned boiled peanuts.

Discussions of possible compromise legislation that might be passed in 1959 without a Southern filibuster were held by Majority Leader Johnson and Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) and led to extension of the Civil Rights Commission. Dirksen July 11 said that if the House passed a civil rights bill he would support efforts to bypass the Senate Judiciary Committee and bring it directly to the floor for debate -- a maneuver used in 1957.

Just before Congress adjourned, Johnson and Dirksen announced Sept. 14 that they planned to bring civil rights legislation up for debate about Feb. 15, 1960.

Civil Rights Commission Extended

With the Civil Rights Commission scheduled to go out of existence 60 days after filing its report Sept. 8, Congressional leaders turned to the Senate Appropriations Committee.

By a 13-7 vote Sept. 8, the Committee added to a House-passed bill (HR 8385) appropriating funds for the Mutual Security Program and other Federal activities a rider extending the life of the Commission for two years, to Nov. 8, 1961, and appropriating $500,000 to it.

The Senate Sept. 14, and the House in the early morning hours of Sept. 15, approved the rider.

The Senate, on two identical 71-18 roll-call votes, agreed, first, to a motion by Sen. Carl Hayden (D Ariz.) to suspend the rules to permit legislation in an appropriation bill (two-thirds majority required) and then accepted his amendment extending the life of the commission and appropriating its funds. (For voting, see chart p. 446)

Seventeen Southern Democrats and one Republican -- Sen. Milton R. Young (N.D.) -- voted "nay" each time.

Most of the debate preceding the Senate votes was concerned with denunciation by Southern Senators of the commission's Sept. 8 report.

When the amended bill was returned to the House late Sept. 14 with the rider, Rep. John Bell Williams (D Miss.) blocked by his objection a move to send it immediately to conference. Within two hours the Rules Committee reported, and the House by voice vote approved, a resolution (H Res 396) agreeing to a conference with the Senate.

After the Senate conferees insisted on their Civil Rights Commission rider, it was brought to the House floor. The conflict was resolved when the House, by a 221-81 roll-call vote, agreed to a motion by Rep. John J. Rooney (D N.Y.) to concur in the Senate amendment. (For voting, see chart p. 396)

Action on Voting Rights

In 1959 both the Civil Rights Commission and the Department of Justice met difficulties in seeking to enforce the 1957 Civil Rights Act.

The act directed the Commission to (1) "investigate allegations in writing under oath or affirmation" that citizens were being deprived of their right to vote "by reason of their color, race, religion, or national origin; (2) study and collect information concerning legal developments constituting a denial of equal protection of the laws under the Constitution; and (3) appraise the laws and policies of the Federal Government with respect to equal protection of the laws under the Constitution."

In investigating voting complaints in the South, the Commission encountered evasive, dilatory tactics and outright challenges by local officials. After a Federal court ruled that the Commission's procedures were unauthorized it suspended its voting rights activities.

Voting complaints were heard in Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, North Carolina and Tennessee. In hearings in Bullock, Barbour and Macon counties, Ala., Dec. 8-9, 1958 the Commission heard complaints from about 40 Negro witnesses. Further attempts to get information were balked by local officials who refused to appear and by state Judge George Wallace, who impounded the records for Bullock and Barbour counties. At the request of the Commission, the Justice Department went into Federal District Court where Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. ordered Wallace and other officials to produce their records and ruled that registration officials must testify before the Commission if asked to appear. Wallace turned the disputed records over to grand juries in each county and the Commission was allowed to inspect the records in the presence of the jury foremen and county solicitors.

HEARINGS BARRED

When the Commission investigated alleged removal of Negroes from voting lists in northern Louisiana, Federal District Court Judge Ben C. Dawkins Jr. July 12 issued a restraining order barring it from conducting a hearing. Dawkins acted on a plea that the Commission rules did not guarantee the rights of the 17 subpenaed registrars. He also said there was a substantial question of the constitutionality of the creation of the Commission.

A three-judge Federal court in Shreveport Oct. 7 held that the Commission itself was constitutional but that its procedures -- not permitting persons under investigation to cross-examine witnesses or know the charges against them -- were not authorized under the 1957 law. The state of Louisiana was granted a permanent injunction against the hearings.

The Justice Department Nov. 27 filed a notice of appeal on this decision. Pending the result of the appeal, the Commission scheduled no further public hearings on voting complaints.

CIVIL RIGHTS DIVISION ACTION

Under the 1957 act the Attorney General was empowered to enforce the 15th Amendment (right to vote) by seeking an injunction when an individual was deprived or about to be deprived of his right to vote. Acting under this authority, the Justice Department filed four suits -- three on charges of discrimination in voter registration and one against the conduct of a primary election:

GEORGIA -- Sept. 4, 1958 a suit was filed against Terrell county registrars who rejected five Negroes for alleged inability to pass a literacy test. April 16, District Court Judge T. Hoyt Davis dismissed the case, ruling that while the case before him might be within the constitutional authority of the Government, the section of the Civil Rights Act which gave the Justice Department authority to sue private individuals as well as state officials was unconstitutional. The Supreme Court June 29 agreed to hear arguments on the Government's appeal.

ALABAMA -- On Feb. 6 Justice filed a suit against the board of registrars of Macon county, the site of Tuskegee Institute, alleging that Negroes had systematically been denied voting rights. Before the case was heard, one of the registrars died, the other two resigned and the Government amended its complaint to include the state of Alabama as a defendant. Federal District Court Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. March 6 dismissed the suit on the grounds that the registrars could no longer be sued and that the Civil Rights Act did not empower the Federal Government to sue a state. The dismissal was sustained in a circuit court of appeals June 16. The Supreme Court June 29 agreed to hear arguments on the Government's appeal and Nov. 16 granted certiorari.

LOUISIANA -- June 29 the Department filed suit against the registrar and White Citizens Council of Washington parish (county), charging that some 1,281 Negroes had been removed from the parish voting list as a result of challenges filed by citizens council members.

TENNESSEE -- Nov. 16 a suit was filed against the Fayette County Democratic Committee for holding a white primary Aug. 1, 1959.

Civil Rights Commission Report

In addition to its voting rights activities, the Civil Rights Commission also studied problems in housing and public education. On Sept. 8 it issued a report containing 14 recommendations for legislative and administrative action in the three fields.

The Commission members were: John A. Hannah, president of Michigan State University, chairman; Robert G. Storey, former dean of Southern Methodist University law school, vice chairman; John S. Battle, former Governor of Virginia; Doyle E. Carlton, former Governor of Florida; the Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, president of Notre Dame University; and George M. Johnson, professor of law at Howard University. (Battle resigned Oct. 12.)

Voting

The Commission found "that legislation presently on the books is inadequate to assure that all our qualified citizens...enjoy the right to vote" and made five unanimous or near-unanimous recommendations for additional legislation. Three of the commissioners also proposed a constitutional amendment to guarantee voting rights. The recommendations:

1. To remedy the lack of reliable information, the Census Bureau should be directed to compile registration and voting statistics, including a count of individuals by race, color and national origin.

2. To assist investigation of alleged denials of the right to vote, Congress should require that all registration and voting records be preserved for a period of five years and be made available to public inspection.

3. To deal with cases where registrars are not appointed or refuse to function, Congress should amend the Civil Rights Act of 1957 to make it illegal for state officials to refuse to carry out their responsibilities for registering voters.

4. To deal more effectively with the refusal of witnesses to cooperate with commission investigations, the Civil Rights Commission itself should be empowered to apply directly to U.S. district courts for orders enforcing its subpenas, instead of referring the matters to the Justice Department for action.

5. In cases where it is determined that state registrars have refused to register qualified voters because of their race, religion or national origin, the President should be authorized to appoint a Federal registrar, who would register voters until state officials are ready to resume the task on a non-discriminatory basis. Such action would be initiated by sworn affidavits from at least nine would-be voters. The Civil Rights Commission would investigate their claims and certify the valid ones to the President, who would designate a Federal registrar for the district. The Federal registrar would administer state qualifications and issue registration certificates entitling those persons to vote in Federal elections. He would retain his jurisdiction until the President determined state officials were prepared to resume the responsibility.

Commissioner Battle dissented from this recommendation on the grounds it "would place in the hands of the Federal Government a vital part of the election process so jealously guarded and carefully reserved to the states by the founding fathers."

Proposed Amendment -- Commissioners Hannah, Hesburgh and Johnson also proposed as the "best ultimate solution" to the voting rights problem an amendment to the Constitution that would permit states to set no qualifications for voting except "age or length-of-residence requirements uniformly applied to all persons within the state, or legal confinement at the time of registration or election." Commissioners Storey, Carlton and Battle said the proposed amendment was unnecessary.

Education

The Commission said its recommendations in the field of education were based on the twin premises that "the American system of public education must be preserved" and "the constitutional right to be free from compulsory segregation in public education can and must be realized." Its recommendations:

1. The Commission should be authorized to serve as a clearing house for information on ways in which school districts have moved toward integration.

2. It should be authorized to establish "an advisory and conciliation service" to assist local officials in developing school integration plans, and to mediate and conciliate, upon request, disputes as to proposed plans and their implementation.

3. The Government should conduct an annual school census "that will show the number and race of all students enrolled in all public educational institutions," in order to assist further study of segregation in education.

There were no dissents from these recommendations, but Commissioners Storey, Battle and Carlton said they gave "little acknowledgement" to conditions in parts of the country "where the problem is most acute."

Federal Funds Proposal -- Commissioners Hannah, Hesburgh and Johnson also recommended that Federal funds "in any form" be withheld from "institutions of higher learning, both public and privately supported, which refuse, on racial grounds, to admit students otherwise qualified for admission." Johnson said the same policy should apply to public elementary and secondary schools. Commissioners Storey, Battle and Carlton opposed the policy altogether.

Housing

The Commission said its study of the housing field showed "a considerable number of Americans, by reason of their color or race, are being denied equal opportunity in housing" and that "the housing disabilities of colored Americans are part of a national housing crisis involving a general shortage of low-cost housing." Its recommendations:

1. A bi-racial commission on housing should be established in all cities and states "with substantial non-white populations," and should be empowered "to study racial problems in housing, receive and investigate complaints alleging discrimination, attempt to solve problems through mediation and conciliation, and consider whether these agencies should be strengthened by the enactment of legislation for equal opportunity in areas of housing deemed advisable."

2. The President, through an executive order, should state the objective of equal opportunity in housing, direct all Federal agencies to work toward this goal and direct the Civil Rights Commission to make additional studies and recommendations to "bring about the end of discrimination in all Federally assisted housing."

3. The Administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency should give "high priority" to the attainment of this goal.

4. The Federal Housing Administration and the Veterans Administration should require builders who seek Federal loans or guarantees in localities with laws against discrimination in housing to agree in writing that they will abide by such laws and should establish their own fact-finding agencies to assure the builders are in fact complying.

5. The Public Housing Authority should encourage selection of sites on open land and should locate small projects in residential neighborhoods, in order to avoid the tendency of public housing units to become racially segregated.

6. The Urban Renewal Administration should take steps to assure that spokesmen for minority groups are consulted on the preparation of community urban renewal plans.

Commissioners Hesburgh and Johnson, in a supplementary statement, emphasized the need for protection of minority group interests in urban renewal plans and in relocation of persons displaced by Federally aided projects and also argued that low-cost housing programs "are not luxuries but are essential needs."

Again, there were no dissents, but Commissioners Storey, Battle and Carlton said that "some parts of the report are argumentative, with suggestions keyed to integration rather than housing."

FEDERAL ELECTIONS BILL

For the third time in recent years, the Senate Rules Committee July 23 reported a "clean elections" bill, designed to provide greater public disclosure of the financial details of political campaigns. The bill as reported (S 2436 -- S Rept 573) fell considerably short of similar measures approved by the Committee in 1955 and 1957, neither of which was enacted. (1957 Almanac p. 652) Unlike its predecessors, S 2436 failed to make provision for a ceiling on an individual's total campaign contributions, or for reporting receipts and expenditures in primary election contests.

Written as a complete substitute for the Federal Corrupt Practices Act of 1925, S 2436 would make the following changes in spending limitations, reporting requirements and publicity provisions:

- Raise the spending limit for candidates for Senator and Representative-at-Large from a flat $25,000 to $50,000 or an amount equal to 20 cents a vote for all votes cast for the office in the preceding general election, plus 10 cents a vote for all such votes in excess of one million (or a similar sum derived from the total number of persons registered to vote). Such a formula would raise the limit in New York State above $600,000.
- Raise the spending limit for candidates for Representative from a flat $5,000 to $12,500 or an amount calculated as above.
- Raise the spending limit for political committees operating in two or more states from a flat $3 million per year to an amount equal to 20 cents a vote for the highest number of votes cast for President in any one of the preceding three elections. The annual ceiling would thus be raised above $12 million.
- Reduce the number of financial reports required of political committees from four to two in non-election years, and substitute for one of the two extra reports required immediately prior to elections one to be filed no later than 30 days following elections.
- Eliminate the reporting requirement for persons who spend $50 or more in any year to influence the election of Congressional candidates in two or more states.
- Provide that all spending reports be filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, who would be required to preserve the reports for six years (instead of the current two), make them available for public inspection within 24 hours of receipt, and permit them to be photographed or otherwise copied.
- Continue the existing $5,000 limit on an individual's contributions to one candidate or committee, without a limit on total contributions made in one year.
- Continue the existing exemption from reporting requirements for intrastate committees that are not affiliated with national organizations, but require House and Senate candidates to list all committees working on their behalf.

The limited nature of the changes proposed in S 2436 paved the way for its unanimous approval by the nine-member Rules Committee. In individual views filed with the report, however, Chairman Thomas C. Hennings Jr. (D Mo.) and Sens. Theodore Francis Green (D R.I.), Thruston B. Morton (R Ky,) and Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) deplored the bill's failure to bring primary elections within the scope of the reporting requirement. Hennings and Green also called for a $10,000 ceiling on total annual contributions by a single individual.

ALFORD ELECTION

The upset victory in the Nov. 4, 1958 election of last minute write-in candidate Dale Alford over Rep. Brooks Hays (D) of Arkansas' Fifth District resulted in a dispute over the validity of the election that was not settled until September 1959.

Hays, a House Member since 1943, was considered relatively moderate on the segregation issue, while Alford ran as an outspoken segregationist with the indirect support of Gov. Orval E. Faubus (D Ark.). Hays had defeated an official of the segregationist Little Rock Citizens Assn. by a 3 to 2 margin in the Democratic primary July 29, 1958.

Alford's election was followed by charges of improper campaign tactics and stuffed ballot boxes. Some of the charges were: paste-on stickers bearing Alford's name were distributed by election officials; in some precincts the reported vote exceeded the number of registered voters; anonymous election material, including a picture showing Hays with two Negro churchmen, was circulated on Alford's behalf; Alford represented himself as a Democrat while opposing the official party nominee, Hays.

A House Special Committee to Investigate Campaign Expenditures investigated the complaints, which were brought by Little Rock publisher John F. Wells. Hays told the Committee he would not contest the election himself but believed the Committee should determine whether it was a legal election.

The Committee Dec. 17, 1958 unanimously recommended that the Elections Subcommittee of the House Administration Committee conduct a formal investigation of the election and voted 3-2 to recommend that Alford not be seated in the House pending the outcome of that investigation.

(The last time a Representative was unseated was in the case of Arthur Jenks (R N.H.) in 1937. Jenks had been certified as the winner of the election and the House voted to permit him to take the oath. But after an Elections Subcommittee investigation the House reversed its decision, and the seat was awarded to Jenks' opponent, Democrat Alphonse Roy.)

The House Jan. 7 adopted a resolution (H Res 1), offered by Majority Leader John W. McCormack (D Mass.), to seat Alford and refer the question of his "final right" to membership to the House Administration Committee. On April 15 that Committee voted 12-11 to order its Elections Subcommittee to investigate the election. In the meantime, the Justice Department Feb. 2 announced that FBI agents were also investigating the election. A Federal grand jury in Little Rock June 17 concluded its probe without returning any indictments.

The Elections Subcommittee, which began hearings June 4, Aug. 26 ruled that Alford defeated Hays by 1,498 votes -- 30,247 to 28,749. The figures previously certified by the state of Arkansas gave Alford the victory by 1,256 votes. Chairman Robert T. Ashmore (D S.C.) said the Subcommittee had thrown out 937 disputed ballots.

On the recommendation of the Elections Subcommittee, the House Administration Committee Sept. 8 reported H Res 380 (H Rept 1172), declaring Alford to be the legitimate winner. The House Sept. 8, by a 245-5 standing vote, adopted the resolution.

Hays, following Senate confirmation June 23, became a member of the board of directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

VETERANS' PENSIONS

HR 7650 -- Reported by House Veterans' Affairs Committee June 11, 1959 (H Rept 537).

- Passed by the House by a 226-34 standing vote June 15.
- Reported, amended, by Senate Finance Committee Aug. 12 (S Rept 666).
- Passed, amended, by the Senate by an 86-6 roll-call vote Aug. 13. (See p. 433)
- House Aug. 14 and Senate Aug. 18 agreed on final version by voice votes.

PL 86-211 -- Signed into law Aug. 29.

The Veterans' Pension Act of 1959 revised the system of pensions for veterans with disabilities not connected with their war service. Compared to existing law, the Act, which was to take effect July 1, 1960, would cost an additional $10 billion over the next 40 years.

The chief feature of the new law was a sliding-scale formula setting pension rates on the basis of a veteran's income. It replaced flat benefit rates.

The law was expected to increase payments for 70 percent of those on the pension rolls and add 206,000 widows to the rolls. No pensions would be taken away or reduced under the terms of the legislation.

The veterans' pension system, which currently costs the Government about $1.1 billion a year, is separate from the system of compensation for veterans disabled in military service. Pensions are paid only to veterans deemed totally disabled. Those over 65 years of age are presumed to be 90 percent disabled and consequently must show an additional disability of only 10 percent to qualify for pensions. Nearly all can do so.

While widows of World War I veterans received benefits under existing law, widows of veterans of World War II and the Korean conflict got help only if their husbands were disabled in service. The new law made a widow of any of the three wars eligible regardless of whether her husband's disability was incurred in service. This feature was expected to cost $22 billion by the year 2000, off-setting the savings expected from the new sliding-scale formula.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, HR 7650:

Provided a sliding scale of monthly pensions for veterans of World War I, World War II and Korean conflict, effective July 1, 1960, as follows:

For single veterans with incomes of $600 or less, $85; with incomes from $600 to $1,200, $70; with incomes from $1,200 to $1,800, $40.

For veterans with incomes of $1,000 or less and one dependent, $90; with two dependents, $95; with three or more dependents, $100.

For veterans with dependents and incomes between $1,000 and $2,000, $75; with incomes between $2,000 and $3,000, $45.

Provided monthly pensions for widows and children of veterans of the three wars, effective July 1, 1960, as follows:

For widows with no children and incomes of $600 or less, $60; with incomes between $600 and $1,200, $45; with incomes from $1,200 to $1,800, $25.

For widows with one child and incomes of $1,000 or less, $75 plus $15 for each additional child; with incomes between $1,000 and $2,000, $60 plus $15 for each additional child; with incomes from $2,000 to $3,000, $40 plus $15 for each additional child.

Pensions for a veteran's child with an income of $1,800 or less would be $35 monthly plus $15 for each additional child.

Specified that money from the following sources would not be counted in establishing the income of a veteran or his widow: the six-month death gratuity; donations from relief or welfare organizations; VA pension, compensation and dependency-indemnity programs; U.S. Government or National Service Life Insurance policies; lump sum social security death payments; public or private retirement, annuity, endowment or similar plans equal to the veteran's contributions to such funds; amounts paid by a veteran's widow or child for the veteran's just debts, non-reimbursed expenses of his last illness and burial; proceeds from fire insurance policies.

Provided that all income of a veteran's spouse except $1,200 would be counted as income to the veteran.

Gave the VA Administrator discretionary authority to deny pensions to a veteran, widow or child on the basis of "net worth."

Placed widows and children of veterans of World War II and Korea on the same basis as World War I widows and children in determining eligibility for pensions.

Provided that the pension of a hospitalized veteran would be cut to $30 a month after two months' hospitalization; the balance of the original pension would go to the veteran's wife or children if the VA Administrator found it justified.

Provided that no person on the pension rolls would have his pension taken away or reduced on the effective date of the new pension program; such persons could elect to receive higher rates if qualified under the new schedule.

Background

The total cost of the veterans' benefits program has mounted steadily since the end of World War II. In the budget for fiscal 1960, veterans' benefits constituted the second costliest civilian item, ranking only behind farm spending. Of the $5.2 billion channeled to veterans, pension payments amounted to a little over one-fifth, or about $1.1 billion. Although the cost of compensation, hospitalization and other benefits for disabled ex-servicemen was expected to drop in years ahead as more and more of these veterans died, rising pension costs would push total outlays for veterans upward. By 1985, as more and more ex-servicemen met the income and disability requirements prescribed for pensions, the pension payments under current law would reach $3.4 billion a year and would comprise more than half of total spending on veterans' behalf, the VA said. The sum would mount still higher in later years.

In an effort to keep the non-service-connected pension program within limits, President Eisenhower in January 1955 created the President's Commission on Veterans' Pensions, headed by Gen. Omar N. Bradley. The commission was directed to appraise the existing systems of "pension, compensation and related non-medical benefits to veterans and their dependents."

After more than 13 months' of study, the commission April 23, 1956 made its report. Among the Commission's 70 recommendations were these:

"Military service in time of war or peace should be treated as discharging an obligation of citizenship and not of itself as a basis for future Government benefits."

"Veterans' non-service-connected benefits should be minimized and gradually eliminated."

Veterans should rely primarily on social security benefits rather than on special pension.

Disputing the commission's recommendation that veterans without service-connected disabilities did not deserve special treatment from the Government, the three major veterans' organizations, the American Legion (2.8 million members), the Veterans of Foreign Wars (1.3 million members) and the American Veterans of World War II and Korea (125,000 members), attacked the Bradley Commission report. The only group to support it was the self-styled "citizens first, veterans second" organization, the American Veterans Committee (25,000 members). (1956 Almanac p. 527-28)

The Administration did not follow through on the Bradley Commission report until April 15, 1959, when the Veterans Administration submitted to Congress proposals for revising veterans' pensions. In his Budget Message Jan. 19, the President had asked for "legislation to provide for more equitable treatment of needy veterans and to modernize the veterans' pensions program in light of social developments and changes."

The Administration's draft bill, which was introduced as HR 6432, sought to cut pension costs by four major changes in the current law. It would have: (1) implemented a sliding-scale principle, relating a veteran's pension to the amount of his income from other sources; (2) counted the income of a veteran's spouse in determining eligibility; (3) considered a veteran's net worth as well as his annual income in determining eligibility; and (4) taken social security payments into account as part of his other income. Over 40 years the bill would cost $57 billion, the VA estimated, instead of the current program's $105 billion cost.

House

COMMITTEE -- Veterans' Affairs.

HEARINGS -- May 9 in Boston, June 4, 5, 9 and 10 in Washington.

ACTION -- June 11 reported a clean bill (HR 7650 -- H Rept 537) including, with modifications, three of the four Administration proposals. The Committee rejected the inclusion of social security payments as part of a prospective pensioner's income.

The Committee included in HR 7650 a section adding widows of World War II and Korean veterans to the pension rolls. The "widows' equalization" provision was not part of the Administration's original proposal, but Committee members contended that Congress probably would enact such a provision in the next few years anyway.

Despite the added costs of the widows' equalization provision, the exclusion of social security payments from a veteran's allowable income and slightly higher pension scales, backers of HR 7650 said the bill had the Administration's support. They said all the major veterans' organizations also favored its passage.

Floor Action

The House June 15, by a standing vote of 226-34, passed HR 7650 under suspension of the rules, a procedure prohibiting amendments from the floor.

Following House passage, some Members complained that it had not been made clear during the explanation of the bill that it would cost the Government more, not less, money over the next 40 years than the existing system. The extra cost was due to the widows' equalization provision.

Supporters of HR 7650 said that under it pensions paid to veterans would amount to $12 billion less than the current system by the year 2000. However, the cost of adding widows of World War II and Korea to the pension rolls -- an estimated $22 billion over the 40-year period -- wiped out the $12-billion savings and swelled the overall cost of HR 7650 to $115 billion, $10 billion more than would be paid out under current law.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Finance.

HEARINGS -- July 28, 29 on HR 7650 and other bills to revise the pension system.

TESTIMONY -- The American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars and AMVETS supported HR 7650. The American Veterans Committee and the recently organized Veterans of World War I of the USA (150,000 members) opposed it. The latter group endorsed a bill providing pensions of $100 a month to World War I veterans 65 years old or over who met income requirements.

The AVC opposed HR 7650 on the grounds it would not help the disabled veterans who needed aid the most.

The Bureau of the Budget said it preferred the Administration's bill (HR 6432).

ACTION -- The Committee Aug. 12, in reporting an amended version of HR 7650 (S Rept 666), recommended lower pension payments for single veterans and widows without children plus a delay of two years -- as requested by the VA -- in the widows' equalization provision. The total cost of the pension system recommended to the Senate was $94 billion. A Budget Bureau statement included in the Committee report described the House version of HR 7650 as a "considerable departure from the principles recommended by the President."

Floor Action

The Senate Aug. 13 passed HR 7650 by an 86-6 roll-call vote. Most of the debate centered on an amendment by Sen. Robert S. Kerr (D Okla.) to scrap the recommendations of the Finance Committee in favor of the more liberal features of the House bill. The Kerr amendment carried by a 75-20 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 433)

By a 14-79 roll-call vote, the Senate rejected an amendment by Sen. Wayne Morse (D Ore.) to exempt veterans of World War I from the sliding scale of benefits set up by HR 7650 and instead to make flat payments of $90 a month to 1917-18 veterans over 65. Morse withdrew another amendment which would have exempted World War I veterans from the provisions of HR 7650.

With the exception of one amendment, the provisions of the Senate version of HR 7650 were identical to the provisions of the bill as it was signed into law and almost exactly those passed by the House. The Senate version included an amendment which would have given World War II veterans an additional year in which to apply for National Service Life Insurance. Veterans' Affairs Committee Chairman Olin E. Teague (D Texas) told the House Aug. 14 that the Senate's insurance amendment was "not germane and...should not be included at this time."

The House, by voice vote, then refused to accept the disputed rider and returned HR 7650 to the Senate. The Senate Aug. 18, also by voice vote, agreed to drop the amendment and sent HR 7650 on to the White House for the President's signature.

RIO GRANDE PROJECT

HR 4279 -- Reported by House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee (H Rept 971) Aug. 24, 1959.

- Passed by the House Sept. 2 by a 282-114 roll-call vote. (See p. 390)
- Passed by the Senate Sept. 9 by voice vote.

PL 86-357 -- Signed into law Sept. 22.

HR 4279 authorized $6 million for improvement of the irrigation and drainage works of the La Feria Water Control and Improvement District, a division of the Lower Rio Grande rehabilitation project in Texas. The money was to be used to halt seepage and waste that had caused the loss of two of every three acre-feet of water diverted into the system. The improvements were expected to save some 15,000 acre-feet of water a year.

The benefit-cost ratio was estimated at 5-1. The $6 million cost was to be repaid by the La Feria district within 35 years. The project was endorsed by the Department of the Interior.

COLD WAR GI BILL

S 1138 -- Reported by Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee (S Rept 514) July 14, 1959.

- Passed, amended, by a 57-31 roll-call vote of the Senate July 21. (See p. 427)

The Senate in 1959 passed S 1138, the Veterans' Readjustment Assistance Act of 1959, which would make available to peacetime veterans benefits patterned after the old GI bill of World War II and Korean War days. In the House, Veterans' Affairs Committee Chairman Olin E. Teague (D Texas) declined to hold hearings on the bill; he feared it would be vetoed and that passage might hurt the chances of approval of a veterans' pension bill (HR 7650). (See story p. 296)

S 1138 was opposed by President Eisenhower and others who objected to the additional cost to the Federal Government. Some opposed the bill on grounds that loans for education should be substituted for grants, and a compromise loan provision was approved by the Senate. Proponents of S 1138, which was co-sponsored by 24 Democratic and two Republican Senators, argued that military service was compulsory, and that further education would benefit not only the veteran but also the Nation as a whole.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, S 1138:

Made eligible for benefits under the act any veteran who: entered the armed services between Jan. 31, 1955 and July 1, 1963; served more than 180 days on active duty; and was not discharged dishonorably.

Entitled eligible veterans to a maximum of 36 months of schooling or job training on the basis of 1½ days of training for each day spent in service. A veteran on active duty on June 30, 1963 would have his benefits calculated to the date of his discharge.

Authorized educational grants or loans ($110 monthly for single veterans and $135-$160 monthly for veterans with dependents) for those taking a full-time program.

Specified that a veteran entering college would be eligible for educational grants in his first year and in any subsequent year in which he placed in the top 50 percent of his class; if he placed in the lower half of his class, he would be eligible in the next year only for loans, repayable to the Government without interest, but if he then returned to the top 50 percent, the loans would be forgiven.

Provided that all other training benefits should be on a grant, rather than a loan, basis.

Required a veteran to begin his education or training under the bill within three years after his separation from the military service, and ended the program on June 30, 1973.

Directed the Administrator of Veterans Affairs to provide vocational rehabilitation training for veterans with service-connected mental or physical disabilities rated at 10 percent or more of total disability; made eligible veterans with disabilities incurred between the cut-off date for World War II benefits (July 25, 1947) and the beginning of the Korean conflict (June 27, 1950), as well as during the post-Korean period (after Jan. 31, 1955).

Established subsistence allowances and a minimum schedule of combined disability compensation-subsistence allowance payments.

Provided generally that veterans could not receive vocational rehabilitation training more than nine years after discharge or release from active military service.

Made post-Korean veterans eligible for Veterans Administration guaranteed and direct loans for the purchase of homes, farmlands, livestock and farm machinery.

Set July 25, 1960 as the cut-off date for direct loans and June 30, 1973 as the cut-off date for guaranteed loans.

Background

REFERENCE -- GI Bill Extended to Korea Veterans (1952 Almanac p. 205).

Government benefit programs to veterans of military service began in World War II days with the Veterans Readjustment Assistance Act of 1944, the original "GI Bill of Rights." The benefits included loans for homes or business, medical services and grants for education. The World War II GI bill was available to veterans who had served at any time between September 1940 and July 1947.

With the outbreak of the Korean War, the GI bill was reinstated and made available to veterans who had served at any time between July 1950 and Jan. 31, 1955, when it was terminated by an executive order of President Eisenhower. (1955 Almanac p. 345)

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Labor and Public Welfare, Veterans' Affairs Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- Ten days between March 25 and May 7.

ACTION -- The full Committee July 14 reported S 1138 (S Rept 514), which would extend to post-Korean War veterans who served before July 1, 1963 educational, vocational rehabilitation and home loan guaranty benefits patterned after the Korean GI Bill of Rights.

As reported by the Committee, the bill provided grants for all educational training, including school courses on the college level or below, cooperative courses combining school and on-the-job training, correspondence courses and flight training and on-the-job and institutional on-farm training.

The report said the Government's obligation to post-Korean veterans was based on "the continued existence of the compulsory draft."

Several Committee members, through supplemental and minority views included in the Committee report, expressed dissatisfaction with the provision for educational grants. Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) said he favored a loan program open to all students -- veterans and non-veterans alike. Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) said the bill was not a wartime readjustment act or an education-aid measure and that loans, rather than grants, were better geared to peacetime service.

Sens. Barry Goldwater (R Ariz.), John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.) and Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) agreed that the Government was not obligated to furnish grants to veterans of peacetime service. They also opposed the Government-guaranteed home loan provision and said S 1138 would encourage hard-to-get personnel to leave the services in order to take advantage of the benefits in the bill.

Similar reasons for opposing the bill were given by spokesmen for the Budget Bureau, the Veterans Administration and the Departments of Defense and Health, Education and Welfare. The Administration supported the vocational rehabilitation program.

Floor Action

The Senate July 21, by a 57-31 roll-call vote, passed S 1138 with amendments. (For voting, see chart p. 427)

The provision for education grants, strongly opposed by the Administration and Senate Republicans, was altered by a compromise amendment offered by Sen. Russell B. Long (D La.). His amendment, restricting college grants to student-veterans in the top half of their class, was agreed to by a 49-39 roll-call vote in lieu of an amendment by Cooper to place the whole program on a loan basis. Under the Long amendment, only students failing to place in the top 50 percent of their class would have to settle for loans after their freshman year.

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

Russell B. Long (D La.), as a substitute for an amendment by John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.) which would have provided Government loans instead of grants for all education and job training -- Provide grants for all non-college training and for the first year of college training, but specify that the college grants would continue only as long as the veteran stayed in the top 50 percent of his class; if he fell below that level, he would be eligible in the next year only for loans, repayable to the Government without interest; July 21. Roll-call vote, 49-39.

DEBATE -- July 21 -- Cooper -- "I think the loan program would be less likely to attract those who are not sincerely interested. There would be a few -- I would not say many -- who would take advantage of a grant program because it would appear to be the easiest thing to do."

Barry Goldwater (R Ariz.) -- Opposed education grants because "we cannot compare the veteran of today, who goes in the service for a stated period of time, who can select that period of time and who can plan his life around that period of time, with the veteran who was forced to go to war."

Long -- Said his amendment would save more money than the Cooper amendment because if the Cooper loan provision took effect in a few years four or five million veterans would owe the Government $4,000 each, and some Senators would introduce a bill to forgive the loans. "I would like to see the yeas and nays ordered on that vote because...I have known what it is to vote against a post office pay raise bill."

Ralph W. Yarborough (D Texas), chief sponsor of S 1138 -- "This is not a giveaway bill. It will pay rising dividends to the Government...because of the increased gross national product which will result from the greater skill many of (the veterans) will possess."

HOUSE ACTION DEFERRED

House Veterans' Affairs Committee Chairman Olin E. Teague (D Texas) July 24 said his Committee would not hold hearings on the bill in 1959 because if it were sent to the White House it was "almost certain to be vetoed by the President." He said House action would be delayed until 1960 because a veto was less likely during a Presidential election year.

VETERANS' GROUP STANDS

Three national veterans' organizations took varying stands on S 1138. In April 21 testimony before the Senate Veterans' Affairs Subcommittee, E. M. Freudenberger of the Disabled American Veterans said his organization supported some of the provisions of S 1138 and took no stand on others. The provisions which the DAV supported pertained to vocational rehabilitation for service-connected disabilities and home and farm loan assistance.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars, at their September 1959 convention, adopted a resolution favoring enactment of S 1138.

The American Legion said it opposed enactment of S 1138.

STUDENT LOYALTY OATH

S 819 -- Reported by Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee (S Rept 454) June 29, 1959.

- Recommitted by a 49-42 roll-call vote of the Senate July 23. (See p. 428)

The Senate vote to recommit S 819 to the Labor and Public Welfare Committee killed an attempt to remove from the National Defense Education Act of 1958 a provision requiring loyalty oaths and affidavits from aid recipients.

The vote to recommit climaxed two days of debate which often erupted in fiery oratory. Sen. John F. Kennedy (D Mass.), sponsor of the bill, said after the recommittal vote that he doubted whether the measure would "ever see the light of day again."

Repeal of the loyalty oath requirement was favored by several colleges and academic groups and by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, which protested that it singled out college students and implied extra security precautions had to be taken regarding them. Backers of the requirement scoffed at that charge and said no one should be reluctant to declare his loyalty to the United States.

BACKGROUND -- The National Defense Education Act (PL 85-864) authorized a variety of Federal aid programs, including loans to college students and grants for graduate fellowships. Section 1001 (f), which slipped into the 1958 act almost unnoticed, provided that no Federal funds should be used to make payments or loans to any person unless he signed an affidavit disclaiming affiliation with or support of subversive organizations and took an oath of loyalty to the United States. Standard perjury penalties were prescribed for violation of the section. (1958 Almanac p. 213)

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Labor and Public Welfare.

HEARINGS -- April 29 and May 5.

ACTION -- June 29 reported S 819 (S Rept 454). As reported, the bill would have eliminated both the affidavit and loyalty oath requirements from the 1958 National Defense Education Act. The Committee report said the requirements did "not constitute an effective national security measure. It would be wishful thinking to believe that these loyalty oath provisions would deter any members of a subversive organization from applying for benefits under the Act since individuals of this type would have no scruples in perjuring themselves to obtain assistance."

The Committee added that the requirements "cast unfounded doubts upon the loyalty of members of the educational community." The report said the affidavit requirement was so "vague and indefinite" that it might well offend the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution.

Floor Action

The Senate July 23, by a 49-42 roll-call vote, recommitted S 819 to the Labor and Public Welfare Committee. During the two days of debate, there were four roll-call votes on the bill. (For voting, see chart p. 428)

Two major amendments were offered, both as substitutes for the committee bill. The first, offered by Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.) and modified by Barry Goldwater (R Ariz.) and Richard B. Russell (D Ga.), never reached a vote. It would have eliminated the affidavit requirement but retained the loyalty oath. It also would have provided criminal penalties of a $1,000 fine and imprisonment of a year and a day for aid recipients who advocated, or who knowingly belonged to organizations that advocated, illegal overthrow of the Government.

The second amendment, offered by Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) and adopted as a substitute for the Mundt amendment, also would have repealed only the affidavit requirement but would have made standard perjury penalties -- a $10,000 fine and five years in jail -- applicable to false swearing under the loyalty oath provision.

The Senate adopted the Javits amendment on a 46-45 roll call after rejecting, 39-54, a motion by Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) to table the amendment.

In a final vote before recommitting the bill, the Senate tabled a motion to reconsider the vote on the Javits amendment by a 50-42 roll call. Opponents of changing the loyalty oath provision then threw their support to the motion, offered by Russell B. Long (D La.), to recommit the bill.

DEBATE -- July 22 -- John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) -- "We do not apply it (the loyalty oath) to other groups to whom the Federal Government makes funds available.... Why should we apply it to boys and girls who may need money to complete their education and who receive money from the Federal Government? Why should we subject them to this suspicion...?"

Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) -- "It seems to me the young people of this country should welcome the opportunity to take this oath."

FEDERAL EDUCATION AID

HR 22 -- Reported June 8, 1959, amended (H Rept 447), by House Education and Labor Committee.

S 8 -- Reported Sept. 12, amended (S Rept 1011), by Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee.

Another stalemate over Federal aid to education developed in Congress in 1959, with liberal Democrats and the Eisenhower Administration -- as in previous years -- at odds over both the scope and nature of the assistance the Federal Government should provide.

The Administration, abandoning earlier proposals for direct Federal-state matching grants to build schools, limited its 1959 requests to a long-term program of debt service aid designed to help needy school districts pay off school construction bonds.

The Administration plan was labeled a "bankers' bill" by liberal Democrats in Congress. Democratic proposals ranged from a permanent program of outright Federal grants for school construction and teachers' salaries to temporary programs of Federal-state matching grants for school construction only. Compromise bills were reported by Senate and House committees but, in the face of Republican veto threats, action was not pressed on them in 1959.

At year's end, another attempt was underway to draft a new bill, acceptable to President Eisenhower, for introduction in 1960.

1959 Bills

These were the major legislative proposals of 1959:

S 2; HR 22 -- These bills called for direct Federal grants to the states for public school construction and teachers' salaries. Grants would be calculated on the basis of school-age population -- children 5-17 years old -- and no state matching of funds would be required.

As introduced Jan. 7 by Sen. James E. Murray and Rep. Lee Metcalf (both D Mont.), the bills would have set up a permanent program costing the Federal Government an estimated $4.4 billion a year, with eventual grants of $100 per pupil annually.

However, the House Education and Labor General Education Subcommittee April 16 approved a cut-down version of HR 22 providing a four-year program with a total estimated cost of $4.4 billion. The bill authorized annual grants to the states of $25 per school-age child and provided that during the last two years a state's allotment would be reduced if its "school effort index" fell below the national average. The states could allot the grants for school construction or increased teacher salaries or both.

The full Education and Labor Committee reported the Subcommittee's version of HR 22 June 8 (H Rept 447). All Committee Republicans and two Democrats -- Chairman Graham A. Barden (N.C.) and Phil M. Landrum

Background on School Aid

For history of previous action on school aid legislation, see: Aid to Schools (1956 Almanac p. 411); Federal School Construction Aid Defeated (1957 Almanac p. 588); Federal Education Aid Approved (1958 Almanac p. 213); How New Education Law Will Work (1958 Almanac p. 217).

(Ga.) -- opposed reporting the bill. HR 22 was not cleared for floor action by the Rules Committee during the 1959 session.

The Murray-Metcalf bill had the backing of the National Education Assn., an organization of teachers and school administrators.

S 8 -- With the Murray-Metcalf bill stalled in the House, the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Education Subcommittee -- which had held hearings on S 2 Feb. 4 through April 15 -- put together an entirely different school bill in the closing weeks of the 1959 session.

As reported by the full Labor and Public Welfare Committee Sept. 12 (S Rept 1011), S 8 was a substitute for a bill introduced by Sen. Pat McNamara (D Mich.) Jan. 9. It called for an emergency two-year program of Federal matching grants to the states for school construction only. The bill authorized $500 million for each year and provided that Federal grants could range from one-third to two-thirds of the cost of a school, depending on the state's relative income per child. Funds would be allotted on the basis of relative school-age population weighted by relative income per school-age child. S 8 also carried a penalty provision for states whose effort index fell below the national average.

All Committee Democrats and three Republicans -- John Sherman Cooper (Ky.), Clifford P. Case (N.J.) and Jacob K. Javits (N.Y.) -- voted to report the bill, but Cooper and Javits said they intended to offer their own bill (S 2637) as a substitute on the Senate floor. S 2637, like the Administration bills below, called for long-term Federal assistance to pay off school construction bonds.

S 1016, HR 4268 -- The Administration program, presented to Congress Feb. 9 by Arthur S. Flemming, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, called for Federal-state matching grants to help build $600 million worth of schools a year for five years. Under the Administration bill, needy school districts would issue 20 to 30-year school construction bonds and the Federal and state governments would provide, on a 50-50 basis, the funds which the districts themselves could not pay off. The money would help finance the annual principal and interest charges (debt service) on the bonds. The Federal payments, estimated at $85 million a year, would be stretched out over the 20 to 30-year life of the bonds, with a total cost to the Government of about $2 billion. Federal money would be allocated to the states under a formula based on school-age population, relative state income and effort. The state educational agency would decide which of its school districts needed assistance, and the state plan would be subject to approval by the U.S. Office of Education.

Under this program the Federal-state annual contribution would continue until the construction bonds were paid off. Once the bonds were retired, the community would use any surplus school money to repay the Federal and state governments for their contributions. The repayment period would continue for 10 years after the bonds were retired. The community's obligation to the Federal Government would not continue after that 10 years, even if it had not paid back a cent. But the state could still require repayment of its share.

The Administration also recommended a bond-repayment plan for public and private colleges (S 1017, HR 4267) which received no action.

Draft Bill -- In view of the failure of Congress and the Administration to agree on school aid legislation in 1959, the House Education Subcommittee made a post-session attempt to work out a new bill for introduction in 1960. At a Nov. 5 Subcommittee meeting, members agreed that a compromise was necessary but failed to agree on specific provisions. The upshot was a decision to instruct the Subcommittee staff to work out a compromise bill incorporating the Administration's recommendations for long-term debt service aid, rather than a short-term program. Subcommittee Chairman Cleveland M. Bailey (D W.Va.) said after the meeting that he would not push any bill until he had advance assurance that President Eisenhower would sign it into law.

The nucleus of a citizens' committee stood committed to drum up support for any compromise bill that might be developed. Leaders of the committee were George J. Hecht, president and publisher of Parents Magazine; Eric A. Johnston, president of the Motion Picture Assn. of America; and ex-Sen. William Benton (D Conn. 1949-53).

SPECIAL SCHOOL AID

An Administration proposal to curtail Federal financial aid for school systems overburdened by Government activities made no headway in Congress in 1959. A similar proposal by the President in 1958 also was rebuffed.

The program of aid to schools in so-called Federally impacted areas began in 1950 with laws authorizing grants for school construction (PL 81-815) and school maintenance and operation (PL 81-874). Congress in 1958 extended both laws until June 30, 1961 and made permanent that part of the program dealing with children whose parents both live and work on Federal property. (1958 Almanac p. 222)

From fiscal 1951 through 1959, $876.9 million was appropriated under PL 81-815 to help build 39,325 classrooms housing 1.2 million students. The U.S. Office of Education estimated that in 1959 maintenance grants under PL 81-874 would go to 3,546 school districts. With an enrollment of about 1.5 million Federally connected children and a total average daily attendance of about 8.5 million, the districts contained one-fourth of the Nation's school population.

1959 Proposals

Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Arthur S. Flemming May 12 sent to Congress proposed Administration amendments promised in President Eisenhower's Jan. 19 Budget Message. Flemming asked Congress to amend the impacted area aid program to authorize aid only to school districts whose school revenues were impaired by the tax-exempt status of Federal property and to reduce payments to levels "more consistent with the school revenue losses actually borne by such districts."

Bills (S 1939, HR 7140) embodying the Administration recommendations were introduced May 14.

The House Education and Labor General Education Subcommittee held hearings on HR 7140 July 28-Aug. 19, and on Aug. 26 it rejected the bill by a 0-5 vote, with Rep. Peter Frelinghuysen (R N.J.) voting "present." No further action was taken during the session.

Congress in 1959 dealt the Administration another blow by appropriating more money than President Eisenhower had requested for impacted area aid in fiscal 1960. It appropriated $163,957,000 for school maintenance and operation and $61,135,000 for construction. The President had proposed $142,300,000 and $38,500,000, respectively. Senate

COMMITTEE -- Labor and Public Welfare.

HEARINGS -- April 29 and May 5.

ACTION -- June 29 reported S 819 (S Rept 454). As reported, the bill would have eliminated both the affidavit and loyalty oath requirements from the 1958 National Defense Education Act. The Committee report said the requirements did "not constitute an effective national security measure. It would be wishful thinking to believe that these loyalty oath provisions would deter any members of a subversive organization from applying for benefits under the Act since individuals of this type would have no scruples in perjuring themselves to obtain assistance."

The Committee added that the requirements "cast unfounded doubts upon the loyalty of members of the educational community." The report said the affidavit requirement was so "vague and indefinite" that it might well offend the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution.

The Senate July 23, by a 49-42 roll-call vote, recommitted S 819 to the Labor and Public Welfare Committee. During the two days of debate, there were four roll-call votes on the bill. (For voting, see chart p. 428)

It also would have provided criminal penalties of a $1,000 fine and imprisonment of a year and a day for aid recipients who advocated, or who knowingly belonged to organizations that advocated, illegal overthrow of the Government.

The Senate adopted the Javits amendment on a 46-45 roll call after rejecting, 39-54, a motion by Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) to table the amendment.

In a final vote before recommitting the bill, the Senate tabled a motion to reconsider the vote on the Javits amendment by a 50-42 roll call. Opponents of changing the loyalty oath provision then threw their support to the motion, offered by Russell B. Long (D La.), to recommit the bill.

POLITICAL BROADCASTS

S 2424 -- Reported July 22, 1959 by Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee (S Rept 562).

● Passed, amended, by the Senate July 28 by voice vote.

HR 7985 -- Reported Aug. 6 by House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee (H Rept 802).

S 2424 -- Passed, amended, by the House Aug. 18 by voice vote.

● Conference report (H Rept 1069) agreed to by the House Sept. 2 by a 142-70 standing vote and the Senate Sept. 3 by voice vote.

P. L. 86-274 -- Signed into law Sept. 14.

Reacting to a Feb. 19 decision of the Federal Communications Commission which held that equal time on regular news broadcasts must be given to political candidates of all major and minor parties, Congress in 1959 amended the equal time provision (Section 315) of the Communications Act of 1934. The effect of the amendment, as enacted in S 2424, was to exempt most newscasts from the equal time requirement.

Before S 2424 became law, Section 315 read:

"If any licensee shall permit any person who is a legally qualified candidate for any public office to use a broadcasting station, he shall afford equal opportunities to all other such candidates for that office in the use of such broadcasting station...."

S 2424 amended Section 315 as follows: "Appearance by a legally qualified candidate on any (1) bona fide newscast, (2) bona fide news interview, (3) bona fide news documentary (if the appearance of the candidate is incidental to the presentation of the subject or subjects covered by the news documentary), or (4) on-the-spot coverage of bona fide news events (including but not limited to political conventions and activities incidental thereto), shall not be deemed to be use of a broadcasting station within the meaning of this subsection."

Although panel discussion programs were not explicitly mentioned in S 2424 as enacted, Rep. Oren Harris (D Ark.), floor manager of the bill, asserted in House debate that the exemption applied to panel discussions so long as they were bona fide news interviews.

The conference report on S 2424 defined a bona fide news interview as "a regularly scheduled program."

OTHER RULINGS

While Congress was considering revisions of the Communications Act two developments further clarified and limited broadcasting stations' equal time obligations. The Supreme Court June 29 ruled that radio and television stations may not be sued for libel for remarks made by political candidates in broadcast speeches. The Court held that because of the equal time requirement the stations could not be held liable for the content of the speeches.

The FCC July 30 made two revisions in its regulations covering equal time. (1) When a station handled a political broadcast and a rival candidate wanted equal time, he would have to request it within one week after the original broadcast. Previously, the request could be made anytime during the campaign. (2) Anyone who made a demand for equal time or who complained to the Commission of discrimination by a broadcaster would have to show proof of being a legally qualified candidate.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, S 2424:

Exempted from the equal time requirement of the Communications Act appearances by legally qualified candidates on bona fide newscasts, interviews, documentaries (if the candidate's appearance is incidental to the presentation of the subject matter) or on-the-spot coverage of news events (including political conventions).

Repeated that broadcasters must afford reasonable opportunity for the discussion of conflicting views on issues of public importance.

Declared Congress' intention to study the effectiveness and practicality of the new law and directed the FCC to report on action taken concerning it.

Background

Equal time had not been an acute problem to networks and politicians until a man named Lar Daly, a self-described "perennial office-seeker" running as a write-in candidate for mayor of Chicago, demanded as much time on Chicago news broadcasts as was given to Democratic and Republican candidates. An Independent who runs as Lar (America First) Daly, he complained specifically about a 20-second news shot of Mayor Richard J. Daley, the Democratic candidate for re-election, greeting Argentina's President Arturo Frondizi and a one-minute news report of Daley opening the "March of Dimes" campaign. The FCC set loose a storm of protest by ruling 4-3 Feb. 19 that Daly's complaint was justified -- that the law, as it was written, applied to newscasts. President Eisenhower called the ruling "ridiculous" and Attorney General William P. Rogers May 7 asked the FCC to "reconsider and reverse" its decision.

The FCC June 16 refused to reverse the ruling and Senate and House committees began hearings on proposals to amend the law.

The drive to limit equal time requirements was given added impetus when the Columbia Broadcasting System cancelled the scheduled appearance of Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) on a panel program July 18 after supporters of Humphrey July 14 opened a campaign to win him the Democratic Presidential nomination. CBS cancelled Humphrey's appearance on the grounds that it would come under the equal time provision. Humphrey called the network decision "unnecessary and unfounded" and said, "I couldn't help but feel that maybe I was getting a little high pressure lobbying here." On July 26 Frank Stanton, CBS president, made a special television plea to Congress to revise the equal time provision.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Communications Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- June 18-25 on four bills (S 1585, 1604, 1858, 1929) to clarify the law regulating political broadcasts.

TESTIMONY -- Numerous witnesses representing the radio and television industry said that unless Congress enacted legislation to reverse the ruling in the Lar Daly case, future political campaigns would be subjected to a "Federally enforced blackout" of radio-TV coverage.

Robert W. Sarnoff, president of NBC, said the FCC interpretation of the equal time law amounted to a "political gag" on campaign coverage.

ACTION -- July 22 the full Committee unanimously reported a clean bill (S 2424 -- S Rept 562). It specifically removed the equal time requirement from panel discussions as well as from newscasts, news interviews, news documentaries and on-the-spot coverage of news events.

Floor Action

The Senate July 28 passed S 2424 by voice vote after adopting an amendment that lifted the immunity of panel discussions from the equal time provision.

As passed by the Senate, S 2424 directed Congress to examine the effect of the immunity provisions within three years and directed the FCC to make evaluation reports on the law every year for three years.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Clair Engle (D Calif.) -- Remove panel discussions from those types of broadcasts to be exempted from the equal time requirement; July 28. Voice vote.

William Proxmire (D Wis.) -- Stipulate that the equal time exemptions did not change the basic intent of Congress to make sure that in broadcasts "all sides of public controversies shall be given as fair an opportunity to be heard as is practically possible;" July 28. Voice.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

Russell B. Long (D La.) -- Set an expiration date of June 30, 1960 for the equal time exemptions; July 28. Voice.

DEBATE -- July 28 -- John O. Pastore (D R.I.) -- "In establishing this category of exemptions from section 315 (of the Communications Act), the Committee was aware of the opportunity it affords a broadcaster to feature a favorite candidate. This is a risk the Committee feels is outweighed by the substantial benefits the public will receive through the full use of this dynamic media in political campaigns. Every reasonable safeguard must and will be established to prevent any partisan broadcaster from abusing this new right."

Engle -- In supporting his amendment he said "anyone who holds public office can start a panel discussion on something or other. And merely by exposing himself to the public he gets an advantage which he should not have."

Proxmire -- "What I am trying to accomplish by my amendment is to permit equal opportunity to have candidates or persons speak in the public interest so that controversial ideas can be heard by the public."

House

COMMITTEE -- Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Communications and Power Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- June 29-July 1 on HR 7985, a bill similar to S 2424.

TESTIMONY -- July 1 -- Sen. Thruston B. Morton (R Ky.) and Paul M. Butler, chairmen of the Republican and Democratic National Committees, said the FCC ruling imposed unreasonable burdens on the radio and TV stations.

Lar Daly said if the "networks are given...responsibility to determine what candidate is newsworthy, God help the little guy."

ACTION -- Aug. 6 the Committee reported HR 7985 (H Rept 802). The report said the Committee omitted both news documentaries and panel discussions from the bill because "these terms are difficult to define, and without proper definition they might permit an unnecessarily broad exemption from the equal-time requirement."

The report also warned broadcasters against treating "staged incidents" by candidates as news events and said that "the appearance of a candidate in connection with such event must not be the principal aspect of the event," if it is to qualify under the exemptions.

Supplementary views by Peter F. Mack Jr. (D Ill.) and Robert W. Hemphill (D S.C.) urged Congress to define a "legally qualified candidate" and to set time limits before primary and general elections during which the equal time requirement would apply.

Floor Action

The House Aug. 18 passed S 2424 after substituting the text of its own bill (HR 7985) for the Senate's language. HR 7985, with committee amendments, had been passed earlier Aug. 18.

In essentials, the House and Senate versions of S 2424 were not far apart, except that the House bill contained some interpretive language and the Senate bill exempted news documentaries and called for a three-year study of the amended law.

Members of the House debated whether or not panel discussions were exempted, by implication, in the House bill. Floor manager Oren Harris (D Ark.) said that such programs as "Face the Nation" and "Meet the Press" would be exempt "as long as they continue to be regular, bona fide news programs or on-the-spot coverage of news events." John E. Moss (D Calif.), who wrote part of the language in the bill, said they were not covered by the bill's exemptions.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

Merwin Coad (D Iowa) -- Require broadcasters to give equal time not only to candidates for office but also to "representatives of any political or legislative philosophy;" Aug. 18. Voice vote.

DEBATE -- Aug. 18 -- Harris -- If the FCC's decision in the Lar Daly case were carried to a logical conclusion, "there would probably be no televising of the Democratic and Republican conventions in 1960." The Committee wished to cure that "ridiculous" situation but was "almost unanimous in rejecting proposals" for the outright repeal of the equal time requirement (as urged by FCC Chairman John C. Doerfer and the Assn. of Broadcasters).

Catherine May (R Wash.) -- "Already, television coverage of the political candidates (in the 1960 elections) is being hampered" by the FCC's interpretation of the equal time requirement. Panel discussions should be exempted because they "afford much insight into the character and ability of candidates."

Moss -- Both panel discussions and news documentaries are "wide open to abuse" by broadcasters who might want to "rig" them in favor of one candidate.

Conference

REPORT -- A Senate-House conference committee Aug. 27 reported a compromise version of S 2424 (H Rept 1069). The conferees decided to exempt news documentaries from Section 315 only where a candidate's appearance "is incidental" to the entire presentation. The House bill had applied the "incidental" qualification to newscasts, interviews and on-the-spot news coverage but the conferees dropped it.

House conferees accepted the gist of the Senate floor amendment reiterating Congress' intent that broadcasters give fair coverage to conflicting views.

ACTION -- The House Sept. 2, by a 142-70 standing vote, and the Senate Sept. 3, by voice vote, agreed to the report.

Dissents were expressed by Reps. John E. Moss (D Calif.), John D. Dingell (D Mich.) and Sen. Clair Engle (D Calif.), who feared that local broadcasters might use news programs to promote favored political candidates. The bill exempted "bona fide" newscasts and interviews and the conferees explained, in their report (H Rept 1069), that this meant a program must be regularly scheduled, with the content and format determined by the broadcaster and based on his "news judgment and not for the political advantage" of any candidate.

HOUSE DEBATE -- Sept. 2 -- Oren Harris (D Ark.) -- To guard against cases where local broadcasters might present panel discussions or news interviews designed "to further the candidacy of some political candidate," the conferees defined bona fide to mean news programs that are regularly scheduled.

John B. Bennett (R Mich.) -- The bill presents an "entirely practical solution, recognizing the rights of candidates on the one hand and giving broadcasters the right to exercise their bona fide news judgment."

John D. Dingell (D Mich.) -- "If we are to preserve the rights of each and every candidate, ourselves and those who run against us...we must reject" the report.

SENATE DEBATE -- Sept. 3 -- John O. Pastore (D R.I.) -- The final bill emphasizes that, to be exempt, "programs must have a bona fide news value and must not be used to advance the cause of any particular candidate."

PRESIDENT'S COMMENT

When he signed the bill Sept. 14, President Eisenhower said, "There is no doubt in my mind that the American radio and television stations can be relied upon to carry out fairly and honestly the provisions of this act without abuse or partiality...."

OBSCENE MAIL

HR 7379 -- Reported Aug. 19, 1959 by House Post Office and Civil Service Committee (H Rept 945).
- Passed by the House Sept. 1 by voice vote.

Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield in 1959 waged a strenuous campaign against "pornographic filth" sent through the mails and Congressmen reported their constituents were pressing for action. Only one bill, however, was reported from committee. (For 1958 law, see 1958 Almanac p. 240) Summerfield's June 11 action banning the book "Lady Chatterley's Lover" from the mails brought considerable criticism; so, from the other side, did a June 29 Supreme Court decision reversing a New York state ban against a movie based on the same book.

HR 7379, as passed by the House, would extend from 20 days to 45 days the time during which the Post Office Department may impound orders and remittances directed to persons who send obscene or fraudulent matter through the mails. The bill would permit detention if it were "in the public interest." Existing law permits detention only if "necessary" to enforcement of the laws banning such use of the mails.

ATOMIC AGREEMENTS

Acting under legislation approved in 1958, Congress in 1959 consented to a series of atomic exchange agreements with seven North Atlantic Treaty Organization countries and with the six-nation European Atomic Energy Community (Euratom).

- NATO PACTS -- The 1958 amendments to the Atomic Energy Act authorized agreements for exchange of atomic weapons information and materials with United States allies, notably Great Britain. The law provided that every proposed agreement for cooperation with another nation lie before Congress for 60 days, during which period it might be disapproved by concurrent resolution. One agreement, with Britain, became effective in 1958. (1958 Almanac p. 253)

In 1959 President Eisenhower submitted seven more agreements to Congress. The Joint Atomic Energy Agreements for Cooperation Subcommittee held executive hearings June 11, 12 and 17 and open hearings July 1 and 2, and the full Committee July 14-15 filed identical reports (S Rept 513, H Rept 672) approving the pacts. The Committee July 15 also filed unfavorable reports on concurrent resolutions (H Con Res 245-49, 251, 254 -- H Repts 657-63) opposing the agreements. Disapproving resolutions had been introduced by seven Democratic Representatives -- William H. Meyer (Vt.), Edith Green (Ore.), Byron L. Johnson (Colo.), George S. McGovern (S.D.), Clement W. Miller (Calif.), Roy W. Wier (Minn.) and Leonard G. Wolf (Iowa). The opposition was based on fears that the agreements would lead to military buildups and increased danger of war, but Ivan B. White, Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for European Affairs, July 1 told the Subcommittee no nation other than Britain would receive information enabling it to concoct atomic weapons. He also said atomic weapons stockpiled in NATO countries would remain under U.S. custody.

The seven NATO agreements and their effective dates:

Britain (July 18) -- Transfer of non-nuclear parts for nuclear weapons and weapons systems, and other material -- including transfer of uranium 235 in exchange for plutonium.

France (July 18) -- Sale of uranium fuel for a French-designed nuclear submarine reactor.

Canada, the Netherlands, Turkey, West Germany (all July 25) and Greece (Aug. 10) -- Exchange of information for development of defense plans, including training of personnel in handling atomic weapons and weapons systems. The agreement with Canada also provided for exchange of classified information involving development of military atomic reactors.

- EURATOM PACT -- Congress in 1958 approved U.S. participation in a joint program to develop "peaceful applications of atomic energy" with the Euratom nations -- Belgium, France, West Germany, Italy, Luxembourg and the Netherlands. (1958 Almanac p. 255) President Eisenhower Jan. 14, 1959 sent to Congress a specific agreement calling for construction of six nuclear reactors, participation in a joint research and development program and sale of reactor fuel to Euratom by the U.S. The Agreements for Cooperation Subcommittee held hearings Jan. 21-22, and the agreement took effect Feb. 18, upon expiration of the 30-day Congressional veto period.

MILITARY CONSTRUCTION

HR 5674 -- Reported, amended, by House Armed Services Committee (H Rept 223) March 18, 1959.

● Passed, amended, by the House, by a 379-7 roll-call vote, April 16. (See p. 356)

S 2280 -- Reported by Senate Armed Services Committee (S Rept 434) June 25.

HR 5674 -- Passed, amended, by the Senate, by an 89-3 roll-call vote, June 30. (See p. 421)

● Conference report (H Rept 729) agreed to by voice vote of the House and by an 85-0 roll-call vote of the Senate July 30. (See p. 430)

PL 86-149 -- Signed into law Aug. 10.

The bill authorized the expenditure of $1,225,525,150 in fiscal 1960 for construction at military installations in the United States and abroad. The total was $135,703,850 less than the Administration requested, $27,132,851 less than the amount originally approved by the House and $13,995,150 more than the Senate version.

The measure also incorporated the Administration's revised "master plan" for continental air defense, which had been requested by the Senate Armed Services Committee. The plan -- calling for reductions in anti-aircraft missiles programs and for an increase in development of anti-missile missiles -- placed primary emphasis on defense against intercontinental ballistic missiles rather than manned bombers.

PROVISIONS -- As signed by the President, the funds authorized in HR 5674:

Army	$ 188,403,100
Navy	177,151,250
Air Force	797,496,800
Deficiencies	4,779,000
Reserve Components	57,695,000
	$1,225,525,150

The bill also:

Directed the Secretary of Defense to submit to Congress by Jan. 31, 1960 complete information with respect to the various types of aircraft, missiles and naval vessels being procured by the U.S. armed forces, including the number and estimated cost of each type procured and proposed to be procured.

Provided that after Dec. 31, 1960 all appropriations for procurement of aircraft, missiles or naval vessels must be specifically authorized by legislation enacted after that date.

Directed the Secretary of Defense to report to the Armed Services Committees by Sept. 15, 1959 the results of a complete review of all previously authorized surface-to-air missile sites with the assurance: (1) that the review revealed the military necessity for the construction of sites selected; (2) that the performance and capability of missiles selected were in consonance with military requirements so as to eliminate all possible overlapping of missions and duplication; and (3) that attention was given to the feasibility of modifying or expediting any of the missile programs for either defense or offense.

Provided that, wherever possible, foreign currencies acquired through the sale of surplus commodities be used for any overseas project authorized by any military construction act; directed the Department of Defense to reimburse the Commodity Credit Corp. for the dollar value of foreign currencies used.

Authorized contracts, between June 30, 1959 and Oct. 1, 1960, for up to 20,000 family housing units to insure continuation of the Capehart housing program.

Required that all contracts made under the act be awarded, where practicable, on a competitive basis to the lowest responsible bidder and directed the military departments to report semi-annually to Congress on contracts awarded on other than a competitive basis.

Exempted rental-guarantee housing projects from being listed in the annual military construction authorization act; limited to 5,000 the number of such units to be contracted for prior to June 30, 1964.

With certain exceptions, rescinded all unused authorizations that had been in effect three years as of July 1, 1960.

Increased from $500,000 to $900,000 the authorization for activities which the armed forces were to provide in support of the 1960 Olympic winter games at Squaw Valley, Calif. (1958 Almanac p. 309)

House

COMMITTEE -- Armed Services.

ACTION -- March 18 reported HR 5674 (H Rept 223), authorizing $1,251,957,000. The Defense Department Feb. 10 had asked Congress to authorize $1,361,229,000, which included new authorizations of $1,356,290,000.

Floor Action

The House April 16, by a 379-7 roll-call vote, passed an amended version of HR 5674 authorizing $1,252,658,001. (For voting, see chart p. 356)

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Leslie C. Arends (R Ill.) -- Authorize construction of 180 family housing units at Chanute Air Force Base, Ill.; April 16. Voice vote.

Jeffery Cohelan (D Calif.) -- Authorize $701,000 for construction of facilities at the Naval Station, Treasure Island, Calif. to prevent disposal of raw sewage in San Francisco Bay; April 16. Voice.

Charles S. Gubser (R Calif.) -- Add $1 dollar for exchange of certain property at San Jose, Calif.; April 16. Voice.

Carl Vinson (D Ga.) -- Authorize additional housing units at Quantico, Va., Loring Air Force Base, Maine, and Travis Air Force Base, Calif.; April 16. Voice.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Armed Services.

ACTION -- June 25 reported a clean bill (S 2280 -- S Rept 434) authorizing $1,210,021,000. S 2280 also incorporated a new "master plan" for air defense.

The Administration had submitted the plan under pressure from the Committee, which May 19 had reported HR 5674 (S Rept 296), authorizing $1,232,661,000. In its May 19 report, the Committee said it had concluded that the Army's Nike-Ajax -- Nike-Hercules anti-aircraft system was "virtually obsolete." In order to force a reappraisal of the Nation's air defense, it denied about $17 million requested for Nike-Hercules expansion within the U.S. and called for prompt presentation of a new air defense plan by the Secretary of Defense.

The new plan, submitted to the Committee by Defense Secretary Neil H. McElroy June 12, provided for a reduction and relocation of planned sites for the Air Force's Bomarc anti-aircraft missiles and the Nike-Hercules. It also called for a $137-million increase in Nike-Zeus anti-missile missile engineering development, which did not affect the military construction bill. The plan was expected to save $1.4 billion "over the next few years."

The Committee, in reporting S 2280, accepted the new plan with "some reservations." It said the Defense Department agreed to its earlier $17 million cut in the Nike-Hercules program and that the new plan enabled it to cut another $29 million previously requested for the Bomarc and for the SAGE electronic ground environment system.

The Committee included in the bill a provision requiring the Secretary of Defense to review surface-to-air missile programs and report to Congress by July 31, 1959. The Secretary was directed to include in the report the opinions of the respective Chiefs of Staff on the nature of the military threat to the U.S. in the next five years and how best to meet it.

Floor Action

The Senate June 30, by an 89-3 roll-call vote, passed an amended version of HR 5674 authorizing $1,211,530,000. The Armed Services Committee bill (S 2280) was substituted for the House version. (For voting, see chart p. 421)

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Francis Case (R S.D.) -- Prohibit contracts over $25,000 for any Air Force Academy facility without prior authorization by Congress; June 30. Voice vote.

Case (R S.D.) -- Authorize contracts in fiscal 1960 for up to 20,000 family housing units to insure continuation of the Capehart housing program; June 30. Voice.

John Stennis (D Miss.) -- Provide that, wherever possible, foreign currencies acquired through sales of surplus commodities be used for overseas activities under the act; June 30. Voice.

Stennis -- Authorize $210,000 for construction of an armory at the Martindale Army Air Field, Texas, and rescind $323,000 authorized for a similar project in the fiscal 1959 military construction bill; June 30. Voice.

Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) -- Authorize $1,299,000 for Hickam Air Force Base, Hawaii; June 30. Voice.

Conference

REPORT -- A Senate-House conference committee July 29 reported (H Rept 729) a compromise version of HR 5674 authorizing $1,225,525,150.

Conferees agreed on language which would for the first time bring under Congressional review the procurement programs for aircraft, missiles and naval vessels. The Senate version had provided for review of design and development, as well as for procurement programs, for aircraft and missiles only.

Conferees also agreed on language that directed the Secretary of Defense to make a complete review of all previously authorized surface-to-air missile sites and report to Congress by Sept. 15, 1959. They dropped a Senate directive that the report include the opinions of the Chiefs of Staff.

ACTION -- The House and Senate July 30 adopted the conference report, the House by voice vote and the Senate by an 85-0 roll call. (For voting, see chart p. 430)

MINIMUM WAGE

An amended bill (S 1046) extending Fair Labor Standards Act minimum wage coverage from 24.3 million to 35 million workers and raising the minimum rate to $1.25 an hour for all but 3.6 million of those workers won approval July 10 from the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Labor Subcommittee, despite Administration opposition. The bill was still pending before the full Committee, however, when the 1959 session ended. There was no House action of any kind.

The Labor Subcommittee approved the bill after 10 days of hearings, May 7-June 4, in which the Administration, organized labor and the business community renewed a long-standing controversy on the minimum wage that stretched back to 1955, the last time the law was amended.

In 1955, Congress raised the minimum wage from 75 cents to $1 an hour but did not extend coverage except to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. (1955 Almanac p. 321) About 15 million to 20 million workers were left uncovered, largely in retail, service and farm employment. In each succeeding year, President Eisenhower asked extension of coverage to several million workers but no increase in the rate. Organized labor, however, consistently supported broader extension than did the President and an increase to $1.25 an hour.

In 1959 a bill (S 1967) drafted by the Labor Department and sponsored by Sen. Winston L. Prouty (R Vt.) incorporated the President's request for extension to workers employed by firms with 100 or more employees that were doing $1 million annual interstate business. The bill would have affected about 2.5 million workers, 1.9 million of them in retail trades.

The bill favored by organized labor (S 1046) was sponsored by Subcommittee Chairman John F. Kennedy (D Mass.) and six other Subcommittee Democrats. It raised the rate to $1.25 and extended coverage to 8 million new workers. At the Subcommittee hearings, Labor Secretary James P. Mitchell said S 1046 would lead to a "massive increase in wage costs;' that many businesses could not meet, and that would result in "excessive curtailment of employment."

Organized labor, led by AFL-CIO President George Meany, argued that even $1.25 an hour was barely enough to support a single person. Meany said S 1046 would "undergird the economy, improve purchasing power and strengthen the entire structure" of free enterprise. Other labor representatives said extension of coverage was needed to improve conditions in uncovered sweatshops.

Business groups at the hearings opposed S 1046 almost uniformly. The American Retail Federation, for example, said S 1046 would increase retail prices, thereby contributing to inflation. Others said the bill would drive many small businessmen out of business.

As approved with amendments by the Subcommittee, S 1046 raised the minimum wage for the 24.3 million workers already covered from $1 to $1.25 an hour in two annual steps. It brought retail and retail-service businesses grossing $750,000 or less annually under the existing $1 minimum wage, effective in 18 months, but did not provide for any additional increase in their minimum (3.6 million workers). Employees in retail firms doing more than $750,000 annually (4.4 million workers) and in a number of other industries (2.7 million workers) were brought under the minimum wage law; their rate would rise to $1.25 in four annual steps after enactment of S 1046.

FEDERAL HEALTH PROGRAM

S 2162 -- Reported, amended, by Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee July 2, 1959 (S Rept 468).

- Passed by the Senate, by an 81-4 roll-call vote, July 16. (See p. 427)
- Reported, amended, by House Post Office and Civil Service Committee Aug. 20 (H Rept 957).
- Passed, amended, by the House, by a 383-4 roll-call vote, Sept. 1. (See p. 388)
- Senate agreed to House version, with two amendments, by voice vote Sept. 10.
- House agreed to Senate amendments by voice vote Sept. 14.

PL 86-382 -- Signed into law Sept. 28.

The Federal Employees Health Benefits Act of 1959 established a pre-paid, voluntary health insurance plan for two million Government workers and their families, with costs to be shared equally by the Government and the beneficiaries. The Budget Bureau estimated that the program would cost the Government $110 million per year. It would take effect July 1, 1960.

Although President Eisenhower had requested a health insurance program for Federal workers from 1954 through 1957, the Administration opposed the 1959 bill, contending that the annual cost to the Government should not exceed $80 million and that Government participation in premium payments should be limited to one-third, rather than one-half. The Administration also objected to administrative machinery provided by the bill.

House, Senate Action

The Senate passed S 2162 July 16, by an 81-4 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 427) The Senate-approved provisions differed substantially from the later House version and from the final provisions of S 2162.

The Senate bill would have provided, at an estimated over-all cost of $300 million a year, a choice between two types of insurance: service benefit, such as Blue Cross and Blue Shield; or an indemnity plan, providing flat cash payments to cover medical expenses. It guaranteed a detailed schedule of benefits and set maximum biweekly payments of $4.25 for married workers and $1.75 for single employees, to be matched equally by the Government. The Senate version also called for establishment of a Bureau of Retirement and Insurance within the Civil Service Commission to administer the plan and an Advisory Council to assist the CSC chairman. The Administration objected to both of these provisions on grounds that they were unnecessary and would impede efficient management of the program. The Administration also said the bill failed to provide an adequate reserve fund.

The House Post Office and Civil Service Committee cut the estimated over-all cost of the program from $300 million to $214 million a year, making these major changes in the bill: It provided a choice among four, rather than two, types of health plans; required that the service and indemnity plans include at least two levels of benefits; eliminated detailed descriptions of benefits; provided for minimum, as well as maximum, premiums; authorized the CSC chairman to appoint an advisory committee, instead of establishing an Advisory Council; eliminated requirements for establishment of a new Bureau of Retirement and Insurance and for prior submission of contracts to the House and Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committees.

The House Sept. 1 passed the committee version of S 2162 by a 383-4 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 388)

The Senate Sept. 10 accepted most of the House version of S 2162 but added two amendments proposed by Chairman Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee. The first amendment insured that the $1.25 minimum biweekly premium for single employees and the $3.00 premium for married workers would be used only for purchasing health insurance benefits and not for administrative and reserve fund expenses. A 4 percent increase in employee contributions, also to be matched by the Government, was authorized to cover the costs of administering the program (1 percent of all contributions) and the reserve fund (3 percent of the total) necessary to keep it going.

The second Senate amendment authorized the establishment of a Bureau of Retirement and Insurance within the Civil Service Commission to administer the program.

The House Sept. 14 agreed to the Senate amendments and cleared S 2162 for the President's signature.

PROVISIONS -- As signed by the President, S 2162:

Gave Federal employees an unrestricted choice of enrollment in one of the following health insurance plans covering both basic services and extended illness: service benefit (such as Blue Cross-Blue Shield); indemnity benefit (provided by insurance firms); employee organization plans (such as carried by the National Assn. of Letter Carriers); and comprehensive prepayment plans (such as Group Health Assn. of Washington).

Authorized the Civil Service Commission to contract for the best possible programs.

Provided that the Government pay 50 percent of the contribution charges.

Established the following biweekly minimum-maximum contributions: individual employee, $1.25-$1.75; employee and family, $3.00-$4.25; female employee and family including non-dependent husband, $1.75-$2.50.

Required that employees have a choice between at least two levels of benefits in service and indemnity plans.

Provided that retiring employees could continue their coverage.

Stipulated that no physical examination was needed either for enrollment or for conversion to a private plan when an employee left Government service.

Authorized the Chairman of the Civil Service Commission to appoint a five-man advisory committee representing Federal employees.

Provided that 3 percent of contributions be set aside as a contingency reserve for cost adjustments and 1 percent for administrative expenses.

Authorized a 4 percent increase in employee and Government contributions to the program to cover the administrative and reserve fund expenses.

Directed that a Bureau of Retirement and Insurance be set up within the Civil Service Commission to administer the program.

Authorized an annual salary of $19,000 for the director of the Bureau of Retirement and Insurance.

Set the effective date for the program as July 1, 1960.

REORGANIZATION ACT

Congress in 1959 failed to complete action on a requested extension of the Reorganization Act of 1949, and the Act expired June 1. The law permitted the President to reorganize executive agencies by sending to Congress a Reorganization Plan which became automatically effective 60 days after transmittal unless disapproved by either chamber. A two-year extension was passed by the House and reported in the Senate but never reached a Senate vote.

Meanwhile, the House vetoed the final plan submitted by President Eisenhower under the Act. It was the third of Mr. Eisenhower's 16 Reorganization Plans to be killed by Congress. (1956 Almanac p. 584)

BACKGROUND -- The President's January Budget Message requested an extension of the act, which had been extended previously in 1953, 1955 and 1957. (1957 Almanac p. 669) Subsequently, the Budget Bureau requested that the act be made permanent.

House, Senate Action

The House June 2 passed by voice vote a bill (HR 5140) extending the Reorganization Act for two years, until June 1, 1961. The House debated HR 5140 May 27, but a demand by Rep. Clare E. Hoffman (R Mich.) for a reading of the engrossed bill -- a printed copy of the measure as passed by the House and certified by the Clerk of the House -- delayed the final vote.

Hoffman and other opponents said the Reorganization Act gave the President "the right...to interfere with the legislative authority of Congress."

HR 5140 had been reported (H Rept 367) May 18 by the Government Operations Committee with separate dissenting statements by Hoffman, John E. Moss (D Calif.) and George Meader (R Mich.).

In the Senate, an identical bill was reported by the Government Operations Committee May 5 (S 1474 -- S Rept 239). It was brought up on the Senate floor May 20 but passed over when Sen. Russell B. Long (D La.) spoke against it. No further Senate action was taken in 1959.

Reorganization Plan Rejected

The House vetoed President Eisenhower's Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1959 but later passed a bill to enact a modified version of the proposal. The legislation, made necessary because the Reorganization Act did not authorize Congressional amendment of the plans, was not acted on by the Senate during the 1959 session.

REORGANIZATION PLAN -- President Eisenhower's Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1959 would have transferred from the Secretary of Interior to the Secretary of Agriculture the authority both to make sales and exchanges of public national forest lands, including all minerals on the lands, and to sell certain minerals on acquired forest lands. The President, in transmitting the plan to Congress May 12, said the transfer would simplify the work of the two departments, provide more expeditious and economical performance and clarify responsibilities.

HOUSE REJECTION -- The House July 7, by a 266-124 roll-call vote, adopted a resolution (H Res 295) disapproving the plan. This action prevented the reorganization from taking effect. (For voting, see chart p.376)

In its June 26 report (H Rept 586) on the resolution, the Government Operations Committee said the plan would give the Secretary of Agriculture "unfettered power" to dispose of valuable U.S. mineral resources without any check by Interior or its technical agencies.

MODIFICATION PROPOSED -- The House Sept. 2 passed by voice vote an amended bill (HR 7681) to enact a modified version of the Reorganization Plan. The bill modified the plan by requiring approval by the Secretary of Interior for Agriculture Department sale or exchange of any forest land containing mineral deposits.

The Government Operations Committee, in reporting HR 7681 July 3 (H Rept 633), said the bill would "safeguard the public interest" by insuring that the Secretary of Interior retain responsibility with respect to minerals. HR 7681, in the form first reported, was opposed by the two GOP members of the Executive and Legislative Reorganization Subcommittee -- Clarence J. Brown (Ohio) and Robert R. Barry (N.Y.). Subsequently, further committee amendments to the bill were approved by all Committee members. During Sept. 2 debate on the bill, Brown said the final version was worked out to the "satisfaction" of all Committee members, the Bureau of the Budget and the Departments of Agriculture and Interior.

DRYDOCK INSURANCE

S 107 -- Reported by Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee June 24 (S Rept 430).

- Passed by the Senate by a 48-41 roll-call vote July 28. (See p. 429)
- Reported by House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee Aug. 24 (H Rept 964).

As introduced by Sen. George A. Smathers (D Fla.), S 107 sought to amend the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 so that floating drydocks would be added to the list of vessels eligible for Federal mortgage insurance. Its principal backers were the AFL-CIO Maritime Committee, the Gibbs Corp. of Jacksonville, Fla. and several other ship repair firms. It was opposed by the Budget Bureau, Department of Commerce and the Maritime Administration.

Proponents said there was only one floating drydock in the U.S. large enough to handle repair and maintenance work on the increasingly large tankers and freighters being built for the merchant fleet and that fixed facilities large enough to serve them were busy with new ships.

Opposing arguments were summed up by Sens. John Marshall Butler (R Md.) and Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) in minority views included in the Senate report (S Rept 430). They contended passage of S 107 would lead to the extension of loan and mortgage insurance to all types of shore facilities. They added that during the hearings on the bill no shipowner had testified to a shortage or need for additional drydocks. They also said private industry was able to finance any larger drydocks that were needed.

Following Senate passage of S 107, the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, which had held hearings on a similar bill (HR 325), reported the Senate bill without amendment (H Rept 964). It was brought to the House floor twice, but each time was passed over due to the objections of Rep. Prince Preston (D Ga.).

Preston, whose district includes the port city of Savannah, argued that S 107 should be amended to extend Federal mortgage insurance also to graving docks, which are cut into and fixed to the shoreline.

FISHING VESSEL SUBSIDIES

HR 5421 -- Reported, amended, by House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee (H Rept 770) Aug. 5, 1959.

● Passed by the House, by a 272-108 roll-call vote, Aug. 26. (See p. 386)

S 2578 -- Reported by Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee (S Rept 803) Aug. 24.

HR 5421 -- Passed by the Senate, amended, by a 55-30 roll-call vote Sept. 11. (See p. 445)

HR 5421 proposed a three-year program of construction subsidies for fishing vessels, aimed at rejuvenating the domestic fishing industry. Although there was general agreement, both in Congress and in the Administration, that foreign competition had seriously injured the industry, there was disagreement on the remedy.

Both the Interior and Commerce Departments opposed the subsidies and favored authorizing purchase of cheaper, foreign-built ships. The House-passed bill authorized a $3-million program limited to certain segments of the industry, while the Senate's version called for a $15-million program open to all fishermen and incorporated defense features. The House failed to act on the Senate version before the first session adjourned.

House

COMMITTEE -- Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

HEARINGS -- April 28-30, June 4, 11.

ACTION -- Aug. 5 reported an amended bill (HR 5421 -- H Rept 770) authorizing a three-year, $3-million program of construction subsidies which, in effect, would apply only to New England fisheries. The Committee deleted a provision for a $5 million appropriation for loans to fish processors and modified the subsidy, which originally was to be a differential equal to the lowest U.S. shipbuilder's bid. Provisions were added to cover Government requisition and subsidy recapture.

The report said the Interior Department had proposed authorizing foreign ship construction for the industry, but that the Committee believed "this is worse than no remedy at all," since it would promote unlimited foreign competition with still another domestic industry -- shipbuilding.

Floor Action

The House Aug. 26 passed HR 5421 by a 272-108 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 386)

Members from New England told the House their fishing industry was "in dire straits" because of cheap frozen fish imports and because, by law, all United States fishing vessels must be built in U.S. shipyards. They said a Commerce Department estimate put the cost differential between foreign and U.S. construction at as much as 42 percent.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 5421:

Authorized for three years a $1 million annual appropriation for fishing vessel construction subsidies to applicants for whom relief under the escape clause of the 1951 Trade Agreements Act was recommended by the Tariff Commission but denied by the President.

Authorized the Maritime Administrator to set a subsidy based on the difference between minimum foreign and domestic shipbuilding costs, with a ceiling of 33-1/3 percent of the cost, and placed construction under the Administrator's supervision.

Stipulated that subsidy applications be made to the Secretary of the Interior and show the need to replace lost, damaged, worn out or obsolete vessels.

Directed repayment of subsidies on vessels used in fisheries for which they were not designed.

DEBATE -- Aug. 26 -- William H. Bates (R Mass.) -- The Tariff Commission in 1954 and 1956 urged the President to relieve the import situation, but he refused because of its possible effect on U.S. allies.

Charles Raper Jonas (R N.C.) -- The bill would establish a bad precedent for helping every domestic industry injured by imports.

Bob Wilson (R Calif.) -- Although the tuna industry did not qualify under the escape clause requirement of the bill, its problems were almost identical and the industry supported the bill.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

HEARING -- Aug. 5 on S 1374, a bill identical with the original version of HR 5421.

ACTION -- Aug. 24 reported a clean bill (S 2578 -- S Rept 803) providing for a three-year, $15-million program of construction subsidies open to all fishermen. The bill eliminated the loan fund features and modified the subsidy contained in S 1374. It also incorporated defense features.

The report said the Committee was aware that the bill was not a cure-all for the fishing industry, but it believed "our fishermen will be able to compete on more even terms with modern equipment." It said a requirement for Defense Department approval of vessel plans was added in view of an Aug. 17 letter from Adm. Arleigh Burke, chief of naval operations, to Committee Chairman Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.). Burke said any "substantial decrease" in availability of fishing units could "operate to the detriment of our over-all national defense effort."

Sens. Strom Thurmond (D S.C.) and Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) in views opposing the bill held that Federal subsidization constituted one more threat to the economy. Sens. Andrew F. Schoeppel (R Kan.) and Thruston B. Morton (R Ky.), in minority views filed Aug. 25, said "too much faith should not be placed in the protection offered to the United States" by defense features in the bill, and also opposed subsidization.

Floor Action

The Senate Sept. 11 passed HR 5421, by a 55-30 roll-call vote, after substituting for the House-passed text the text of S 2578. The bill was returned to the House, which did not act on the amended version before adjournment. (For voting, see chart p. 445)

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, HR 5421:

Authorized for three years a $5 million annual appropriation for fishing vessel construction subsidies, with payments limited to the difference between domestic and foreign construction costs and with the Government limited to paying up to one-third of the lowest domestic bid.

Stipulated that applications would be approved by the Secretary of the Interior only for vessels that would: aid development of U.S. fisheries; deliver their catch only in the U.S.; employ only U.S. citizens; be suitable for the fisheries in which they would operate; and be documented under U.S. laws.

Authorized the Maritime Administrator to supervise construction and to submit plans to the Secretary of Defense for suggestions on changes needed to make the vessels suitable as emergency auxiliaries.

Directed exclusion from subsidy calculations of any defense features, with those costs to be paid by the Defense Department.

DEBATE -- Sept. 11 -- Clair Engle (D Calif.) -- Passage of the bill might "lure private capital back into the construction of an adequate fishing fleet -- capital that in recent years has fled to less risky investments ashore."

Frank J. Lausche (D Ohio) -- "We had better put a stop to subsidies of this kind, unless we want to convert our basic form of government completely."

Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) -- A "fair question" for those opposing the bill was why fishing vessels should be deprived of a subsidy while merchant vessels received a construction subsidy that "today is approximately 50 percent of the construction costs."

INTERNATIONAL WHEAT PACT

Exec. E -- Reported by Senate Foreign Relations Committee (Exec Rept 5) July 14, 1959.

- Approved by the Senate, by a 91-1 roll-call vote, July 15. (See p. 426)
- Ratification signed by the President July 16.

United States participation in the International Wheat Agreement was extended for three years in 1959 by action of Congress and the President.

The Senate July 15 ratified, by a 92-1 roll-call vote, a treaty (Executive E, 86th Congress, first session) extending until July 31, 1962 the agreement under which participating nations buy or sell assigned quantities of wheat within a set price range. (For voting see chart p. 426)

Ratification was followed by enactment of HR 8409 (PL 86-336), which provided the necessary implementing legislation for U.S. participation.

Participants in the agreement included 29 wheat importing nations plus the Vatican City, and nine exporting nations including the U.S. The importing nations agreed to buy, on the average, 70 percent of their commercial wheat from the exporters at $1.50-$1.90 per bushel (10 cents less than the previous maximum). Approximately 36 percent of the world trade in wheat was expected to move under the agreement. Britain, the largest wheat importer, signed the agreement for the first time, agreeing to purchase 80 percent of its annual commercial requirement from the participating exporters.

The first International Wheat Agreement came into force in 1949 after 18 years of sporadic negotiations that began in Rome in 1931. The agreement was revised and extended in 1953 and again in 1956 for three-year periods. (1949 Almanac p. 370; 1953 Almanac p. 240; 1956 Almanac p. 605)

During debate on the treaty July 15, Sen. J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) said, "In no sense is this agreement a foreign-aid measure. Instead, the subsidy (amounting to approximately $150 million per year -- about 70 cents per bushel) goes into the pockets of the wheatgrowers of the United States."

AUTO SAFETY STANDARDS

Two bills affecting automobile health and safety standards (HR 8238 and HR 1341, respectively) were passed by the House in 1959. The Senate did not act on them before the first session adjourned.

Both bills originated in the Health and Safety Subcommittee of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. In 1956 the Subcommittee, then known as the Traffic Safety Subcommittee, investigated the field of auto safety and witnessed demonstrations by auto companies in Detroit. On July 2, 1959 Chairman Kenneth A. Roberts (D Ala.) said he had hoped the auto industry, without Federal prodding, would place more emphasis on safety in designing cars but he had reluctantly decided some Federal action was needed. "I don't see any reason why autos should be any more exempt from Federal safety standards than airplanes," he said.

HR 8238 -- Reported by the Commerce Committee Aug. 10 (H Rept 814) and passed by voice vote of the House Aug. 17. It directed the Surgeon General, as head of the Public Health Service, to make a study of the effect of motor vehicle exhaust fumes on the public health. A report, with recommendations, was to be made to Congress within two years. Rep. Paul F. Schenck (R Ohio), sponsor of the bill, said that funds for the study would come from monies already appropriated to health agencies.

HR 1341 -- Reported July 27, amended, by the Commerce Committee (H Rept 715) and passed Aug. 26 by voice vote of the House. The bill sought to encourage the use of safety devices on cars by requiring certain standards for vehicles purchased by the Federal Government. It was hoped the size of the Government's annual car order would prompt manufacturers to put the prescribed safety devices on all their cars. The bill was opposed by the Commerce Department and automobile manufacturers. Hearings were held July 7, 8 and 9.

Debate Aug. 24 centered on the advisability of using this method for promoting nationwide safety standards. Opponents of the bill said that private industry could do the job; that the cost to the Government would be prohibitive; that the Government would have too much to say about automotive design. A motion by John B. Bennett (R Mich.) to recommit the bill was rejected Aug. 26 on a 125-264 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 386)

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 1341:

Directed the Secretary of Commerce, within one year's time, to develop and publish commercial standards for safety devices needed in passenger vehicles.

Prohibited the Federal Government from purchasing vehicles manufactured 15 months after publication of the standards which were not equipped with the safety devices.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Kenneth A. Roberts (D Ala.) -- Exempt cars bought by officers and employees of the Government from the safety standards requirement; Aug. 24. Voice vote.

William H. Avery (R Kan.) -- Exempt cars leased by the Government from the requirement; Aug. 24. Voice.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

John B. Bennett (R Mich.) -- Substitute for the entire bill language directing the Secretary of Commerce to make a study to determine any desirable changes in Federal vehicles and report his findings and recommendations to Congress; Aug. 24. Standing, 31-43.

RAILROAD RETIREMENT

HR 5610 -- Reported by House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee March 23, 1959 (H Rept 243).

S 226 -- Reported, amended, by Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee April 24 (S Rept 222).

HR 5610 -- Passed, amended, by the House by voice vote May 4.

• Passed by the Senate by voice vote May 5.

PL 86-28 -- Signed into law May 19.

Congress in 1959 enacted legislation providing a 10 percent increase in railroad retirement benefits and increasing employer-employee tax rates to help finance the cost. The bill also liberalized railroad unemployment benefits, which are financed wholly through employer contributions. The rise in unemployment benefits was expected to cost the railroad industry an additional $150 million annually.

President Eisenhower, who for three years had sought increased taxes to finance retirement benefits enacted in 1956, signed the bill but later commented that it "was about as closely balanced between advantages and disadvantages" as any measure he had ever had to study.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, the major provisions of HR 5610:

Increased by 10 percent pensions, annuities and survivor benefits for railroad workers.

Raised employer and employee railroad retirement taxes from 6.25 percent to 7.25 percent by 1962 (both taxes jumped to 6.75 percent the month following enactment of the bill).

Provided that additional employer-employee tax increases gradually take effect until 1969, when both would reach 9 percent. (These increases would be contingent on corresponding increases in social security tax rates.)

Increased from $350 to $400 the monthly wage base on which taxes are levied.

Increased from 3 percent to 3.75 percent the maximum employer contribution to the railroad unemployment insurance account.

Increased daily unemployment insurance benefits from a maximum $8.50 to $10.20.

Provided that railroad employees with 10-15 years service could receive unemployment benefits for a maximum of 26 weeks and employees with 15 or more years of service could receive benefits for 39 weeks. (Existing law provided a uniform 13 weeks period.)

Extended regular unemployment benefit periods until July 1, 1959, to conform to provisions of PL 86-7, extending the Temporary Unemployment Compensation Act of 1958. (See p. 219)

Provided that the Railroad Retirement Board could borrow, at a 3 percent interest rate, from the railroad retirement account for payment of benefits and refunds under the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act.

Background

Congress in 1956 voted a 10 percent increase in railroad retirement benefits but did not include any revenue provisions in the legislation. President Eisenhower, upon signing the bill, said it was "imperative" that Congress "act promptly in the next session (to) finance the cost of these benefit increases...." (1956 Almanac p. 301)

In the 85th Congress, the President repeated his request for financing legislation. The Senate in 1958 passed a bill, similar to the 1959 measure, that would have raised railroad retirement benefits by 10 percent and railroad unemployment compensation benefits by approximately 20 percent, in addition to raising employer-employee tax rates. The bill, designed to bring railroad retirement benefits into line with social security benefit increases enacted in 1958, was not acted on by the House before the 85th Congress ended. (1958 Almanac p. 300)

In his 1959 Budget Message, President Eisenhower asked Congress to put the railroad retirement system on a sound actuarial basis by increasing employment taxes on workers and carriers and to increase from $4,200 to $4,800 the annual wage base on which benefits were computed and taxes paid.

1959 Action

Early in 1959, both House and Senate committees reported bills similar to the 1958 proposals. The House bill, reported by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee March 23 (HR 5610 -- H Rept 243), set a 3.5 percent ceiling on employer contributions to the unemployment insurance account and made no provision for length-of-service differentials in unemployment compensation. The Senate bill (S 226), reported by the Labor and Public Welfare Committee April 24 (S Rept 222), was essentially the same as the bill finally enacted, except that it carried a 4 percent ceiling on unemployment contributions.

Both chambers passed slightly different versions of S 226 by voice vote April 29. The Senate first adopted, by voice vote, an amendment by Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) to reduce the maximum employer contribution to the unemployment insurance account from 4 percent to 3.75 percent.

Later the same day the House also passed S 226, after substituting for the Senate text the amended text of HR 5610. The single floor amendment, offered by Harley O. Staggers (D W.Va.) and adopted by a 181-91 standing vote, was a substitute bill almost identical to the Senate measure. The House Republican Policy Committee estimated that the unemployment provisions of the substitute would cost the railroads an additional $150 million annually, compared to a $100 million annual increase in the bill reported by the Commerce Committee.

Final Action

The House May 4, insisting on its constitutional prerogative to originate tax measures, vacated its April 29 passage of S 226 and instead passed identical language that carried the House number (HR 5610).

The Senate May 5 agreed to accept the House number on its bill and passed HR 5610 by voice vote. Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) said the Senate had a right to originate a bill in which tax increases were only "an incidental feature" but he did not "wish to quibble over the matter."

President Eisenhower May 19 signed HR 5610 (PL 86-28) without comment. However, Mr. Eisenhower June 3, in reply to a press conference question on the advisability of general application of the railroad unemployment program, said he "would not take all of the features of that bill and make them part of my own particular plan for solving this problem in a broader base."

Meanwhile, on the House floor, Minority Leader Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.) denied charges that the President had signed the bill only because GOP polls showed a veto could not be overridden. Halleck said the President's position was not known at the time of the House vote but that he had assured Mr. Eisenhower a veto could be sustained. Senate Minority Leader Dirksen May 19 had expressed "grave doubts" that a veto could be sustained in either chamber.

ILLINOIS LAND PURCHASE

S 747 — Reported by Senate Government Operations Committee July 23, 1959 (S Rept 565).
● Passed by the Senate Aug. 12 by voice vote.

S 747 was a compromise between proposals of the state of Illinois and the General Services Administration for the transfer of nearly 2,500 acres of land held by the Army as part of the Joliet Arsenal.

As passed by the Senate S 747 authorized the GSA to sell 946 acres of land in Will County, Ill., to the state for $286,638 and the Army to transfer 1,500 contiguous acres to the state, reserving to the U.S. all oil and mineral rights in the land. The bill provided that the land would revert to the Federal Government if the state ceased to use it for wildlife, conservation and recreation purposes.

Senate passage of the bill was delayed by Sen. Wayne Morse (D Ore.), who waged a three-day fight against it. He contended the bill violated the "Morse formula" under which public agencies should pay 50 percent, and private interests 100 percent, of the fair market value of Federal lands transferred to them. He lost, on a 13-83 roll-call vote, a motion to recommit the bill for one week to the Government Operations Committee so that further study could be given to the value of the Joliet Arsenal lands. (For voting, see chart p. 432)

BACKGROUND -- The Army bought 36,000 acres in Will County, Ill., during World War II for a powder plant and in 1948 leased 4,388 acres to the state for the Des Plaines Wildlife and Public Hunting Area. Part of this land was declared surplus in 1958. The state sought transfer of the land but the General Services Administration, believing it had industrial value, opened the land for bidding. A compromise later was reached under which 1,500 acres on the Des Plaines River would be sold for industrial development, Illinois would pay $296,638 for 946 acres of the surplus land and receive an additional 1,500 acres -- which the Army said it needed for reserve training -- free of charge.

As originally introduced by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.), S 747 would have transferred all of the surplus land to Illinois. The Committee amended S 747 to carry out the proposed compromise. It rejected the Army's case against the transfer.

DEBATE -- Aug. 4 -- Morse -- Since 1946 the Senate had "only rarely" violated his formula for disposing of surplus property. S 747 would deprive the Government of some $200,000 it should get under that formula.

Aug. 11 -- Edmund S. Muskie (D Maine) -- The Committee did not want to "hammer out a hard bargain in Yankee fashion" but to reach a practical solution fair to all sides.

D. C. HOME RULE

S 1681 -- Reported by Senate District of Columbia Committee (S Rept 477) July 7, 1959.
● Passed by voice vote of the Senate July 15. (For roll-call vote on amendment, see p. 426)

For the fifth time in ten years, the Senate in 1959 passed a home rule bill (S 1681) for the District of Columbia, but, as in previous years, the House District of Columbia Committee failed to act on the measure. S 1681 provided for an elected mayor, city council and non-voting delegate to the House of Representatives.

House supporters of an Administration-backed bill (HR 4630) to provide a territorial government for the District twice attempted to discharge it from the District Committee but both times failed to win the 219 signatures needed to bring the measure to a vote.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, S 1681:

Provided for an elected mayor and nine-member council to exercise municipal authority in the District.

Provided for an elected non-voting delegate to the House of Representatives.

Gave the council local legislative power including the authority to tax and borrow money, subject to certain restrictions and the overriding power of Congress to repeal, amend or initiate local legislation and to modify or revoke the charter itself.

Transferred to the council the functions of the Board of Commissioners, which would be abolished.

Provided the council with the authority to select the type of school administration.

Permitted the electorate to propose legislation and reject any enacted by the council, through initiative and referendum, and to recall any elective officer of the District.

BACKGROUND -- Under existing arrangements, Congress must enact for the District laws usually handled by a municipal government. The Federal Government also supplements the District budget through annual Federal payments.

S 1681 was the fifth home rule bill passed by the Senate since 1949. In 1955 the bill passed was similar to S 1681. In 1952 and 1958, territorial bills were passed, and in 1949 the measure approved would have provided an elected city council, which in turn would have appointed a city manager. (1958 Almanac p. 310).

President Eisenhower in his Jan. 19 Budget Message repeated his request for a territorial home rule bill for the District.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- District of Columbia.

ACTION -- July 7 reported S 1681 (S Rept 477). The bill was introduced by Sen. Wayne Morse (D Ore.).

Floor Action

The Senate July 15, by voice vote, passed S 1681 as reported by the District of Columbia Committee.

The Senate rejected, by a 15-80 roll-call vote, an amendment in the form of a substitute bill (S J Res 60) proposing a constitutional amendment to give District residents the right to vote in Presidential elections and send three voting delegates to the House of Representatives. (For voting, see chart p. 426)

The amendment was offered by Francis Case (R S.D.), who said "the only way in which the District residents can have real home rule is for them to have some (voting) representation in the Congress." Case also said his amendment would stand a better chance of approval by the House Judiciary Committee than would a home rule bill before the House District Committee.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

Case -- Substitute for the bill a proposed constitutional amendment to give the citizens of the District of Columbia the opportunity to vote in Presidential elections; July 15. Roll-call vote, 15-80.

DEBATE -- July 15 -- J. Glenn Beall (R Md.) -- S 1681 "represents the cumulative thinking of the members of the Senate District of Columbia Committee, other members of the Senate and innumerable local residents who have testified on the bill.... I stand today to urge the adoption of this form of home rule."

Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) -- "The people of Washington, just as the people of any other American city, should have the right to be governed by officials of their own choosing. This right is indeed basic and fundamental under our philosophy of government."

House

COMMITTEE -- House District of Columbia, Special Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- July 28, Aug. 3-6 and Sept. 2 on home rule proposals, including the Administration-backed bill (HR 4630) to give the District territorial status with a Governor appointed by the President and an elected 15-member legislative assembly. These were the first House hearings on home rule in 10 years.

During the hearings, the Subcommittee heard testimony from Members of Congress, District residents and other proponents of home rule on the advisability of self-government for the District.

Some members questioned the constitutionality of such a move. At the July 28 hearings, Subcommittee Chairman James C. Davis (D Ga.) read a statement by Committee Chairman John L. McMillan (D S.C.), which said the only "real problem confronting this Committee is a constitutional problem." He and other Subcommittee members cited Article I, Section 8 of the Constitution which gives Congress authority "to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever" of the District. McMillan said, "If it is right that the seat of the Government should be a territory, which I very much doubt, then it is easy to submit a constitutional amendment."

HOUSE DISCHARGE PETITION

In an effort to force a House vote on home rule, a discharge petition was filed in the House July 30 by Rep. Abraham J. Multer (D N.Y.), sponsor of HR 4630. The petition would have discharged from the House Rules Committee and brought to the floor a resolution (H Res 320) that, in its turn, would have discharged HR 4630 from the District of Columbia Committee and brought it to the floor under a closed rule limiting debate to one hour and prohibiting floor amendments. Multer's first petition received only 65 signatures.

On Aug. 20, with the first petition still pending, Multer made a second attempt to bring HR 4630 to the floor by filing another petition to bring a more liberal resolution (H Res 339) to a vote. H Res 339 would permit two days of debate and some, though not unlimited, amendments. When Congress adjourned Sept. 15, the second petition had received 120 of the 219 signatures required.

PRESIDENT'S VIEWS

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- Sept. 9 -- President Eisenhower indicated continued support of home rule and national suffrage for D.C. residents, although he did not directly endorse a specific proposal. His position was made known in a letter from David W. Kendall, special counsel to the President, to Sen. Estes Kefauver (D Tenn.), chairman of the Senate Judiciary Constitutional Amendments Subcommittee, which was holding a one-day hearing on a proposed constitutional amendment (S J Res 138) to give D.C. residents three elected delegates to the House and representation in the electoral college.

Sept. 11 -- The Kefauver Subcommittee voted 5-1 to approve an amended version of S J Res 138 which would permit District residents to elect as many non-voting delegates to the House as the District would have Representatives if it were a state and the right to vote in Presidential elections.

COLORING OF ORANGES

S 79 --	Reported by Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee (S Rept 50) Feb. 6, 1959.
•	Passed by voice vote of the Senate Feb. 9.
•	Reported by House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee (H Rept 88) March 2.
•	Passed by a 213-94 roll-call vote of the House March 13. (See p. 352)
PL 86-2 --	Signed into law March 17.

Congress in 1959 heeded the pleas of Florida and Texas orange growers and enacted stop-gap legislation permitting continued use of toxic dyes to color the skins of mature oranges.

S 79 amended the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act to permit, until Sept. 1, 1961, the artificial coloring of orange skins with a coloring agent known as Citrus Red No. 2. The bill permitted use of the dye under tolerances found safe by the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare. Although the dye would not be completely free of toxicity, the Food and Drug Administration in Feb. 19 testimony before the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee said its use would not be detrimental to the public health.

Previously, the orange industry had been using a somewhat more toxic coloring additive -- Citrus Red No. 32, which the HEW Secretary Nov. 10, 1955 ordered removed from the certified list. However, Congress in 1956 authorized continued use of No. 32 through Feb. 28, 1959 because the artificial coloring of oranges was found to be an "economic necessity" for the industry. The Supreme Court upheld the Secretary's order Dec. 15, 1958 and banned use of No. 32 after the 1956 law lapsed Feb. 28.

The House Committee, in reporting S 79 (H Rept 88) March 2, said it intended to study possible amendments to the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act dealing with color additives generally and to recommend permanent changes in the law.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

HR 1321 -- Reported by House Government Operations Committee (H Rept 235) March 20, 1959.

S 144 -- Reported by Senate Government Operations Committee (S Rept 142) March 24.

- Passed by the Senate by a 60-27 roll-call vote April 8. (See p. 404)
- Passed by the House April 15 after HR 1321 had been passed on a 254-131 roll-call vote. (See p. 356)
- Vetoed April 27.
- The Senate, by a 64-29 roll-call vote, April 28 voted to override the veto; the House, by a 280-146 roll-call vote, sustained the veto April 30. (See p. 409, 356)

S 144, a bill to give the Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration rather than the Secretary of Agriculture final authority to approve or disapprove REA loans, was vetoed by President Eisenhower on grounds that if enacted it "would mark a major retreat from sound administrative policy and practice." Proponents of the legislation said it was designed to keep the REA free of politics. Opponents called it a politically motivated bill aimed at Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson.

Although the Senate voted 64-29 to override -- two votes more than the required two-thirds majority -- the House, on a 280-146 roll call, fell four votes shy of the necessary majority. The failure of the overriding attempt -- the first of the session -- persuaded Democratic leaders to modify their legislative goals for 1959.

PROVISIONS -- As sent to the President, S 144:

Restored to the REA and its Administrator all REA functions that were transferred to the Department of Agriculture and the Secretary of Agriculture by Reorganization Plans No. 2 of 1939 and 1953.

Continued the Secretary's authority for general direction and supervision of REA but gave the REA Administrator final authority over REA loans.

BACKGROUND -- Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1939, making the REA a unit of the Agriculture Department, assigned the REA Administrator specific authority to carry out the functions given REA by Congress but gave the Secretary of Agriculture supervisory power, which the courts interpreted as permitting him to veto REA loans. Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1953 took the authority to carry out REA functions away from the Administrator and vested it directly in the Secretary, who was empowered to delegate it back to the Administrator or any other Agriculture functionary. (1953 Almanac p. 290)

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Government Operations.

ACTION -- March 24 reported (S Rept 142) S 144, sponsored by Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.) and 24 other Senators. The report said the Agriculture Department had not exercised its final authority over REA loans until June 1957, when the REA Administrator was directed to submit all loan applications for over $500,000 (subsequently raised to $1 million) to the Agricultural Credit Services director for review. The report said it "was clearly the intent of Congress when it established the REA that all of its powers should be exercised by the REA Administrator."

Sen. Homer E. Capehart (R Ind.), in a dissenting view, said the "fragmentation of authority" proposed in the bill was an "administrative monstrosity."

Floor Action

The Senate April 8, by a 60-27 roll-call vote, passed S 144. Before passage, it rejected by a 13-74 roll call an amendment in the nature of a substitute, offered by Sens. Richard B. Russell (D Ga.) and Carl T. Curtis (R Neb.), to make REA an independent agency. (For voting, see chart p. 404)

House

COMMITTEE -- Government Operations.

HEARING -- March 6 on identical bills, which included S 144 and HR 1321.

ACTION -- The Committee's March 20 report (H Rept 235) on HR 1321 carried a minority statement signed by 10 of the 11 Republican members of the Committee. They said it was administratively unworkable and that testimony showed that the Secretary of Agriculture had never interfered in any way with REA loan applications.

Floor Action

The House April 15, by a 254-131 roll-call vote, passed HR 1321 in a form identical to the Senate-passed bill. (For voting, see chart p. 356) The House then passed S 144 and sent it to the President.

DEBATE -- April 14 -- Melvin Price (D Ill.), sponsor of HR 1321 -- The bill would make the REA Administrator "an independent agent with full authority," giving him "a degree of independence that will permit him to keep his agency completely free of politics. That is our desire here."

April 15 -- Ancher Nelsen (R Minn.), former REA Administrator (1953-56) -- "It is a phony issue. I regret that a program that is so near and dear to the farmers of America should be continually placed in this political crossfire and be used in campaign after campaign."

President's Veto

President Eisenhower, in vetoing S 144 April 27, said it violated the administrative doctrine that "no subordinate should have authority independent of that of his superior." Moreover, the President said, there was no evidence "that the best interests of the agency or the public would be served by removing the Administrator's loan-making authority from the general direction and supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture."

The Senate April 28 voted, by a 64-29 roll call (D 58-1; R 6-28), to override the veto; there were two votes more than the required two-thirds majority. (For voting, see chart p. 409)

The House April 30 sustained the veto by a 280-146 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 356) A two-thirds majority would have required 284 "yea" votes. Four Democrats joined 142 Republicans in upholding the President: Joseph W. Barr (Ind.), W.J. Bryan Dorn (S.C.), David S. King (Utah), Harold B. McSween (La.). The 274 Democrats voting to override the veto were joined by six Republicans: H. Carl Andersen (Minn.) E.Y. Berry (S.D.), H.R. Gross (Iowa), Walt Horan (Wash.), Odin Langen (Minn.), Alvin E. O'Konski (Wis.).

PUBLIC WORKS VETO OVERRIDDEN

HR 7509 -- Reported by House Appropriations Committee (H Rept 424) June 2, 1959. Recommended appropriation: $1,176,677,000.

- Passed, amended, by the House June 9 by a 381-20 roll-call vote. Voted: $1,177,177,000. (See p. 364-66)
- Reported by Senate Appropriations Committee (S Rept 486) July 8. Recommended: $1,256,836,300.
- Passed by the Senate by an 82-7 roll-call vote July 9. Voted: $1,256,836,300. (See p. 425)
- Conference report (H Rept 888) agreed to by voice vote of the House Aug. 14 and by an 82-9 roll-call vote of the Senate Aug. 17. Final total: $1,206,748,549. (See p. 433)
- Vetoed Aug. 26, 1959.
- Veto upheld Sept. 2 when the House failed to override it on a 274-138 roll-call vote, which was one vote short of the necessary two-thirds majority. (See p. 388)

HR 9105 -- Reported by House Appropriations Committee (H Rept 1152) Sept. 4, 1959. Recommended appropriation: $1,176,579,834.

- Passed by the House by a 304-93 roll-call vote Sept. 8. (See p. 392)
- Passed by the Senate by a 73-15 roll-call vote Sept. 8. Voted: $1,176,579,834. (See p. 444)
- Vetoed Sept. 9, 1959.
- Veto overridden Sept. 10 by a 280-121 roll-call vote of the House (12 more than the necessary two-thirds majority), and by a 72-23 roll-call vote of the Senate (eight more than the necessary two-thirds majority). (See p. 394,444)

P. L. 86-254 -- Became law Sept. 10. Final appropriation: $1,176,579,834.

The public works appropriation bill was the first measure enacted over any of President Eisenhower's 157 vetoes. The legislation in effect was vetoed twice by the President, mainly because it included 67 "new starts" on unbudgeted construction projects which he said eventually would cost the country over $800 million. The President had asked for "no new starts" in both his 1958 and 1959 budget messages.

Smarting from its one-vote failure Sept. 2 to override the first veto, the House made only one revision in its second version of the bill -- an across-the-board, 2½ percent cut in all funds. Although most Republicans followed the "economy line" on the bills, party lines were crossed by both GOP and Democratic Members in the votes to override the vetoes. Vote switching and absenteeism also played a part in Congress' final "victory" over the White House.

HR 9105 allotted $877,168,109 for Army Department civil projects, $284,507,875 for the Interior Department and $14,903,850 for the Tennessee Valley Authority. The total was $97,166 less than Administration requests.

PROVISIONS -- The breakdown of funds in HR 9105, as enacted over the President's veto:

ARMY CIVIL FUNCTIONS

Quartermaster, cemeterial expenses	$ 8,964,150
Corps of Engineers	(868,203,959)
General investigations	10,481,250
Construction	661,356,247
Operation and maintenance	114,934,950
General expenses	12,324,000
Mississippi River	69,068,512
St. Lawrence Engineer Board	39,000
Subtotal	$ 877,168,109

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT

Bureau of Reclamation	($ 250,368,250)
General investigations	4,668,992
Construction, rehabilitation	132,466,171
Operation and maintenance	28,402,725
Loan program	6,080,587
Administrative expenses	4,290,000
Upper Colorado River fund	74,459,775
Southeastern Power Administration	716,625
Southwestern Power Administration	1,979,250
Bonneville Power Administration	31,443,750
Subtotal	$ 284,507,875
Tennessee Valley Authority	$ 14,903,850
TOTAL	$1,176,579,834

In addition, the bill made permanent appropriations from receipts of $8,729,259, and authorized the transfer to the Interior Department's Fish and Wildlife Service of $3,950,000 from the Engineers' funds and $200,000 from the Reclamation Bureau for wildlife conservation in connection with their projects.

Background

President Eisenhower, in his Jan. 19 Budget Message, reiterated his 1958 request for "no new starts" on public works and asked for a stretch-out of projects already underway. Administration requests totaled $1,176,677,000. In 1958, Congress disregarded the President's request and included 65 unbudgeted "new starts" in the fiscal 1959 public works bill, holding that they would help combat the recession. (1958 Almanac p. 357)

Before Congress agreed on the final version of the first fiscal 1960 public works bill (HR 7509), the President July 20 warned: "It is my firm judgment that the present and future welfare of the American people requires that sky-rocketing of Federal spending be stopped." He said that to provide adequate security, meet the Nation's responsibilities and "still avoid the continuing inflation which results from higher and higher budget expenditures leading to deficits, we must avoid committing ourselves to larger and larger expenditures in future years." He added that the fact that providing funds to start new construction would "result in only relatively small increases in expenditures in 1960 seems to me immaterial." His statement was in a letter to Rep. John Taber (R N.Y.), who had asked the President for his opinion on the public works bill.

House (HR 7509)

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

ACTION -- June 2 reported HR 7509 (H Rept 424), recommending $1,176,677,000. Although the total was the same as budget estimates the Committee thoroughly rejected the "no new starts" policy by a reprogramming of funds. There had been "overwhelming bipartisan rejection" of the President's policy during hearings, with requests made for approximately $210 million more than budget estimates, according to the Committee report.

It said rigid application of the President's policy could result in "absurdities." As an example, the Committee said the failure to budget funds for deepening Pascagoula Harbor, Miss., would make it "impossible" to launch four nuclear submarines being built at Pascagoula for the Navy. "It can only be concluded that the Administration purposely intended to put the Congress in the position of overrunning the budget," the report said, and recommended $1,242,000 for the work.

The Committee disallowed a $500,000 request for water hyacinth eradication in eight Southern states, stating that testimony on the program was "vague" and there seemed "no justification" for involving the Government in a program on which state organizations already were working. (1958 Almanac p. 304)

Floor Action

The House June 9 passed HR 7509 by a 381-20 roll-call vote. The amended bill totaled $1,177,177,000 -- only $500,000 more than Administration requests -- but it included funds for 24 new surveys and 44 new construction and planning programs by the Army Corps of Engineers plus construction starts on seven new Reclamation Bureau projects in the West. In all, it carried funds for 363 projects.

The House rejected, by a 149-251 roll-call vote, a recommittal motion by Rep. John Taber (R N.Y.) designed to reduce by 5 percent each construction item of $5 million or more. It accepted, by a 199-198 roll call, an amendment to provide $500,000 for a water hyacinth eradication program and rejected, by a 192-205 roll call, an amendment to provide $75,000 for an Eau Galle River, Wis., flood control project. (For voting, see charts p. 364, 366)

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 7509 appropriated:

Army Department
Quartermaster Corps	$ 9,194,000
Engineers Corps	863,940,500
Interior Department
Reclamation Bureau	253,409,500
Bonneville Power Administration	32,582,000
Secretary's Office	2,765,000
Tennessee Valley Authority	15,286,000
TOTAL	$1,177,177,000

The bill also covered $8,729,259 in appropriations received from sales of electric power and energy, and for use by the Southwestern Power Administration and Reclamation Bureau for operation and maintenance.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Otto E. Passman (D La.) -- Add $500,000 for the water hyacinth eradication program. June 5, standing vote, 59-58, teller, 59-55; June 9, roll call, 199-198.

Ivor D. Fenton (R Pa.), as modified by James G. Fulton (R Pa.) -- Hold $1.4 million in construction funds available for Allegheny River reservoir project after disposition of pending legal action of Seneca Indians, completion of engineering studies and approval of the Appropriations Committee; June 5. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Lester R. Johnson (D Wis.) -- Add $75,000 for a flood control project on Eau Galle River, Wis. Accepted June 5, standing, 64-49, teller, 69-51; rejected June 9, roll call, 192-205.

William H. Meyer (D Vt.) -- Add $10,000 for preliminary studies of a Lake Champlain waterway; June 5. Standing, 54-68.

Seymour Halpern (R N.Y.) -- Add $13,000 for navigation study of Little Neck Bay, L.I., N.Y.; June 5. Voice.

Fred Wampler (D Ind.) -- Add $15,000 for Wabash River Basin study; June 5. Voice.

Wampler -- Add $52,000 for four Indiana flood control projects; June 5. Standing, 42-39; teller, 43-53.

D.R. Matthews (D Fla.) -- Add $47,000 for survey of Suwanee River, Fla.; June 5. Voice.

Robert L. Sikes (D Fla.) -- Make any unallocated construction funds available for improvement of Escambra River, Fla.; June 5. Standing, 33-41; teller, 37-49.

Hamer H. Budge (R Idaho) -- Add $500,000 for Burns Creed, Idaho, water control project; June 5. Standing, 45-50; teller, 45-72.

DEBATE -- June 5 -- Clarence Cannon (D Mo.) -- "In no single instance in the last several years" had the Corps of Engineers given the Committee "a true figure on estimated costs.... They were either incompetent or deliberately misleading."

Edwin E. Willis (D La.) -- Water hyacinths, with their long roots, blocked all navigation channels and had done over $30 million worth of damage a year in Louisiana alone.

John Taber (R N.Y.) -- Opposed providing funds for Eau Galle River project because the Army Engineers reported a "benefit-cost ratio of 1.1 to 1," and "we all know" it would cost more than the $7.2 million estimate.

Edward P. Boland (D Mass.) -- The Committee rejected the "no new starts" policy because it believed the bill "represents an investment in America."

Senate (HR 7509)

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

ACTION -- July 8 reported HR 7509 (S Rept 486) and recommended $1,256,836,300 -- a $79,659,300 increase over House-voted funds.

The Committee added 62 unbudgeted projects to the 68 voted by the House for the Army Corps of Engineers, approved six of the seven unbudgeted reclamation projects voted by the House, and added three more. One of those added was a $2.4 million appropriation to begin Federal construction of power facilities on the Trinity River project in California's Central Valley. The Administration for three years had urged Congress to authorize private development of power from the Trinity project, which already was under construction. The "partnership" proposal was turned down by the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee. (See p. 266)

The report on the bill said there was urgent need for "adequate appropriations" to develop natural resources "in keeping with the exploding population growth of the United States." The report said 40 Army construction projects would be completed with budget-recommended funds and that it was "essential therefore that some new starts be added each year." It said new construction starts in the House and Senate bills together involved a future commitment of $647,755,000 and that since this was less than one year's construction at the going rate, "it is apparent that the Committee has been conservative in their recommendation."

Floor Action

The Senate July 9 passed HR 7509 by an 82-7 roll-call vote, accepting without change the recommendations of its Appropriations Committee. The Senate rejected, by a 17-72 roll-call vote, a motion by Sen. John J. Williams (R Del.) to recommit the $1,256,836,300 bill and report it back with reductions bringing the total to the $1,176,-677,000 recommended by the President. (For voting, see chart p. 425)

As sent to conference, the bill authorized a total of 139 new planning and construction programs.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, HR 7509 appropriated:

Army Department
Quartermaster Corps	$ 9,194,000
Engineers Corps	932,468,800
Interior Department
Reclamation Bureau	263,872,500
Bonneville Power Administration	32,250,000
Secretary's Office	2,765,000
Tennessee Valley Authority	16,286,000
TOTAL	$1,256,836,300

DEBATE -- July 9 -- Carl Hayden (D Ariz.) -- As a result of the reclamation provisions, 73,000 acres would receive a full supply of water during fiscal 1960 and an additional 67,000 acres would get supplemental water.

John J. Williams (R Del.) -- Opposed bringing new acreage into production "to produce commodities of which we have an overabundance."

Richard L. Neuberger (D Ore.) -- "Irrigated lands do not grow surplus crops."

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) -- Supported Williams' recommittal motion and said it would "be better for these projects to be started in a period of economic recession... rather than in a period of economic revival."

Thomas H. Kuchel (R Calif.) -- Expressed appreciation that funds were included for Federal construction of power facilities at the Trinity River so that opposition to the project "may be frustrated."

Conference (HR 7509)

The final version of HR 7509, appropriating a total of $1,206,748,549, was agreed to by voice vote in the House Aug. 14 and by an 82-9 roll-call vote in the Senate Aug. 17. (For voting, see chart p. 433)

As reported Aug. 12 by conferees (H Rept 888), the bill provided $30,071,549 more than budget requests.

The 67 unbudgeted "new starts," covering 32 states, involved an initial outlay of $51,510,600. Rep. Clarence Cannon (D Mo.), chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, said the bill called for new or resumed starts on 52 Corps of Engineers construction projects and represented "a net future commitment of $482 million, or less than 10 percent above the future commitment on projects included in the budget." (The Budget Bureau's estimated cost for the 52 projects was $598,231,100; the cost of 15 unbudgeted Reclamation Bureau projects, including six on which loans, not grants, were to be made, was set at $206,295,500, bringing the estimated total for unbudgeted projects to $804,526,000.)

First Veto Message

President Eisenhower Aug. 26 vetoed HR 7509, saying the bill, with its inclusion of the 67 projects, "ignores the necessity for an orderly development of America's water resources within the Nation's fiscal ability." He said the unbudgeted projects would, "at the proper time, make an important contribution to the economic development of the areas in which they are to be built," but that "by any sound test of urgency, these projects should not be started this year if we are to have a responsible Federal fiscal policy."

The President said Congress "in the last four years has added to budgeted construction over 200 unbudgeted starts, involving total costs of nearly $3.8 billion.... This tremendous expansion in Government expenditures in just one area in so short a period of time brings into sharp focus how Congress by action in one year builds increases into the Federal budget in future years."

He said that without any of the unbudgeted projects, Corps of Engineers and Reclamation Bureau expenditures would reach "an all-time high" of $1.1 billion in fiscal 1960, and that "just to carry on construction currently underway" would require by 1962 expenditures "approaching twice as much as those of fiscal 1955 -- and will ultimately cost $6 billion."

He urged enactment of a new bill with no new starts, but made one exception -- a start on the $60 million Trinity River power plant in California. He said if Congress continued its refusal to provide for the private development he favored, funds for Federal construction should be appropriated since the dam was being built and power facilities should be in place as soon as the reservoir was full.

The veto was the President's 144th and the seventh sent to Congress in 1959.

ADMINISTRATION SUPPORT ASKED

Secretary of the Interior Fred A. Seaton, in what was interpreted as an effort to rally support to the Administration, told a Sept. 1 news conference he probably would recommend starts on eight new reclamation projects in 1960 if Congress sustained the veto. The eight projects were included in the bill and their total first-year cost would be $11,283,000. They included: Trinity power facilities, Calif.; Greater Wenatchee project, Wash.; and three units each in the Missouri River basin and Upper Colorado River projects.

Seaton said there was bound to be "public censure and a demand for a drastic cut in expenditures" if works programs were scheduled "beyond a reasonable hope for realization."

On Capitol Hill, the Republicans' economy arguments in support of the veto were expressed Aug. 31 by Rep. Thomas B. Curtis (R Mo.), who told the House economy "has to begin with the Congressman's own district." Democratic arguments were pinpointed Sept. 1 when Reps. Joe L. Evins (D Tenn.) and Wayne N. Aspinall (D Colo.) called for overriding the veto and stressed Congress' responsibility to help provide "orderly development" of resources.

Veto Upheld

The President's veto was upheld by the House Sept. 2 when a 274-138 roll-call vote to override it fell one vote short of the necessary two-thirds majority. Voting to override the veto were 263 Democrats and 11 Republicans. Six Democrats joined 132 Republicans in voting to sustain it. (For voting, see chart p. 388)

The House vote on the veto was so close that before the result was announced, Cannon requested a recapitulation of Members' votes. Both at the end of the first roll call and after the recheck some Members switched their votes or said they had been incorrectly recorded.

Those who first voted to override the veto, then changed to sustain it, were Reps. J. Edgar Chenoweth (R Colo.), Willard S. Curtin (R Pa.), and Ivor Fenton (R Pa.). Rep. Burr P. Harrison (D Va.) originally voted to sustain but changed in favor of overriding. Rep. A. Sydney Herlong Jr. (D Fla.) first voted to sustain, then changed to "present," which did not count in the tally.

Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas), following his usual practice, did not vote; if he had voted to override, it would not have changed the outcome. Under the two-thirds majority situation either a switch from "nay" to "yea" or two more "yeas" were needed to override.

The six Democrats who voted to uphold the veto were: Reps. Watkins M. Abbitt (Va.), John James Flynt Jr. (Ga.), Fred Marshall (Minn.), Tom Murray (Tenn.), Howard W. Smith (Va.) and William M. Tuck (Va.).

The 11 Republicans who voted to override the veto were: Reps. Howard H. Baker (Tenn.), Leon H. Gavin (Pa.), Walt Horan (Wash.), Ben F. Jensen (Iowa), Carroll D. Kearns (Pa.), Chester E. Merrow (N.H.), Edith Nourse Rogers (Mass.), Eugene Siler (Ky.), Edna Oakes Simpson (Ill.), Keith Thomson (Wyo.) and Phil Weaver (Neb.).

House (HR 9105)

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

ACTION -- Sept. 4 reported HR 9105 (H Rept 1152), a revised version of the vetoed HR 7509 in which the only change was a 2½ percent across-the-board cut in all funds. The bill's total was $1,176,579,834, or $30,168,715 less than HR 7509 and $97,166 less than budget requests.

The Committee Sept. 3 had defeated, by a 19-19 vote, a motion to revise HR 7509 by omitting the 67 "new starts." The vote for a new bill with an across-the-board cut was 19-17.

Floor Action

The House Sept. 8 passed HR 9105 by a 304-93 roll-call vote. Voting for passage were 46 Republicans and 258 Democrats. Four Democrats and 89 Republicans opposed it. Republicans were defeated in attempts to delete the 67 disputed projects and to cut funds by an additional 2½ percent. (For voting, see chart p. 392)

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

John Taber (R N.Y.) -- Substitute for HR 9105 a measure deleting all 67 new construction projects and retaining all other appropriations of the original bill; Sept. 8. Standing vote, 91-216.

Keith Thomson (R Wyo.) -- Add $1,915,000 to the reclamation appropriation in Taber's amendment for advance planning on Greater Wenatchee Division, Cedar Bluff, East Bench, Red Willow Dam, Smith Fork, Hammong and Seedskadee projects; Sept. 8. Voice.

Ben F. Jensen (R Iowa) -- Cut each item in the revised bill by an additional 2½ percent; Sept. 8. Voice.

DEBATE -- Sept. 8 -- Jensen -- The President had "bad information" from the Budget Bureau and "his other close associates" and did not know that 32 projects he objected to were "urgently needed for flood control."

Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.) -- The President's determination to veto the bill was "made on his own responsibility."

Elmer J. Holland (D Pa.) -- The bill was "entirely necessary" and Republicans from his state who voted against it "through partisan politics" also "voted against their own state."

Taber -- About 25 of 60 disputed projects had a benefit-cost ratio that, "figured on an honest basis, would not be as good as one to one."

Senate (HR 9105)

The Senate Sept. 8 passed HR 9105 by a 73-15 roll-call vote. Voting for the bill were 18 Republicans and 55 Democrats; against it, 14 Republicans and Democrat Harry Flood Byrd (Va.). (For voting, see chart p. 444)

There was no formal Committee action on the revised bill, but prior to floor action Senate Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.) appealed for a compromise and said the White House would accept the bill if the 67 "new starts" were staggered over a two-year period and begun at the President's option. Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) said Dirksen's proposal had been met with a counter-proposal by members of the Appropriations Committee for all new starts to be made during the next 18 months while President Eisenhower still was in office. Democratic leaders probably would have "gone along with this," Johnson said, but the White House had found the proposal "not agreeable."

DEBATE -- Sept. 8 -- Dirksen -- The President felt deeply about the bill "on the basis of principle."

Johnson -- If Congress "had relied on the judgment of the Budget Directors for the past century we would have had very little construction going on."

Second Veto Message

President Eisenhower Sept. 9 vetoed HR 9105 on grounds it failed to meet his objections to HR 7509. He also said the cut in funds "could have the effect of impeding orderly work on going projects and result in an increase in cost instead of a saving."

HOUSE OVERRIDES VETO

The House, acting on the veto message immediately after receiving it Sept. 10, overrode the veto by a 280-121 roll-call vote. This was 12 votes more than the 268 "yeas," or two-thirds majority, needed to override. Voting "yea" were 20 Republicans and 260 Democrats, while voting to sustain the veto were five Democrats and 116 Republicans. (For voting, see chart p. 394)

Ten GOP Representatives who had voted Sept. 2 to sustain the first veto switched Sept. 10 and voted in favor of overriding. They were: Reps. J. Edgar Chenoweth (Colo.), Wint Smith (Kan.), Victor A. Knox (Mich.), Jackson E. Betts (Ohio), John E. Henderson (Ohio), Walter Norblad (Ore.), Robert J. Corbett (Pa.), Willard S. Curtin (Pa.), Ivor D. Fenton (Pa.) and Catherine May (Wash.).

Rep. Howard H. Baker (R Tenn.), who had voted to override the veto Sept. 2, switched his vote the other way, and voted to sustain Sept. 10. Nine of the 11 Republicans who voted against the first veto held firm Sept. 10; the other was absent.

There were 17 Republicans absent Sept. 10, compared to 10 on Sept. 2; 17 Democratic absences represented an increase of only four, leading one Republican to comment that some GOP Members who were criticized for voting against local projects possibly preferred to "get off the hook" Sept. 10 by abstaining.

SENATE ACTION

The Senate Sept. 10 overrode the veto of HR 9105 by a 72-23 roll-call vote. This was eight votes more than the necessary two-thirds majority. Voting to override were 12 Republicans and 60 Democrats, and voting to sustain the veto were two Democrats and 21 Republicans. (For voting, see chart p. 444)

PRESIDENT'S COMMENT

White House Press Secretary James C. Hagerty, when asked what Mr. Eisenhower thought of being overridden for the first time, said the President "thought that the lure of the pork barrel was a little bit too much for the Congress to avoid."

Eisenhower Veto Record

The Sept. 10 overriding of the public works veto, Mr. Eisenhower's 146th, was Congress' first such successful action since 1952, when it overrode President Harry S. Truman's veto of the McCarran-Walter Immigration and Nationality Act. The overriding vote then was 278-113 in the House and 57-26 in the Senate. (1952 Almanac p. 246)

The Senate has tried six times to override an Eisenhower veto. Although the Senate succeeded on two occasions before the public works veto, the House refused to go along in overriding a 1958 veto on a Navy Yard wages bill and a 1959 veto on a bill reorganizing the Rural Electrification Administration. The Senate failed to override a 1955 veto of a postal workers' pay bill and in 1959 failed twice to overcome housing vetoes. (See p. 661)

The House has made five efforts to override Mr. Eisenhower's vetoes and succeeded for the first time Sept. 10. In 1956 it fell 74 votes short of overriding a vetoed farm bill; in 1958 and 1959 it failed on the Navy Yard and REA bills and on Sept. 2 failed by one vote to override Mr. Eisenhower's first public works veto. (1958 Almanac p. 615)

The last President with a no-vetoes-overridden record was Warren G. Harding (R 1921-23). He, however, vetoed only six bills.

TREASURY-POST OFFICE

HR 5805 --
- Reported by House Appropriations Committee (H Rept 227) March 18, 1959. Recommended appropriations: $4,628,097,000.
- Passed by the House by voice vote March 20. Appropriations voted: same as recommended by Committee.
- Reported by Senate Appropriations Committee (S Rept 305) May 21. Recommended: $4,663,158,600.
- Passed, amended, by the Senate by a 53-3 roll-call vote May 28. (See p. 413) Voted: $4,664,027,600.
- Conference report (H Rept 425) agreed to by voice votes of the House and Senate June 3.

P. L. 86-39 -- Signed into law June 11. Final total: $4,643,363,000.

The fiscal 1960 appropriation bill for the Treasury and Post Office Departments and the United States Tax Court provided $44,964,000 less than President Eisenhower requested, with the largest cut being taken from the Post Office request. The total represented an increase of $535,255,000 over the appropriations for the same agencies in the fiscal 1959 bill.

As usual, funds that come to the Treasury Department from permanent appropriations already made available by Congress were not included in the bill. They were estimated at $8,775,166,000, of which $8 billion was designated for interest payments on the public debt. (By September 1959 the estimate had gone up $1 billion for interest on the debt.)

PROVISIONS -- The breakdown of funds in HR 5805, as signed by the President:

TREASURY
Office of the Secretary	$ 3,300,000
Bureau of Accounts	25,464,000
Bureau of the Public Debt	47,000,000
Office of the Treasurer	17,500,000
Bureau of Customs	53,865,000
Internal Revenue Service	364,250,000
Bureau of Narcotics	4,080,000
U.S. Secret Service	5,409,000
Bureau of the Mint	4,300,000
U.S. Coast Guard	257,250,000
Subtotal	$ 782,418,000
POST OFFICE
Administration	$ 71,750,000
Operations	2,993,000,000
Transportation	524,000,000
Facilities	190,660,000
Postal Modernization	80,000,000
Subtotal	$3,859,410,000
U.S. Tax Court	$ 1,535,000
TOTAL	$4,643,363,000

The bill also:

Designated $37.4 million for "public services" losses to the Post Office Department for carrying free and preferred rate mail, to carry out a provision of the Postal Policy Act of 1958 directing Congress to determine, for bookkeeping purposes, the portion of postal costs regarded as public services. (1958 Almanac p. 208) Of the total, $36.4 million was designated for payment into the postal revenues and $1 million for payment to foreign air mail carriers for such losses.

BACKGROUND -- The President's budget requests for fiscal 1960 for the two departments and the Tax Court totaled $4,688,327,000. He asked for $787,712,000 for the Treasury, $3,899,080 for the Post Office and $1,535,000 for the Tax Court.

House

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

ACTION -- Reported HR 5805 March 18 (H Rept 227), recommending $60,230,000 less than the President requested. The Committee cut $8,310,000 from the Treasury request and $51,920,000 from the Post Office estimates.

Floor Action

The House March 20 passed HR 5805 by voice vote, without amendment.

PROVISIONS -- As sent to the Senate, HR 5805 appropriated:

Treasury Department	$ 779,402,000
Post Office Department	3,847,160,000
U.S. Tax Court	1,535,000
TOTAL	$4,628,097,000

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

ACTION -- May 21 reported HR 5805 (S Rept 305) recommending appropriation of $4,663,158,600.

Floor Action

The Senate May 28 amended and passed HR 5805 by a 53-3 roll-call vote, appropriating $4,664,027,600. Before passing the bill, the Senate rejected, by a 30-34 roll-call vote, an amendment to delete from the bill a provision designating $36.4 million as the public service costs of the Post Office Department. It also rejected, by a 25-31 roll call, an amendment to increase by $12,469,000 -- to $377,100,000 -- Internal Revenue Service funds for additional enforcement personnel. The President had asked for $365,500,000, the amount finally approved by the Senate. (For voting, see chart p. 413)

As sent to conference, HR 5805 carried $24,299,400 less than the President requested and $35,930,600 more than the House had voted.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, HR 5805 appropriated:

Treasury Department	$ 784,065,000
Post Office Department	3,878,427,600
Tax Court of the U.S.	1,535,000
TOTAL	$4,664,027,600

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) -- Increase by $869,000 -- to $365,500,000 -- Internal Revenue Service funds to provide for additional enforcement personnel; May 28. Voice vote.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Olin D. Johnston (D S.C.) -- Delete a provision designating $36.4 million as the public service costs of the Post Office Department; May 28. Roll-call vote, 30-34.

Clark -- Increase by $12,469,000 -- to $377,100,000 -- Internal Revenue Service funds for additional enforcement personnel; May 28. Roll call, 25-31.

Clark -- Increase by $2,801,000 -- to $354,432,000 -- Internal Revenue Service funds for additional enforcement personnel; May 28. Standing.

DEBATE -- May 28 -- Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas) -- "Congress is not less prudent than the Executive.... (It) has cut $10 billion out of the President's last five budgets; and the Congress is going to cut the President's budget $25 million more in...this bill" (under the Senate version).

Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) -- Johnson was talking about appropriations but "what about the back door...approaches to the Treasury whereby the appropriations committees are circumvented?"

Conference

REPORT -- Senate-House conferees June 2 reported a compromise version of HR 5805 (H Rept 425). Conferees agreed to an appropriation of $15,266,000 more than was voted by the House and $20,644,600 less than the Senate approved.

ACTION -- The House and Senate June 3 agreed to the conference report by voice votes.

DEFENSE APPROPRIATION

HR 7454 --
- Reported by House Appropriations Committee May 28, 1959 (H Rept 408). Recommended appropriation: $38,848,339,000.
- Passed, amended, by the House June 3, by a 392-3 roll-call vote. (See p. 362) Appropriation voted: $38,848,339,000.
- Reported, amended, by Senate Appropriations Committee July 7 (S Rept 476). Recommended: $39,594,339,000.
- Passed, amended, by the Senate July 14, by a 90-0 roll-call vote. (See p. 426) Voted: $39,594,339,000.
- Conference report (H Rept 743) agreed to Aug. 4 by voice vote of the House and by an 85-0 roll-call vote of the Senate. (See p. 431)

P. L. 86-166 -- Signed into law Aug. 18. Final appropriation: $39,228,239,000.

Congress in 1959 appropriated $39,228,239,000 for Defense Department military activities in fiscal 1960. The final appropriation was $19,961,000 less than President Eisenhower's total requests of $39,248,200,000. In addition to new funds, the bill provided $430 million in transfers from revolving funds of the Defense Department -- an increase of $90 million over the budget estimates. To meet a request made by the President in his January Budget Message, appropriation categories in the bill were arranged by major purpose, rather than by organizational unit as in previous years.

Disputes over military manpower levels, the Nation's air defense system and funds for a nuclear-powered aircraft carrier highlighted Congressional consideration of the bill.

PROVISIONS -- The breakdown of funds in HR 7454, as signed into law:

MILITARY PERSONNEL

Subtotal	$ 3,816,535,000
TOTAL	$39,228,239,000

The breakdown by service unit:

Army	$ 9,375,805,000
Navy	11,006,503,000
Air Force	17,472,706,000
Office, Secretary of Defense	1,373,225,000
TOTAL	$39,228,239,000

The bill also:

Set a mandatory minimum strength of the Army National Guard at 400,000 and provided funds to support an Army Reserve of 300,000 and a Marine Corps of 200,000.

Permitted the Secretary of Defense to transfer from the Department's emergency fund an additional $150 million for accelerating any strategic and tactical missile program and required him to notify "promptly" the Appropriations Committees of any such transfer.

Authorized $430 million for military personnel, to be derived by transfers from service stock funds.

Provided that the President could, at his discretion, institute an airborne alert by the Strategic Air Command.

Limited to $16 million the amount for operation and maintenance of the Air Force Academy.

Background

Fiscal 1959 appropriations for regular Defense Department activities totaled $39,888,207,100. Following is a breakdown by organizational unit:

Army	$ 9,051,701,200
Navy	11,480,310,400
Air Force	17,982,276,800
Office, Secretary of Defense	1,373,918,700

President Eisenhower's fiscal 1960 budget estimates, including a March 26 supplemental request for $400,000 for the Olympic Winter Games, totaled $39,248,200,000. The breakdown by unit:

Army	$ 8,985,000,000
Navy	11,107,775,000
Air Force	17,767,200,000
Office, Secretary of Defense	1,388,225,000

The President also requested $340 million for military personnel to be derived by transfers from stock funds.

In his Jan. 19 Budget Message, the President said "the North American air defense system is well established and is being improved constantly." He said the Nike-Hercules anti-aircraft missile, "which is capable of being armed with a nuclear warhead, is replacing the Nike-Ajax. The Bomarc ground-to-air missile, capable of destroying attacking aircraft at extended ranges, will, when operational, augment manned interceptor planes. To meet the threat of attack by ballistic missiles, the Nike-Zeus missile is being developed at an accelerated pace."

The fiscal 1960 budget contemplated a reduction of 5,000 men in the Air Force, bringing total active duty military personnel to 2,520,000: Army, 870,000; Navy, 630,000; Marine Corps, 175,000; Air Force, 845,000. (The Army and Marines were taking cuts of 30,000 and 15,000 men, respectively, in fiscal 1959.) Congress was asked to repeal the mandatory minimum strengths for Army Reserve components enacted in the 1958 appropriation bill, and projected fiscal 1960 Army Reserve and National Guard strengths were set at 270,000 and 360,000, respectively.

House

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

ACTION -- May 28 reported a bill (HR 7454 -- H Rept 408) appropriating $38,848,339,000 for the Defense Department in fiscal 1960. The bill also carried $421 million in transfer authority.

In cutting $399,861,000 from the President's budget requests, the Committee balanced decreases of almost $1.2 billion against increases of almost $800 million. The decreases included $260 million for a new Navy carrier, $127.5 million for the Air Force Mace missile, $162.7 million for the Air Force Bomarc anti-aircraft missile, $101.4 million for Air Force jet transports, $100 million for aircraft modification and a 1 percent reduction in all procurement funds, amounting to $131 million.

The increases included $152.5 million for maintaining the National Guard at a strength of 400,000 and the Army Reserve at 300,000; $200 million for Army procurement, to be used either for the Nike-Zeus anti-missile missile or for modernization of equipment; $255.3 million for anti-submarine warfare capabilities; $85 million "as a down payment" for another eight squadrons of Atlas intercontinental ballistic missiles (ICBM); and $87 million to accelerate the Minuteman missile program.

The Committee's report said the Joint Chiefs of Staff, "as a corporate body, is not providing the kind of advice and leadership which this country requires." It said the Committee was "not happy over the prospect of being in second place to the U.S.S.R. in the highly significant ICBM field."

Of its decision to reduce funds for the Bomarc, the Committee said it hoped by this means to "focus attention upon the necessity for an early decision" on the air defense missile controversy, particularly on the dispute over the relative merits of the Air Force's Bomarc and the Army's Nike-Hercules, both ground-to-air missiles. The Committee said "an immediate re-examination of the whole program at the highest level is urgently required."

DECISION ON MISSILES

Earlier, the Senate Armed Services Committee May 19, in reporting the military construction authorization bill, concluded that the Nike system of air defense was "virtually obsolete" and cut most of the funds requested for new Nike sites. Senate consideration of that bill was delayed until the end of June on assurances from the Defense Department that a new decision on the Nike-Bomarc controversy would be forthcoming shortly. As a result, a new "master plan" for air defense was unveiled by the Department June 12. (See story p. 305)

The plan called for reducing expenditures on both Nike-Hercules and Bomarc and speeding up development of the anti-missile Nike-Zeus.

Floor Action

The House June 3 passed HR 7454 by a 392-3 roll-call vote. The bill carried $38,848,339,000, the full amount recommended by the Appropriations Committee. Three freshman Democrats refused to support the bill -- Randall S. Harmon (Ind.), Byron L. Johnson (Colo.) and William H. Meyer (Vt.). (For voting, see chart p. 362)

In debate starting June 2, Chairman George H. Mahon (D Texas) and other members of the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee won considerable support for their action in reducing Air Force funds (particularly for the Bomarc anti-aircraft missile), increasing Navy funds for anti-submarine warfare and increasing Army equipment funds. Debate centered on the Committee's decision to eliminate a new $260-million Navy carrier, and on floor amendments to eliminate all procurement funds for the Bomarc and to expand the Army to 900,000 men. These and several other amendments were defeated on points of order, voice and standing votes.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 7454 provided:

Army	$ 9,206,905,000
Navy	11,025,103,000
Air Force	17,228,506,000
Office, Secretary of Defense	1,387,825,000
TOTAL	$38,848,339,000

The bill also:

Provided that the President could, at his discretion, institute an airborne alert by the Strategic Air Command.

Limited to $16 million the amount for operation and maintenance of the Air Force Academy.

Authorized $421 million in transfers for military personnel.

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

Melvin R. Laird (R Wis.) -- Bar expenditure of $400,000 for Army participation in the Winter Olympic Games if "participation is denied any of the free countries of the world;" June 3. Voice vote.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Daniel J. Flood (D Pa.) -- Add $102 million to raise Army strength to 900,000 men instead of 870,000; June 3. Standing, 43-131.

Thomas B. Curtis (R Mo.) -- Strike $43.5 million of the $255 million added to the Navy's budget for anti-submarine warfare; June 3. Voice.

H.R. Gross (R Iowa) -- Delete $400,000 item for Army participation in the Winter Olympic Games at Squaw Valley, Calif.; June 3. Voice.

John R. Foley (D Md.) -- Add $10 million to Air Force funds to purchase 10 F-27 transports from the Fairchild Aircraft Co. in Hagerstown, Md.; June 3. Standing, 25-86.

William E. Minshall (R Ohio) -- Strike $200 million from Air Force funds for Bomarc procurement, leaving only $84.6 million for development of the missile; June 3. Standing, 51-178.

Alfred E. Santangelo (D N.Y.) -- Bar employment by defense contractors of retired generals and admirals within less than five years of their retirement; June 3. Standing 130-131; teller, 125-147.

DEBATE -- June 3 -- Minshall -- "After nine long years, there is not yet an operational Bomarc site.... Never have the Congress and the public been subjected to a more professional sales and promotion campaign than has been characterized by this billion-dollar boondoggle."

Clarence Cannon (D Mo.) -- "The amount of money in the bill is comparatively unimportant...The thing to be emphasized is how you spend it."

Daniel J. Flood (D Pa.) -- "Five years ago we had 20 divisions in the U.S. Army. If this bill passes, as it is, you will have 14 divisions. You have lost six divisions -- one-third of the Army."

William H. Meyer (D Vt.) -- Congress should do "something constructive about the issue of war and peace, and not keep on voting billions of dollars" for arms.

John J. Rooney (D N.Y.) -- Proponents of another Navy carrier, cut from the bill, had "agreed that the best strategy would be to forego" offering an amendment in committee or on the floor, "with the expectation that the funds will be included" by the Senate.

Don Magnuson (D Wash.) -- Few Members were aware of "the incredible lengths to which the adherents of the Nike defense system have gone in their attempt to discredit the Bomarc.... Of course, this is Army inspired."

RELATED DEVELOPMENT -- June 16 -- The Democratic Advisory Council called for appropriation of an extra $7.5 billion a year for the next four or five years to remedy what it called the "disastrous" effects of the Administration's defense policies. The Senate Republican leadership immediately assailed the council as a group of "armchair strategists" and said it "would do well to sell its ideas to its own party before spreading them on the public record as a party position."

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

ACTION -- July 7 reported HR 7454 (S Rept 476), recommending $39,594,339,000, which was $746 million more than the House had voted. The Committee recommended transfer authority from revolving funds of $450 million.

The Senate Committee made these major changes in the House-approved bill:

Provided funds to increase the size of the Marine Corps from 175,000 to 200,000; approved the House action in setting the strengths of the National Guard at 400,000, rather than the budgeted strength of 360,000, and the Army Reserve at 300,000, rather than 270,000; added language making these strengths mandatory.

Added to the $200 million extra voted by the House for the Nike-Zeus missile and/or Army modernization, another $205.3 million for Army modernization.

Added $380 million sought by the Navy for a second nuclear-powered carrier. The President had asked $260 million for a conventional carrier; no funds for either type were provided by the House.

Deleted $255.3 million added by the House for anti-submarine warfare capabilities, but added $18 million for long leadtime procurement for a nuclear anti-submarine submarine.

Restored $79.9 million of the House cut in funds requested for the Bomarc missile program.

Restored the 1 percent cut in all procurement funds, amounting to $131 million, approved by the House.

Before reporting HR 7454, the Committee rejected, by a 7-12 vote, a move by Sen. Allen J. Ellender (D La.) to add funds to increase the Army's strength from 870,000 to 900,000. Ellender's proposal was designed to prevent the deactivation and closing of Louisiana's Fort Polk.

The Committee reported that the short-range Nike-Ajax anti-aircraft missile "has virtually outlived its usefulness" and recommended "an immediate retrenchment and orderly phase-out" of the program. Unlike the House Committee, however, the Senate group made no comment on the "missile gap" or alleged shortcomings of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

REVISED AIR DEFENSE PROGRAM

The report said the Defense Department had presented the Committee with an up-dated appropriation request reflecting its revised air defense program. These changes resulted in a net increase of $147.9 million in the fiscal 1960 request.

Of the $200 million added by the House for Army procurement, the Department said it intended to use $137 million for the Nike-Zeus and $63 million for Army modernization. The Committee approved this plan, as well as recommending additional modernization appropriations of $205.3 million.

In addition, the Department said $10.8 million of the funds requested for research, development, test and evaluation of the Nike-Hercules would not be required, and the Committee made this cut.

The Department said $76.8 million of Nike-Hercules funds available for the air defense program would be transferred to the Army modernization program; only a small portion of this amount was in the 1960 budget, the rest was reprogramed from previous years. The Committee approved this action and reprogramed another $41 million for the same purpose.

The Department also requested restoration of $129.9 million of the $162.7 million House cut in Bomarc funds and requested partial restoration of the $50 million House cut in funds for the Air Force radar improvement program. The Committee restored $79.9 million for the Bomarc, but accepted the House radar funds cut.

Floor Action

The Senate July 14 passed HR 7454, by a 90-0 roll-call vote, appropriating $39,594,339,000, the full amount recommended by its Appropriations Committee. (For voting, see chart p. 426)

Before passing the bill, the Senate rejected, on a 46-46 tie vote, an amendment to reduce from $100 million to $80 million funds earmarked for Military Air Transport Service hire of supplementary commercial air carriers. Although Vice President Richard M. Nixon was present in the Senate chamber, he made no move to cast a tie-breaking vote.

Sen. Dennis Chavez (D N.M.), floor manager of the bill, was sustained in a point of order against an amendment offered by Hubert H. Humphrey (D Minn.). The amendment, overruled because it was legislation in an appropriation bill, would have earmarked $500,000 for the State and Defense Departments to contract jointly for special studies on disarmament and weapons control.

In a July 13 roll-call vote, the Senate rejected, 43-48, an amendment by Stuart Symington (D Mo.) to provide an additional $233.9 million for Army procurement and modernization of combat equipment.

An amendment to eliminate a $380 million appropriation for a nuclear-powered aircraft carrier, offered July 14 by William Proxmire (D Wis.), was rejected by voice vote. The Administration had requested $260 million for a conventional carrier. The House did not provide funds for either type but instead added $255.3 million for anti-submarine warfare capabilities.

PROVISIONS -- As sent to conference with the House, HR 7454 provided:

Army	$ 9,428,505,000
Navy	11,262,503,000
Air Force	17,530,106,000
Office, Secretary of Defense	1,373,225,000
TOTAL	$39,594,339,000

The bill also:

Set mandatory minimum strengths of the Marine Corps at 200,000, the Army Reserve at 300,000 and the Army National Guard at 400,000, and provided that 44,000 of the Army Reserve personnel must take the six-month training program.

Provided that the Secretary of Defense, with the approval of the Budget Bureau, could transfer up to 10 percent of funds for missile systems or continental air defense programs to any ballistic missile program or nonballistic strategic or tactical missile program, except the Nike-Ajax, Nike-Hercules or Bomarc programs.

Authorized $450 million for military personnel, to be derived by transfers from service stock funds.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Strom Thurmond (D S.C.) -- Require that 44,000 of the Army Reserve's personnel strength of 300,000 take the six-month training program; July 13. Voice vote.

Clair Engle (D Calif.) -- Permit the Military Air Transport Service to hire licensed air carriers that have equipment qualified for the Civil Reserve Air Fleet; July 14. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Stuart Symington (D Mo.), as modified by John A. Carroll (D Colo.) -- Increase by $233.9 million -- from $1,450,000,000 to $1,683,900,000 -- funds for procurement of Army equipment and missiles and designate $453 million of the total for modernization of Army combat equipment; July 13. Roll call, 43-48.

Thurmond -- Reduce from $100 million to $80 million funds earmarked for MATS hire of commercial air carriers; July 14. Roll call, 46-46.

William Proxmire (D Wis.) -- Eliminate the $380 million item for construction of a nuclear-powered airplane carrier; July 14. Voice.

DEBATE -- July 13 -- Symington -- All experts agree that the Administration's defense program "will result in tremendous duplication and waste." It is time for Congress to force the Administration to reorganize its defense in recognition of the nuclear age. "We should appropriate on the basis of function to be performed, rather than on some predetermined split of a given amount between the services."

Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) -- Explained that the Appropriations Committee had provided for a $380 million nuclear-powered aircraft carrier because in testimony Defense Department witnesses gave higher priority to a carrier than to antisubmarine projects voted by the House.

Henry M. Jackson (D Wash.) -- Although the bill provides too little money, if Congress goes too far over the budget estimates "such funds are most likely to be frozen" by the Administration.

July 14 -- Proxmire -- In support of his amendment to delete funds for the aircraft carrier, he said that by 1965, when the proposed carrier would join the fleet, it would be obsolete in this "age of intercontinental and intermediate range ballistic missiles."

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- July 18 -- Chairman Henry M. Jackson (D Wash.) of the Joint Atomic Energy Military Applications Subcommittee said "we do not have an effective means to stop" Russia's increasing ability to destroy U.S. cities with nuclear missiles fired from conventional submarines. His statement followed three days of Subcommittee executive briefings July 15-17 by Navy officials. Jackson said the threat would become even greater once the Soviet developed a large fleet of nuclear-powered submarines. He said the best defense would be more and better U.S. submarines, but "we are now planning to build a far smaller Polaris fleet, on a far slower timetable, than we can and should."

He called for "a greatly stepped up program of both basic and applied research and development in oceanography and undersea warfare detection and weapons systems, more attack submarines constructed at a faster rate, more Polaris submarines constructed at a faster rate."

Sept. 1 -- The House Government Operations Committee issued a report (H Rept 1112) on implementation of its 1958 recommendations for modifications of the Military Air Transportation System.

The Committee had recommended that in order to stimulate development of the commercial air services, MATS subcontract a large portion of its passenger and conventional military cargo transportation to commercial airlines and concentrate its own operations on the handling of out-size and special cargo traffic.

The Defense Department appropriation acts for fiscal 1959 and 1960 specified that a certain amount of the funds earmarked for MATS be used to hire supplementary commercial air carriers and that the Secretary of Defense should "utilize the services of civil air carriers which qualify as small business to the fullest extent found practicable." During fiscal 1959, MATS supplementary contracts amounted to approximately $109 million, of which 51 percent was awarded to carriers classified as small businesses. The fiscal 1960 bill (HR 7454) specified that $100 million of the MATS appropriation be used for subcontracts with civilian carriers.

From testimony received by the Military Operations Subcommittee May 11-14, the Committee concluded that small firms contracting with MATS had "fared comparatively well," but that certain firms could "qualify for a MATS contract without owning any equipment whatsoever and having only a very small capital investment."

The Committee concluded, "The possibility cannot be ignored that MATS encourages such operations, not only to secure bargain rates for the Government, but to prevent the civil air industry from effectively challenging its place in the sun." The Committee also indicated that because of this program small carriers which didn't qualify as small business and larger carriers were being discriminated against.

The Committee reaffirmed its 1958 recommendations that MATS modernize its equipment, expand the Civil Air Fleet and maintain a higher degree of civil fleet readiness.

Conference

REPORT -- Senate-House conferees Aug. 3 reported (H Rept 743) a compromise version of HR 7454 carrying $39,228,239,000 for the Defense Department in fiscal 1960. The final appropriation was $19,961,000 less than the President requested, $379,900,000 more than the House had voted and $366,100,000 less than the original Senate figure.

A Senate provision appropriating $380 million for a nuclear-powered aircraft carrier was dropped in conference and a new provision was substituted, providing $35 million for advance planning and procurement for such a carrier. (Previously, Rep. George H. Mahon (D Texas) July 15 said the Navy had raised its cost estimates for the proposed nuclear carrier from $380 million to $435 million.)

HOUSE, SENATE ACTION

Congress Aug. 4 cleared HR 7454 for the President's signature when the House adopted the conference report by voice vote and the Senate adopted it by an 85-0 roll call. (For voting, see chart p. 431)

SENATE DEBATE -- Aug. 4 -- J. Glenn Beall (R Md.) protested conference action that deleted an $11 million item for F-27 planes, manufactured at the Fairchild Co. plants in Maryland and Oklahoma. He said the Senate bill had provided for three types of planes that were to cost a total of $59 million: $24.5 million for the UTX, made in California, $23.5 million for the UCX, made in California and Missouri, and $11 million for the F-27. House conferees, Beall said, had voted 3-2 to delete the F-27 item while the Senate managers were unanimous in favor of retaining it. Beall said the items were to have been cut on a pro rata basis -- a little from each -- but that the House conferees had agreed to the full Senate amount for the UTX and the UCX. He said the conferees approved "the California and Missouri items in full and then became very saving when it came to the Maryland item." Beall said the two conferees who voted with the chairman of the House conferees, George H. Mahon (D Texas), were from California and Missouri, respectively. They were Harry R. Sheppard (D Calif.) and Clarence Cannon (D Mo.).

Sen. Dennis Chavez (D N.M.), chairman of the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee, told the Senate the F-27 "is a good aircraft," designed to replace obsolete C-47 transports, but "we simply could not hold the item in conference." He said, however, funds for procurement of the planes could be provided by reprograming from prior years for Air Force procurement. The Senate had agreed, he said, to permit the Defense Department to reprogram aircraft procurement funds but the House refused such consent.

Beall then withdrew his motion that the conference report be recommitted with instructions to reinstate the item, saying he was confident "the definite need for the F-27, as expressed (in the Senate)...will cause the other body to...consider the requests of the Air Force for funds with which to procure the F-27's."

RELATED DEVELOPMENTS -- Aug. 6 -- Col. John W. Richardson, president of the Reserve Officers Assn., said the White House and Department of Defense had assured him reserve forces would not be reduced in fiscal 1960. He said this meant Army Reserve strength would be kept at 300,000 even though HR 7454 did not make that level mandatory.

Oct. 3 -- Assistant Secretary of Defense Charles C. Finucane, in charge of manpower and personnel, said the Navy and Air Force had volunteered to make manpower cuts of about 5,000 men each in fiscal 1961 in order to have more money for missiles and equipment.

FUNDS FOR MILITARY BASES

HR 8575 --
- Reported by House Appropriations Committee (H Rept 811) Aug. 7, 1959. Recommended appropriation: $1,285,002,700.
- Passed by the House by voice vote Aug. 10. Appropriation voted: $1,285,002,700.
- Reported, amended, by Senate Appropriations Committee (S Rept 752) Aug. 20. Recommended: $1,428,178,700.
- Passed, amended, by the Senate by an 89-0 roll-call vote Aug. 21. (See p. 438) Voted: $1,428,178,700.
- Conference report (H Rept 1146) agreed to by the House and Senate by voice votes Sept. 4.

PL 86-275 -- Signed into law Sept. 16. Final total: $1,363,961,200.

HR 8575 provided $1,363,961,200 in fiscal 1960 appropriations for construction at military installations in the United States and abroad. The total was $199,238,800 less than the Administration requested, $78,958,500 more than the House originally voted and $64,217,500 less than the original Senate figure.

PROVISIONS -- As signed by the President, HR 8575 appropriated:

Department of Defense
Loran stations	$ 23,200,000
Advanced Research Projects Agency	23,545,000
Army	306,851,300
Army National Guard	(23,219,000)*
Army Reserve	(20,000,000)*
Navy	213,092,400
Navy Reserve	(8,980,000)*
Air Force	797,272,500
Air National Guard	(16,440,000)*
Air Force Reserve	(4,000,000)*
TOTAL	$1,363,961,200

Included in total for the Department.*

The bill also:

Limited to $139,797,000 the total obligations to be incurred for planning, design or construction of facilities at the Air Force Academy.

Limited to $29 million funds appropriated in the bill for construction of a combat operations center for the North American Air Defense Command.

BACKGROUND -- The President requested fiscal 1960 appropriations of $1,563,200,000, part of which had been authorized in previous years. The fiscal 1960 authorization bill carried $1,225,525,150. (See story p. 305)

House, Senate Action

The House Aug. 10 passed HR 8575 by voice vote in the form recommended by its Appropriations Committee. The total voted was $1,285,002,700.

In reporting the bill Aug. 7 (H Rept 811), the Committee approved funds requested for the Administration's new master plan for continental air defense. (See p. 305)

It said the new plan enabled it to cut $28 million from the $146,646,000 requested for surface-to-air missile tactical facilities.

The Senate Aug. 21 passed HR 8575 by an 89-0 roll-call vote, appropriating $1,428,178,700 -- the amount recommended by its Appropriations Committee Aug. 20 (S Rept 752). (For voting, see chart p. 438)

Congress completed action on HR 8575 Sept. 4 when the Senate and House, by voice votes, adopted the conference report (H Rept 1146) providing $1,363,961,200.

Conferees upheld the Senate in providing about $26 million for new hospital construction; the House had denied any funds for this purpose "solely because of unrealistic cost estimates." They also accepted a Senate increase of $12.2 million for Army National Guard armories.

HR 7040 — Reported May 8, 1959 by House Appropriations Committee (H Rept 350). Appropriations recommended: $6,438,839,800.

- Passed, amended, by the House May 11 by voice vote. Appropriations voted: $6,457,657,800.
- Reported, amended, by Senate Appropriations Committee June 22 (S Rept 423). Recommended: $6,559,348,600.
- Passed by the Senate June 23 by an 89-1 roll-call vote. (See p. 418) Voted: $6,559,348,600.
- First conference report (H Rept 709) agreed to by the House July 23 and the Senate July 30, by voice votes. Second conference requested to settle a disputed civil defense provision. (For Senate roll calls, see p. 430)
- After conferees failed to agree, the House Aug. 14 insisted on its civil defense provision by a 241-167 roll-call vote. (See p. 382) The Senate Sept. 4, by voice vote, agreed to the House version.

PL 86-255 -- Signed into law Sept. 14. Final total: $6,502,152,200.

HR 7040 appropriated $6,502,152,200 in fiscal 1960 for 16 independent Federal agencies and the Office of Civil and Defense Mobilization, which is under the Executive Office of the President. The compromise total was $82,035,800 less than the $6,584,188,000 Administration request.

The issue which occasioned two Senate-House conferences and delayed passage of the bill for more than two months was a difference of $15 million between House and Senate appropriations for the OCDM for civil defense funds. The Administration requested $25 million in Federal contributions to civil defense, to be matched by the states and local governments. The House Appropriations Committee recommended only $10 million, to be used to provide equipment and technical assistance. It refused to recommend another $12 million for personnel and administrative costs. House critics of the program said it would create a "bureaucracy" of new employees and would enlarge "city hall" patronage systems. The civil defense jobs (about 4,000) were authorized by Congress in 1958. (1958 Almanac p. 205)

The Senate Appropriations Committee added the budget-requested $15 million -- $12 million for civil defense personnel and administrative costs and $3 million for equipment -- to the bill. The Senate Committee said that "the law would prohibit the matching of funds" unless a state civil service or merit system were complied with. Although President Eisenhower Aug. 25, in a special request, urgently asked Congress to appropriate the $12 million, the House stuck by its cut and the Senate finally yielded.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, HR 7040 appropriated:

Office of Civil and Defense Mobilization	$ 44,235,000
Civil Aeronautics Board	65,425,000
Civil Service Commission	21,970,000
Federal Aviation Agency	535,525,000
Federal Communications Commission	10,550,000
Federal Power Commission	7,218,000
Federal Trade Commission	6,840,000
General Accounting Office	41,800,000
General Services Administration	274,496,800
Housing and Home Finance Agency	238,857,000
Interstate Commerce Commission	19,650,000
National Capital Housing Authority	40,000
National Science Foundation	152,773,000
Renegotiation Board	2,850,000
Securities and Exchange Commission	8,100,000
Selective Service System	29,278,400
Veterans Administration	5,042,544,000
TOTAL	$6,502,152,200
Indefinite appropriations	($1,053,000)

The bill also:

Limited to $50 million the total obligation of funds for carrying out the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act and further provided that all unobligated funds under the Act, as of July 1, 1959, together with receipts from sales or otherwise during fiscal 1960, be rescinded and returned to the Treasury.

House

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

ACTION -- May 8 reported HR 7040 (H Rept 350) after cutting almost every item below budget requests.

The Committee made major cuts of $76 million in the request for the Federal Aviation Agency and $31,235,000 in the request for the OCDM (including $15 million from proposed assistance to the states); this was 42 percent of the total OCDM budget. The Committee added $25 million, not requested by the Administration, for the General Services Administration for the acquiring of sites and planning for public buildings but did not grant funds for the construction of new buildings.

No funds were included for the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund because President Eisenhower had vetoed a 1958 bill which provided $589 million for the fund. (1958 Almanac p. 348) But the Committee said the fund "is defunct by over $20.6 billion" and criticized the Budget Bureau for not recommending $773,734,000 "to pay the Government's share of retirement costs." (A June 29 Civil Service Commission report put the actuarial deficiency at $27.5 billion. The deficiency represents the additional amount necessary to pay the fund's obligations, and is owed to the fund by the Federal Government.

Floor Action

The House May 11 amended and passed the bill by voice vote. It appropriated $6,457,657,800. The total was $126,530,200 below Administration requests and $18,818,000 more than the Committee recommended.

The entire increase was voted for the Veterans Administration. Amendments by Olin E. Teague (D Texas), chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, brought the VA's total to $5,039,044,000; this was $9,559,000 more than the Administration requested.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Olin E. Teague (D Texas) -- Increase from $160,000,000 to $163,373,000 the appropriation for the Veterans Administration for general operating expenses; May 11. Teller vote, 70-55.

Teague -- Increase from $777,500,000 to $792,079,000 VA funds for inpatient care and increase from $83,000,000 to $83,866,000 the amount for outpatient care; May 11. Standing, 73-40.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

Charles A. Vanik (D Ohio) -- Reduce from $57,000,000 to $51,900,000 the funds for subsidy payments to air carriers, primarily for local helicopter service; May 11. Standing, 33-44.

DEBATE -- May 11 -- Teague -- "Each year we have cut and cut the veterans' benefits until we have reached a point that is dangerous."

Albert Thomas (D Texas), chairman of the Appropriations Independent Offices Subcommittee -- It has reached the point that "if you touch anything that affects the veteran, you have committed a sin.... We (on the Committee) are not hurting anybody.... We did not cut a single employee or benefits to a single patient."

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

ACTION -- June 22 reported an amended version of HR 7040 (S Rept 423), recommending increases over House-approved figures for almost every agency, including the VA. Major additions included: $48,750,000 for the Federal Aviation Agency, of which $37 million was for air traffic operation and safety; $17,027,000 for the National Science Foundation; and $16 million above the House appropriation for the OCDM, $15 million of which was for Federal contributions to the states' civil defense programs.

These additions brought the bill's total to $6,559,348,600 -- $101,690,800 more than the House voted but $24,839,400 below the President's request.

The Senate June 23 accepted the committee amendments and passed its version of HR 7040 by an 89-1 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 418)

Conference

The House July 23 and the Senate July 30 adopted, by voice votes, the first conference report (H Rept 709). A further conference was requested, however, when both chambers could not agree on the appropriation for Federal matching grants to the states for civil defense programs.

The deadlock came when the House agreed by voice vote to a motion by Albert Thomas (D Texas) to insist on its amendment providing $10 million instead of the $25 million the President requested for the program. The Senate, by a 76-8 roll-call vote, agreed to a motion by Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) to insist on its amendment providing the full $25 million budget estimate and requested a further conference with the House. Earlier, the Senate rejected by a 12-71 roll call a motion by Stephen Young (D Ohio) to recede from its amendment and accept the House $10 million appropriation. Young criticized the civil defense program as "childish" and wasteful. (For voting, see chart p. 430)

Aug. 12, the conferees again reported that they could not agree (H Rept 887).

FINAL ACTION

The House Aug. 14, by a 241-167 roll-call vote, agreed to a motion by Rep. Thomas to insist on the $15 million cut. (For voting, see chart p. 382)

DEBATE -- Aug. 14 -- Carl T. Durham (D N.C.) -- Providing the full $25 million would "do more to put back into the local communities the responsibility for survival in the atomic age than any other action we could take."

Thomas -- "If we put these people to work (in local civil defense programs) we are putting that much money down a rathole...." If the country were attacked, the National Guard would be called on rather than civil defense workers.

The Senate Sept. 4, by voice vote, agreed to a motion by Magnuson to recede from its insistence on providing $25 million and accepted the House figure.

DEBATE -- Sept. 2 -- Stephen Young (D Ohio) -- "The civil defense we have today is a myth. The only sensible thing to do is abolish the entire present setup, let the military make plans for coping with an emergency, and get the Red Cross and similar agencies to broadcast first-aid instructions on the television and radio."

Sept. 4 -- Magnuson -- Considering two facts -- that the House had no intention of having any further conference on the civil defense item and that all the salaries in the independent agencies were dependent on passage of the bill -- "about all we can do is accept the House version." Personally, however, he favored providing the Federal matching funds to the states "because if civil defense is to be successful at all, even in its peacetime job, there must be this shift to the local communities."

BUDGET PICTURE

The Government's precariously balanced fiscal 1960 budget appeared at the close of 1959 to have slipped into the red. Budget Director Maurice H. Stans Nov. 18 said the 116-day steel strike had cut anticipated corporative tax revenues by some $600 million, wiping out the projected budget surplus. (See budget summary, p. 644)

These were the forecasts for the fiscal 1960 budget as presented in the Budget Message, Jan. 19, 1959, the mid-year Budget Review, Sept. 24, and in Stans' Nov. 18 statement. Figures are in millions of dollars.

Estimates	Expenditures	Receipts	Balance
Jan. 19	$77,030	$77,100	+$ 70
Sept. 24	78,905	79,000	+ 95
Nov. 18	78,905	78,400	- 505
In contrast, final fiscal 1959 figures showed:
(Actual)	$80,697	$68,270	-$12,427

LABOR-H.E.W. FUNDS

HR 6769 -- Reported by House Appropriations Committee (H Rept 309) April 28, 1959. Recommended appropriations: $3,915,084,181.

- Passed by the House by voice vote April 30. Appropriations voted: $3,915,084,181.
- Reported by Senate Appropriations Committee (S Rept 425) June 23. Recommended: $4,056,746,581.
- Passed by the Senate, by an 84-10 roll-call vote, with amendments, June 24. (See p. 419) Voted: $4,056,746,581.
- Conference report (H Rept 734) agreed to by a 69-14 roll-call vote in the Senate, and by voice vote in the House, July 30. (See p. 430)

P. L. 86-158 -- Signed into law Aug. 14. Final total: $3,950,938,981.

The fiscal 1960 appropriation bill for the Departments of Labor and Health, Education and Welfare provided $259 million more than President Eisenhower had requested. Almost all of the increases went to health and education programs.

Congress' treatment of the bill resembled its 1958 action. In both years budget requests for medical research were criticized as being completely inadequate to meet present-day needs and the National Institutes of Health received large increases over the President's requests. The fiscal 1959 bill had provided $167 million more than the President asked. (1958 Almanac p. 341)

In signing HR 6769, President Eisenhower issued a statement expressing his "concern" with HEW allotments, and in an action tantamount to a freeze of funds, he set forth certain criteria to be observed in authorizing research and construction programs. He said his action was based on the taxpayer's right "to have his tax money spent wisely and efficiently." (In 1957 the Budget Bureau froze an extra $17 million which Congress had voted for NIH research funds. See 1957 Almanac p. 711)

The final appropriations included $485,214,500 for the Labor Department -- a $23 million cut in budget requests -- and $3,446,227,081 for HEW -- a $282 million increase over requests. Related agencies received $19,497,400. The major HEW increases over budget figures were: $105.7 million for the National Institutes of Health, $85 million for Federal aid in hospital construction, $44.3 million for payments to Federally impacted school districts and $25 million in grants for sewage plant construction.

In addition, the bill made indefinite appropriations of $65,163,000.

The bill also prohibited purchase of Communist-manufactured equipment for teaching of science, mathematics or modern languages if such equipment was available from a non-Communist source. (See p. 331)

Background

President Eisenhower requested $3,756,848,581 for the Departments of Labor and Health, Education and Welfare and related agencies. The requests included: Labor, $570,227,000; HEW, $3,167,080,581; National Labor Relations Board, $14,230,000; National Mediation Board, $1,357,000; Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, $3,949,000; and Interstate Commission on the Potomac River Basin, $5,000.

House

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

ACTION -- April 28 reported HR 6769 (H Rept 309), recommending total appropriations of $3,915,084,181. The Committee increased the HEW budget by $181,391,700, chiefly by adding $50 million to the National Institutes of Health budget. Labor Department requests were cut by $23,156,100. The largest single item in the bill was $2,033,500,000 for grants to the states for public assistance programs, which was the total requested.

The Committee report, submitted by Chairman John E. Fogarty (D R.I.) of the Appropriations Committee Labor-HEW Subcommittee, said NIH's explanations of its budget "were the worst and most confusing that have been submitted to the Committee since the establishment of the National Institutes of Health.... The research and training in the National Institutes of Health would have to take a very distinct backward step were the Executive budget to be enacted." The report said justifications for the Eisenhower Administration budget recommendations contained "literally hundreds of incorrect figures.... By the time the Committee had concluded its hearings, it was abundantly clear that the people whose responsibility it was to prepare these justifications had been placed in an impossible position. They had obviously been assigned the task of making it appear that the budget represented progress in the field of medical research when the true facts are that in a desperate attempt to present, on paper, a balanced budget, the Bureau of the Budget, or someone in authority, had even gone so far as to set back the medical research program."

Floor Action

The House April 30 passed HR 6769 by voice vote. There were no attempts on the floor to alter any of the Appropriations Committee's recommendations.

PROVISIONS -- As sent to the Senate, HR 6769 appropriated:

Labor Department	$ 547,114,500
Health, Education and Welfare	3,348,472,281
Related agencies	19,497,400
TOTAL	$3,915,084,181

AMENDMENT REJECTED

August E. Johansen (R Mich.) -- Prohibit use of any funds by the Office of Education for pupil testing programs; April 30. Voice vote.

DEBATE -- April 30 -- H.R. Gross (R Iowa) -- Opposed HR 6769 because, in view of the financial condition of the Treasury, appropriations "ought to have been held even below the budget figures."

John E. Fogarty (D R.I.) -- Testimony on the HEW budget made it "abundantly clear...that arbitrary fiscal ceilings had been imposed on many programs without regard for their needs, merit, or their public support."

Johansen -- The Office of Education had set up "a direct form of pupil testing on a massive scale" without Congress' authority, or any debate on this new field.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations, Labor-HEW Subcommittee.

HEARINGS -- April 29, May 26-28.

HEW Secretary Arthur S. Flemming April 29 defended his department's budget on grounds the Government must "combat inflation." He said the decision to hold down medical research expenditures was made by his department, President Eisenhower and the Budget Bureau. Subcommittee Chairman Lister Hill (D Ala.) praised the House Committee's recommendations on health research, terming them "an awfully good precedent."

Increased funds for the National Institute of Mental Health were urged May 26 by Mike Gorman, executive director of the National Committee Against Mental Illness, and Dr. Nathan S. Kline, research director of Rockland State Hospital, N.Y. Kline said use of new drugs had resulted in 50,000 fewer mental hospital patients at present than would be expected on the basis of a rising mental illness curve from 1945 to 1955, and that it "verges on criminal neglect not to push while we have the advantage."

President Eisenhower's $75 million request for the National Cancer Institute May 27 was called "inadequate" by Dr. I.S. Ravdin of the University of Pennsylvania School of Medicine and Dr. Sidney Farber of Harvard Medical School. They recommended $110,203,000 in appropriations, and Farber pointed out that medical research had changed the cure rate of cancer in the last three years from one in four to one in three.

Dr. Walter Bauer, medical services chief of Massachusetts General Hospital, May 28 proposed increasing taxes on "frivolities that injure health" to balance the budget for health research.

ACTION -- The full Committee June 23 reported HR 6769 (S Rept 425), recommending $4,056,746,581 in appropriations. NIH was granted $480.7 million -- $186 million more than was budgeted. The Committee said it was "mystified by the failure of the Administration in recent years" to recognize the importance of NIH programs. A "high degree of dissatisfaction" with the proposed budget had been expressed at hearings, the report said, by the HEW Secretary, Surgeon General and NIH Director.

Progress in research, the Committee said, had led it to conclude that "the time has come to consider creating, in part with Federal funds," centralized facilities within universities "to provide highly integrated research opportunities and services to large numbers of investigators and research groups." The Committee said it "has in mind" the need for centers to study bio-mathematics, instrument development, primate colonies, germ-free life and therapeutic and metabolic processes. It termed the proposal a "significant departure from current patterns for support of research" and directed NIH to study and report on the plan.

NIH allotments, in million dollars, with the Senate allowance listed first, the House second and budget request third, were:

General research, services: $49.6; $36.4; $29.0.
National Cancer Institute: $110.2; $83.3; $75.2.
Mental health activities: $80.0; $60.4; $52.4.
National Heart Institute: $89.5; $52.7; $46.0.
Dental health activities: $10.2; $9.7; $7.4.
Arthritis, metabolic disease: $51.2; $37.8; $31.2.
Allergy, infectious disease: $41.0; $30.3; $24.1.
Neurology, blindness: $49.0; $33.6; $29.4.

The Committee recommended a $67.5 million increase over House-voted hospital construction grants to the states, bringing the total up to the full amount authorized under the Hospital Survey and Construction Act (Hill-Burton program). The President had requested $101.2 million, the House provided $143.7 million and the Senate Committee boosted the item to $211.2 million. The report said state agency plans showed a need for 1,119,000 additional hospital and nursing-home beds, and that 64,000 additional beds were needed annually "to hold the line."

In the Office of Education, defense educational activities appropriation, the Committee stipulated that none of the funds to improve teaching of science, mathematics and foreign languages were to be used to purchase equipment from a Communist country, unless it was unavailable elsewhere. The amendment was proposed by Sen. Styles Bridges (R N.H.).

Floor Action

The Senate June 24 passed its Committee's version of HR 6769 by an 84-10 roll-call vote. (For voting, see chart p. 419) The total was $206,825,400 more than the House voted and $365,061,000 above Administration requests. It was the first measure passed by the Senate during the session that exceeded Administration requests.

The only attempt to alter Committee recommendations came from Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.), but his motion to recommit the bill and reduce it to $3,691,685,581, the amount requested by the President, was rejected by a 26-70 roll-call vote.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, HR 6769 appropriated:

Labor Department	$ 485,214,500
Health, Education and Welfare	3,551,991,081
Related agencies	19,541,000
TOTAL	$4,056,746,581

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Everett McKinley Dirksen (R Ill.) -- Four amendments to make these cuts: $21,657,000 from Office of Education payments to school districts; $22,635,000 from funds for assistance for school construction; $25 million from Public Health Service grants for waste treatment works construction; $110 million from grants for hospital construction; June 24. Voice votes.

DEBATE -- June 24 -- Lister Hill (D Ala.) -- The "shopworn, peacetime budget for medical research has been obsolete for many years;" within 5 to 10 years research expenditures should be "$2 billion to $3 billion a year."

Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) -- Approved only the increases over budget estimates for operation and construction of schools in Federally impacted areas; the others were "unwise and injudicious.... They will more than destroy, at one fell swoop, the savings we have made" in other bills.

Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) -- Was "in full accord with" the action increasing NIH funds, and commended the Committee "for its courage and foresight."

Conference

REPORT -- Senate-House conferees July 29 reported a compromise version of HR 6769 (H Rept 734) appropriating $3,950,938,981. Conferees compromised between the lower House and higher Senate allotments for NIH and hospitals, with NIH receiving a total of $400 million, and hospital construction grants totaling $186,200,000.

ACTION -- The conference report was agreed to July 30 by a voice vote in the House and by a 69-14 roll call in the Senate. (For voting, see chart p. 430)

President's Statement

The President, in an Aug. 14 statement upon signing HR 6769, said NIH appropriations had increased four-fold in the last six years, and "there is a limit to the rate at which medical research can grow and yet grow soundly." He said he was concerned that the bill, with increases of 36 percent in one year, would lower the quality of medical research projects, cause too great a manpower diversion from teaching and practice to research, and discourage further expansion of non-Federal support for such projects. He directed the HEW Secretary and Surgeon General to "satisfy themselves" that new projects would not bring these results. He also said all the construction grants in the bill "seem to me to be entirely too high in relation to other essential Government programs," and that he would ask Flemming to urge the states to give "first priority" to projects involving interstate stream pollution or affecting downstream communities.

Lobby Efforts on Communist Ban

Sen. Bridges' amendment to HR 6769 limiting purchases of Communist-manufactured teaching equipment was pressed by the Scientific Apparatus Makers Assn. (SAMA), representing 147 domestic companies who make about 80 percent of U.S. scientific equipment.

SAMA said stimulation of the domestic industry, in part through use of funds provided in the 1958 National Defense Education Act, would result in mass production and lower prices. Bridges and Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R N.Y.) urged adoption of the amendment in the belief that Russia would exploit its equipment sales to the U.S. for propaganda purposes.

The amendment was opposed by an importing firm, the Ealing Corp. of Cambridge, Mass. The company said it had ordered Russian equipment on its own initiative to meet demands for good material at reasonable prices. A spokesman for the American Assn. of Physics Teachers said it was not easy to get up-to-date teaching equipment domestically at reasonable prices. Sen. Albert Gore (D Tenn.), opposing the provision, said it seemed "a bit far-fetched to suggest that our children will be subverted" if they use Russian equipment.

STATE, JUSTICE, JUDICIARY

HR 7343 -- Reported by House Appropriations Committee (H Rept 376) May 21, 1959. Recommended appropriation: $644,890,200.

- Passed by the House, amended, by voice vote May 27. Voted: $646,890,200. (For roll-call vote on amendment, see p. 362)
- Reported, amended, by Senate Appropriations Committee (S Rept 424) June 22. Recommended: $645,418,200.
- Passed by the Senate, amended, by a 90-0 roll-call vote, June 23. Voted: $645,668,200. (See p. 418)
- Conference report (H Rept 620) agreed to by voice votes of House and Senate July 1.

PL 86-84 -- Signed into law July 13. Final appropriation: $643,934,700.

The final version of HR 7343 appropriated $643,934,700 in fiscal 1960 funds -- $215,425,500 for the State Department, $265,350,000 for the Justice Department and $163,159,200 for the Judiciary, U.S. Information Agency, the President's special international program and Civil Rights Commission. Additional Civil Rights Commission funds were carried in the mutual security appropriation bill. (See p. 191)

Total appropriations were $33,366,400 less than Administration requests, $2,955,500 less than the House voted and $1,733,500 less than the Senate voted. The fact that the total was less than either Senate or House-voted funds led Congressional leaders to term the bill a "legislative rarity."

PROVISIONS -- The breakdown of funds in HR 7343, as it became law:

STATE DEPARTMENT

Salaries and expenses	$112,000,000
Representation allowances	825,000
Acquisition of buildings abroad	17,372,000
Diplomatic and Consular Service emergencies	$ 1,000,000
Foreign Service retirement and disability fund	2,360,000
Contributions to international organizations	48,033,000
Missions to international organizations	1,922,500
International contingencies	1,900,000
U.S.-Mexico International Boundary and Water Commission	3,733,000
American sections, international commissions	345,000
International fisheries commissions	1,725,000
International educational exchange activities	23,210,000
Rama Road	1,000,000
Subtotal	$215,425,500

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT

Legal activities and general administration	$ 44,925,000
Federal Bureau of Investigation	114,600,000
Immigration and Naturalization Service	55,500,000
Federal Prison System	50,325,000
Subtotal	$265,350,000
Judiciary	$ 43,426,400
U.S. Information Agency	113,307,300
President's special international program (trade fairs and cultural exchanges)	6,145,500
Civil Rights Commission	280,000
TOTAL	$643,934,700

In addition, the bill made indefinite appropriations of $5,006,500 for referees' salaries and court expenses.

BACKGROUND -- President Eisenhower's requests totaled $677,301,100 for fiscal 1960, including: State, $228,335,000; Justice, $275,075,000; Judiciary, $45,353,100; USIA, $120,550,000; special international program, $7,700,000; Civil Rights Commission, $288,000.

House

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

ACTION -- May 21 reported HR 7343 (H Rept 376) with recommended appropriations of $644,890,200.

The Committee cut State Department requests by $10,725,000. It allotted "adequate," but unspecified, funds for a Department proposal to set up a "unit of 16 positions" to "concentrate on, and combat, international Communist activities of economic character on a worldwide basis," but said it was "at a loss" to understand why such activities had not previously been carried on either by the Bureau of Economic Affairs or the International Cooperation Administration.

Justice Department requests were cut by $10,975,000, including disallowance of the entire $9.9 million asked for a maximum security penitentiary. Appropriations recommended were $10.8 million higher than for fiscal 1959, with over 55 percent of the increase for the Federal Prison System.

In its Judiciary recommendations, the Committee noted that salaries of referees paid from "indefinite" appropriations were computed on an estimated volume of 117,000 bankruptcy cases, which it called a "new all-time high in the history of our Government."

Floor Action

The House May 27 passed HR 7343 by voice vote, providing total appropriations of $646,890,200. Before passage the House accepted, by a 266-133 roll-call vote, an amendment adding $2 million to Federal Prison System funds to begin construction of the maximum security penitentiary. (For voting see chart p. 362)

Two days of debate preceded passage, highlighted by six unsuccessful attempts by Rep. H.R. Gross (R Iowa) to reduce "representation allowances," which he said were for "liquor and entertainment," and by debate on the Federal penitentiary amendment.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the House, HR 7343 appropriated:

State Department	$217,610,000
Justice Department	266,100,000
Judiciary	43,697,400
U.S. Information Agency	113,057,300
President's Special International Program	6,145,500
Civil Rights Commission	280,000
TOTAL	$646,890,200
Indefinite appropriations	($5,006,500)

AMENDMENT ACCEPTED

Kenneth J. Gray (D Ill.) -- Add $2 million to Federal Prison System buildings and facilities funds to start construction of a maximum security institution on a site to be chosen by the Attorney General. May 26, standing, 127-49; May 27, roll-call vote, 266-133.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

H.R. Gross (R Iowa) -- Six amendments to cut $701,000 from representation allowances; three amendments to cut $20,909,500 from funds for membership and participation in international organizations; May 25-26. Voice votes.

John Bell Williams (D Miss.) -- Eliminate entire $280,000 appropriation for the Civil Rights Commission; May 26. Voice.

DEBATE -- May 25 -- Gray -- The last maximum security Federal penitentiary was built in 1902 and there now were 3,024 more prisoners than "safe places to keep them."

Gross -- Opposed "all these missions on which we send Americans, because all too often they go on these jaunts and sell us down the river."

May 26 -- Frank T. Bow (R Ohio) -- Opposed Gray's amendment because reactivation of a Minnesota penal institution in July would relieve overcrowding.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

ACTION -- June 22 reported HR 7343 (S Rept 424), recommending $1,472,000 less than the House voted.

The Committee added a section to the bill authorizing the Secretary of State to use $2 million in American-owned foreign currencies for representation and travel expenses abroad, with $40,000 of the total allotted to the U.S. Information Agency. The report said such a procedure would utilize currencies "which might otherwise become valueless because of inflation and inability to convert them for other U.S. uses."

The Committee cut $1 million from the $2 million voted by the House for a Federal maximum security prison.

Floor Action

The Senate June 23 passed HR 7343, amended, by a 90-0 roll-call vote. The bill, as sent to conference, provided $250,000 more than Appropriations Committee recommendations. The Senate rejected, by a 15-74 roll-call vote, an amendment by Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) to increase by $500,000 payments to the USIA's Informational Media Guaranty Fund, which is used to subsidize distribution abroad of American literature and films. (For voting see chart p. 418)

Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson (Texas), chairman of the Appropriations subcommittee which handled the bill, said he believed the Senate version was the first appropriation bill of the session to provide less than the House voted and that "it meets the test of prudence and effectiveness." Javits, however, protested cutting the informational media fund $500,000 below the President's request. Johnson replied that the cut was in keeping with Members' sentiments on the item and that he wanted "to put a stop to the fraud, hypocrisy and propaganda...that the Congress, as an institution, is a group of spendthrifts...."

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, HR 7343 appropriated:

State Department	$216,472,000
Justice Department	265,300,000
Judiciary	43,687,400
U.S. Information Agency	113,757,300
President's Special International Program	6,171,500
Civil Rights Commission	280,000
TOTAL	$645,668,200
Indefinite appropriations	($5,006,500)

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Lyndon B. Johnson (D Texas), Karl E. Mundt (R S.D.) -- Add $250,000 to State Department funds for international educational exchange activities for use in initiating a cultural exchange program at the University of Hawaii; June 23. Voice vote.

Johnson -- Stipulate that the new maximum security penitentiary be built on publicly owned land in Marion, Ill., as selected by the Attorney General's site selection committee; June 23. Voice.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

Jacob K. Javits (R N.Y.) -- Increase by $500,000 the $3 million payment to the Informational Media Guaranty Fund; June 23. Roll-call vote, 15-74.

DEBATE -- June 23 -- Joseph S. Clark (D Pa.) -- The State Department was "so terrified" of one "very effective Representative from Brooklyn" (John J. Rooney (D N.Y.), Appropriations Subcommittee chairman) that it was "afraid to request of us the amount of money it needs" for representation expenses.

Javits -- The U.S. distributed about 20 million books abroad through the informational fund while the Russians distributed some 30 million, and an extra $500,000 would make a "very material difference" in the program.

Mundt -- The program for exporting books and films "will have to be operated more prudently." Those in charge should be told that a revolving fund was "not a fund to be spread all over the world."

John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.) -- Hoped the new penitentiary would be located in Kentucky and that Congress would let the Attorney General use "his best discretion" on a site.

Conference

REPORT -- Senate-House conferees June 30 reported a compromise version of HR 7343 (H Rept 620) appropriating $643,934,700. The final version included $1 million to begin construction of the Federal Alcatraz-type prison -- the 32nd in the Federal system -- and Bureau of Prisons Director James V. Bennett July 6 said it would be built on a 21-acre tract in the Crab Orchard Lake National Wildlife Refuge near Marion, Ill., and designed to hold 600 inmates.

Conferees allotted to the State Department $215,425,500, instead of the $228,335,000 asked by the Administration, the $217,610,000 voted by the House or the $216,472,000 voted by the Senate. House conferees rejected a Senate proposal that the State Department use $2 million in American-owned foreign currencies to boost expense accounts of U.S. ambassadors. They approved a Senate-voted $250,000 to initiate a cultural exchange program at the University of Hawaii.

The Justice Department was cut almost $10 million below Administration requests and the U.S. Information Agency was cut by $7 million.

ACTION -- The House and Senate July 1 approved the conference report by voice votes.

COMMERCE FUNDS

HR 7349 -- Reported May 25, 1959 by House Appropriations Committee (H Rept 377). Recommended appropriation: $674,687,300.

- Passed, amended, by the House May 28 by voice vote. Voted: $675,297,300.
- Reported, amended, June 16 by Senate Appropriations Committee (S Rept 397). Recommended: $715,328,500.
- Passed by the Senate June 18 by an 89-4 roll-call vote. (See p. 416) Voted: $715,328,500.
- Conference report (H Rept 621) agreed to by House and Senate July 1 by voice votes.

PL 86-88 -- Signed into law July 13. Final appropriation: $712,672,900.

The final appropriations for the Commerce Department and its related agencies for fiscal 1960 were $712,672,900 -- $2,655,600 less than the amount voted by the Senate and $37,375,600 more than the House had provided. The total was $18,918,100 less than the $731,591,000 requested by the Administration.

Controversy centered on appropriations for the designing of two superliners authorized by Congress in 1958 (1958 Almanac p. 249), subsidized ship voyages and financing of certain highways. The President asked in his 1959 Budget Message that Congress amend the law authorizing the superliners to provide for construction by private industry rather than the Government, but Congress tacked an additional $1,250,000 to the appropriations bill to pay for their design.

The final appropriation raised the number of ship voyages to be subsidized in the calendar year 1960 from 2,040, as the Administration had requested, to 2,400. A Budget Bureau analysis in September 1959 showed that this increase would cost the Government an extra $1.3 billion over a 20-year period.

Congress refused President Eisenhower's budget request that funds for highways built through national forests and public lands be furnished by the general Highway Trust Fund, made up of highway-use revenues, rather than by Congressional appropriations. This necessitated an additional appropriation of $34 million. The bill also authorized $2,840,000,000 for highway construction during fiscal 1960. This money, to be taken from the Highway Trust Fund, did not figure in the total Commerce appropriations. The $2,840,000,000 was later raised by another $188 million in the mutual security appropriation bill. (See p. 191; for story on Highway Trust Fund, see p. 285)

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, HR 7349:

Authorized the Bureau of Public Roads to draw $2,840,000,000, or as much of that figure as was available, from the Federal Highway Trust Fund to meet commitments for Federal-aid highways.

Appropriated the following:

COMMERCE DEPARTMENT

General Administration	$ 2,660,000
Bureau of the Census	101,173,500
Coast and Geodetic Survey	14,050,000
Business and Defense Services Administration	6,000,000
Bureau of Foreign Commerce	5,200,000
Office of Business Economics	1,400,000
Maritime Activities	277,024,400
Patent Office	22,000,000
Bureau of Public Roads	34,000,000
National Bureau of Standards	18,965,000
Weather Bureau	51,355,000
Subtotal	$533,827,900

RELATED AGENCIES

Panama Canal	$ 21,770,000
Small Business Administration	154,940,000
Tariff Commission	2,135,000
Subtotal	$178,845,000
TOTAL	$712,672,900

House

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

ACTION -- May 25 reported HR 7349 (H Rept 377), recommending appropriations of $674,687,300. Appropriations for the Commerce Department totaled $496,092,300, an increase of $29,329,962 over fiscal 1959 appropriations. In order to finance the 1960 national census the Census Bureau was granted $86.5 million, compared to $7.3 million in fiscal 1959.

The Committee also added an appropriation of $1,250,000 for the two superliners authorized by Congress in 1958 and went along with the Administration proposal to limit the number of ship voyages eligible for subsidies in the calendar year 1960 to 2,040.

Floor Action

The House amended and passed HR 7349 May 28 by voice vote. During the debate, points of order were sustained deleting the provisions requested by President Eisenhower that would have financed highways built through national forests ($37.1 million) and public lands ($4 million) from the general Highway Trust Fund. The House did not make any other provision for these funds.

An amendment was adopting adding $610,000 for salaries and expenses in the Census Bureau. It was made necessary because of an error in marking up the bill in committee. This brought the appropriation total to $675,297,300.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Prince H. Preston (D Ga.) -- Add $610,000 for salaries and expenses in the Bureau of the Census; May 28. Voice vote.

Joe L. Evins (D Tenn.) -- Permit the Small Business Administration to grant to the states $2,080,000 from a previously authorized special fund for research and counseling on small business problems; May 28. Voice.

H.R. Gross (R Iowa) -- Strengthen language in the bill designed to prohibit the use of appropriations for the support or defeat of legislation before Congress; May 28. Voice.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

ACTION -- June 16 reported HR 7349 (S Rept 397), recommending an appropriation of $715,328,500. The chief increases over the House total were $30 million for forest highways and $4 million for public lands highways, both omitted in the House bill.

The Committee reported estimates that the highway fund, by the end of fiscal 1960, would have a deficit of $500 million if the President's requested increase in gasoline taxes were not enacted. It therefore specified that for Federal-aid highways $2,840,000,000 "or so much thereof as may be available" in the fund could be paid to the states.

The Committee also raised to 2,600 the number of merchant marine voyages which should be eligible for subsidies in the calendar year 1960.

Floor Action

The Senate June 18 passed HR 7349 by an 89-4 roll-call vote. The $715,328,500 voted was $16 million less than the President requested and $40 million more than the House voted.

Efforts by Sens. John J. Williams (R Del.) and Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) to cut payments to ship operators were defeated. Williams' attempt to cut the number of subsidized ship voyages to 2,265 was rejected on a 23-42 roll call and the committee amendment allowing subsidies to 2,600 was agreed to by a 43-22 vote.

Douglas offered an amendment to delete the $1,250,000 for designing the two superliners. He said that once the initial payment was made, "one appropriation will follow another, and ultimately $250 million (his estimated cost of the ships) will go down the drain." Floor manager Spessard L. Holland (D Fla.) said that regardless whether the ships were built, the Government, even without a contract, was "obligated to pay for their designs." Douglas' amendment lost on a 20-42 roll call. (For voting, see chart p. 416)

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

John J. Williams (R Del.) -- Reduce to 2,265 the number of voyages for which ship operating subsidies were authorized; June 17. Roll-call vote, 23-42.

Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) -- Delete $1,250,000 for payment to shipowners for the cost of designing two superliners; June 17. Roll call, 20-42.

Conference

REPORT -- Senate-House conferees June 30 reported a compromise version of HR 7349 (H Rept 621), recommending an appropriation of $712,672,900.

The conferees accepted the Senate provision appropriating $34 million for the road-building program and limited to 2,400 the number of ship voyages that would be eligible for Federal subsidies in calendar 1960.

ACTION -- The House and Senate July 1 agreed to the conference report by voice votes.

AGRICULTURE FUNDS

HR 7175 -- Reported May 15, 1959 by House Appropriations Committee (H Rept 365). Recommended appropriations: $3,939,165,498.

- Passed, amended, by the House May 20 by voice vote. (For roll-call vote on recommittal, see p. 360) Voted: $3,939,165,498.
- Reported, amended, by Senate Appropriations Committee May 28 (S Rept 330). Recommended: $3,975,505,148.
- Passed, amended, by the Senate June 3 by a 74-10 roll-call vote. (See p. 414) Voted: $3,975,775,148.
- Conference report (H Rept 588) agreed to by House and Senate June 30 by voice votes.

PL 86-80 -- Signed into law July 8. Final total: $3,971,362,673.

Of the $3,971,362,673 appropriated in HR 7175, $1,267,840,760 was for the regular activities of the Department of Agriculture and $2,703,521,913 was for the Commodity Credit Corporation. The amount appropriated was $110,002,190 less than the $4,081,364,863 requested by the Administration.

The largest cut from the Administration request was $100 million from funds for the Commodity Credit Corporation. The cut originated in the House Appropriations Committee and was intended to encourage the CCC to sell more farm commodities in foreign markets at competitive prices. However, a Budget Bureau analysis Sept. 23 said that the $100 million cut was just a "postponement" and that this amount would have to be restored to the CCC in 1960.

The other sizable cut from Administration requests was $25 million from the Conservation Reserve Program for 1960. However, Congress added smaller amounts to appropriations for other functions of the Agriculture Department so that the net cut for the regular (non-CCC) activities was only $10 million.

Other provisions of HR 7175 increased items that would not affect the budget until fiscal 1961: authorizations of $250 million, $150 million more than the President requested, for the calendar 1960 Agricultural Conservation Program, and $33 million more than the budget request for the Farmers Home Administration.

Amendments to put a ceiling of $50,000 on price support loans were provided in different language by the Senate and House but were rendered almost ineffective by loopholes added in conference.

The appropriations carried in HR 7175 excluded funds for the Agriculture Department's Forest Service, which were provided in the Interior Department appropriation bill (HR 5915 -- see p. 339).

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, HR 7175 provided the following direct appropriations:

Agricultural Research Service
Salaries and expenses	$ 138,847,990
State experiment stations	31,803,708
Extension Service	64,123,222
Farmer Cooperative Service	615,800
Agricultural Conservation Program	241,500,000
Soil Conservation Service
Conservation operations	82,322,000
Watershed protection	22,750,000
Flood prevention	18,000,000
Water conservation and utilization projects	75,000
Great Plains conservation program	10,000,000
Agricultural Marketing Service
Marketing research and services	41,417,100
Payments to states, territories, and possessions	1,195,000
School-lunch program	110,000,000
Foreign Agricultural Service	3,518,300
Commodity Exchange Authority	909,500
Soil Bank, Conservation Reserve	335,000,000
Commodity Stabilization Service
Acreage allotments and marketing quotas	39,135,000
Sugar Act program	71,500,000
Federal Crop Insurance Corp.	6,376,700
Rural Electrification Administration	9,632,000
Farmers Home Administration	30,744,750
Office of the General Counsel	3,162,025
Office of the Secretary	2,881,000
Office of Information	1,431,665
Library	900,000
Subtotal	$1,267,840,760
Commodity Credit Corp.
Restoration of capital impairment	$1,435,424,413
Reimbursements for special activities:
International Wheat Agreement	63,875,000
Emergency famine relief	104,508,000
Sales for local currencies, PL 480	968,016,000
Migratory waterfowl feed	35,000
Bartered materials for stockpile	$ 129,000,000
Animal disease eradication	1,056,500
Grading and classing activities	1,607,000
Subtotal	$2,703,521,913
TOTAL	$3,971,362,673

In addition to appropriating funds, HR 7175:

Provided loan authorizations of $215 million to the Rural Electrification Administration and $206 million to the Farmers Home Administration.

Limited to $50,000 the total amount of CCC price-support loans and purchases made to any one person on the 1960 production of any agricultural commodity declared to be in surplus, unless such person agreed to either (1) reduce the following year's production up to 20 percent, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, or (2) repay any loan in excess of $50,000 within 12 months, or later, as determined by the Secretary; exempted cooperative marketing organizations from the limitation; directed the Secretary to issue regulations prescribing rules he determined necessary to carry out the provision.

Authorized $375 million for the calendar 1960 soil bank Conservation Reserve Program and $250 million for the calendar 1960 Agricultural Conservation Program.

Limited CRP contracts to five years, with payments not to exceed $5,000 per year, and based determination of fair rental value of land on the actual production diverted each year*; limited to $2,500 payments to individuals under the ACP, except when they participate in joint projects.

*Congress later, in extending the farm surplus disposal law (PL 86-341), repealed this provision and permitted the rate of 1960 CRP payments to be as high as the 1959 rate or at up to 20 percent above the value of the land placed under the program, the land value to be determined without regard to improvements or location. (See story p. 230)

House

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

ACTION -- May 15 reported HR 7175 (H Rept 365), recommending a cut of $42,199,365 from Administration requests for regular activities of the Agriculture Department and $100,000,000 from the request for the CCC.

The report said the Committee had taken the "drastic action" of making the $100 million cut in CCC funds "to encourage the CCC to make greater efforts to sell commodities in world markets at competitive prices." If the Department in 1958 had offered cotton competitively "as directed by law," the report said, "and sold cotton up to the point of our normal share of world markets, enormous benefits would have accrued to the American cotton producer in removing the incentive for foreign expansion. In addition, the CCC would have had more than $100 million of sales receipts to use for its general operation."

The Committee recommended an advance authorization of $250 million for the Agricultural Conservation Program, refusing the President's budget recommendation that the ACP advance authorization be reduced to $100 million. The report said testimony at hearings on the bill contained "convincing evidence as to the real value of this program to the farmer and to the entire Nation."

The Committee, in recommending that the Administration request of $360,370,000 for the Conservation Reserve Program of the soil bank be reduced by $50,370,000, said "the record of the soil bank program raises many serious questions as to the advisability of continuation of the CRP." The report said a majority of the Appropriations Agriculture Subcommittee felt the conservation objective could be handled more effectively through other soil conservation programs, particularly the ACP. Approximately 1.25 million farmers, or about 25 percent of all farming units in the Nation, the report said, participate each year in the ACP compared to less than 125,000 participants in the CRP.

The Committee recommended that the Administration request of $20 million for watershed protection projects be increased by $5.5 million and thus, in effect, refused the President's budget request to provide no new funds for initiating construction of watershed projects. The report said that "testimony before the Committee indicates that local interest continues to grow in the watershed program." It was estimated, the report said, "that a total of 1,337 project applications will be under consideration by June 30, 1960."

Floor Action

The House May 20 passed HR 7175 by voice vote after it was recommitted and amended. Before passage, a motion by John Taber (R N.Y.) to recommit the bill with instructions to add language that limited to $50,000 any single Commodity Credit Corp. price-support loan was agreed to by a 261-165 roll-call vote. (For voting see chart p. 360)

During consideration of the measure May 18, an amendment identical to Taber's, offered by William H. Avery (R Kan.), was rejected on a 49-59 teller vote. President Eisenhower asked in 1956 that Congress place a dollar limit on CCC loans in the interest of "family operated farms," but the proposal was turned down. (1956 Almanac p. 56, 390)

PROVISIONS -- As sent to the Senate, HR 7175:

Appropriated $1,235,643,585 for regular activities of the Department of Agriculture; $1,435,424,413 to restore CCC capital expended under the price-support program; and $1,268,097,500 to reimburse the CCC for other activities. TOTAL: $3,939,165,498.

Provided loan authorizations of $215 million to the Rural Electrification Administration and $206 million to the Farmers Home Administration.

Limited to $50,000 any single loan processed by the CCC; limited to $2,500 any single payment made under the Agricultural Conservation Program.

Authorized for calendar 1960 $250 million for the Agricultural Conservation Program and $325 million for the Conservation Reserve Program.

Limited CRP payments to any individual or corporation to $3,000 and contracts to five years, and based determination of fair rental value of land on the actual production diverted each year.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Robert H. Michel (R Ill.) -- Reduce from $250 million to $100 million the ACP advance authorization; May 18. Standing vote, 53-95.

John W. Byrnes (R Wis.) -- Prohibit certain "small payment increases" under the ACP; May 18. Standing, 51-89.(ACP payments are increased by a specific percentage if they are less than $200.)

William H. Avery (R Kan.) -- Prohibit any CCC loan in excess of $50,000; May 18. Teller, 49-59.

Charles A. Vanik (D Ohio) -- Delete provisions: barring published estimates of apple production for other than the commercial crop; and prohibiting purchase of twine, except for experimental work, manufactured from foreign commodities; May 18. Voice votes.

Vanik -- Provide that determination of fair rental value of land retired under the soil bank program be based on the actual production diverted each year or upon its reasonable market value as farm land, whichever is less; May 18. Voice.

DEBATE -- May 18 -- Jamie L. Whitten (D Miss.), chairman of the Agriculture Appropriations Subcommittee -- Under the $50,000 CCC loan limit, that part of production kept "out (of CCC) would get all of the domestic and foreign markets, and the part that the Government has would not be sold."

Avery -- Cited 16 CCC loans made in 1957 in excess of $250,000. The purpose of the price support program "is to aid the family farm and not the gigantic agricultural enterprise, the large corporation."

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

ACTION -- Reported HR 7175 May 28 (S Rept 330), recommending amounts very close to those approved by the House. The major appropriations change was an increase from $310 million to $340 million in funds for conservation reserve programs previously authorized. The Senate figure, however, was $20.4 million lower than the Administration request.

The Committee raised the conservation reserve advance authorization for 1960 to $450 million (compared with Administration requests of $375 million and a House figure of $325 million) because, it said, many farmers had been excluded from the program in 1959 for lack of funds. (Sen. Richard B. Russell (D Ga.), chairman of the Agriculture Appropriations Subcommittee, said the House figure would permit only 2.3 million new acres to be put in the program; the Senate figure would permit 8 million acres, raising the grand total to 31 million.)

The Committee also changed and clarified the wording of the House amendment limiting CCC loans to $50,000. The revision limited to $50,000 loans to any person on the 1960 production of all agricultural commodities.

Floor Action

The Senate June 3 passed the agriculture appropriations bill by a roll-call vote of 74-10.

Two floor amendments by Sen. John J. Williams (R Del.) cutting authorizations for the 1960 Conservation Reserve and Agricultural Conservation Programs to levels sought by the President were rejected by roll-call votes of 37-48 and 26-51, respectively. (For voting, see chart p. 414)

Except for $270,000 added by floor amendments, the Senate made no change in the amounts recommended by its Appropriations Committee.

Debate centered largely on Williams' amendments, on criticism of the soil bank and Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson, on a provision of the bill limiting price-support loans and payments to any one person or firm to $50,000 a year and on a proposal of Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) to require controls on 1960 crops.

Douglas said Benson "is trying to wreck the program by guaranteeing price supports without any restrictions on production." He offered an amendment June 3 that would have barred use of CCC funds for price supports on 1960 crops for which the Secretary had not fixed acreage allotments and production goals, but it was ruled out of order as legislation in an appropriations bill.

Benson was defended by Sen. Prescott Bush (R Conn.), who said Democrats "have fought Secretary Benson every step of the way" in opposing essential reforms in farm legislation. Bush said he would vote against the bill in protest of these tactics.

The $50,000 limitation was opposed by Richard B. Russell (D Ga.), Allen J. Ellender (D La.), John Stennis (D Miss.) and J.W. Fulbright (D Ark.) in floor speeches. However, a Stennis amendment to modify it was not formally offered.

PROVISIONS -- As passed by the Senate, HR 7175:

Appropriated $1,272,253,235 for regular activities of the Department of Agriculture; $1,435,424,413 to restore CCC capital expended under the price-support program; and $1,268,097,500 to reimburse the CCC for other activities. TOTAL: $3,975,775,148.

Provided loan authorizations of $215 million to the Rural Electrification Administration and $206 million to the Farmers Home Administration.

Limited to $50,000 the total of price-support loans and payments that could be paid by the CCC to any individual, firm or corporation on all 1960 crops; limited to $2,500 any single payment made under the Agricultural Conservation Program.

Authorized $450 million for the calendar 1960 soil bank Conservation Reserve Program and $250 million for the calendar 1960 Agricultural Conservation Program.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D Wyo.) -- Add $120,000 to enable the Agricultural Marketing Service, under 1958 legislation (PL 909, 85th Congress), to investigate unfair trade practices by meat packers (1958 Almanac p. 316); June 2. Voice vote.

John Sherman Cooper (R Ky.), as modified -- Add $150,000 for the Foreign Agricultural Service and reduce by $150,000 the amount in foreign currencies, obtained through sales under the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (PL 480), required to be used by the Service; June 2. Voice.

Gordon Allott (R Colo.) and John A. Carroll (D Colo.) -- Direct the Agricultural Marketing Service to spend $15,000 of its appropriation for range and feedlot market reporting in Colorado and adjacent areas; June 3. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

John J. Williams (R Del.) -- Reduce the 1960 authorization for the Agricultural Conservation Program from $250 million to $100 million; June 2. Roll-call vote, 26-51.

Williams (Del.) -- Reduce the calendar 1960 advance authorization for the soil bank Conservation Reserve Program from $450 million to $375 million; June 3. Roll call, 37-48.

Conference

REPORT -- A Senate-House conference committee June 29 reported HR 7175 (H Rept 588), recommending $3,971,362,673. This figure was $32,197,175 more than the funds provided in the original House version, $4,412,475 below the Senate-approved amount and $110,002,190 less than the $4,081,364,863 requested by the Administration.

Four major areas of disagreement between the House and the Senate bills were reconciled by the conferees: (1) Crop loan limitations -- under the House version, any single CCC price-support loan was limited to $50,000 while the Senate version limited to $50,000 the total amount of loans any one person could receive on all 1960 crops. The conferees limited to $50,000 loans to any person on the 1960 production of any one surplus crop, unless such person agreed either to reduce the following year's production up to 20 percent or repay any amount in excess of $50,000 within a specified period. (2) Agricultural Research Service -- received $170,651,698 compared to $165,240,998 originally provided by the House and $174,658,598 by the Senate; the Administration had requested $166,628,708. (3) Soil Conservation Service -- received $133,147,000 compared to $133,397,000 in the House bill and $127,397,000 in the Senate bill. The Administration had requested $128,647,000. Under this service, funds for the watershed protection program were compromised to $22,750,000 compared with $25,500,000 proposed by the House and $20 million provided by the Senate in accordance with the President's request that no additional funds be provided for starting new watershed construction projects. (4) Conservation Reserve Program -- received $335 million compared to the House bill's $310 million, the Senate's $340 million and the $361,420,000 Administration request. Conferees agreed to a CRP advance authorization for 1960 of $375 million, the amount requested by the Administration, compared to $325 million authorized by the House and $450 million by the Senate. Conferees also limited to $5,000 annual CRP payments to any individual or corporation, which was the same limitation as proposed by the Senate, compared to $3,000 by the House.

ACTION -- The House and Senate June 30 agreed to the conference report by voice votes.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE'S FUNDS

HR 7176 --
- Reported by House Appropriations Committee (H Rept 336) May 15, 1959. Appropriations recommended: $13,338,500.
- Passed by the House by voice vote May 27. Voted $13,338,500. (For roll-call vote on recommittal motion, see p. 362)
- Reported, amended, by Senate Appropriations Committee (S Rept 422) June 22. Recommended: $13,568,500.
- Passed by the Senate, amended, by a 79-2 roll-call vote June 24. (See p. 419) Voted $13,568,500.
- House and Senate June 29 by voice votes agreed on the final version.

PL 86-79 -- Signed into law July 8. Final total: $13,463,500.

The $13,463,500 allotted for the expenses of the President's Executive Office and various other Government agencies in fiscal 1960 (HR 7176) was $298,130 more than was appropriated in fiscal 1959 for comparable expenses and $145,000 less than the President's budget request. Congress cut in half a $250,000 request for expenses of management improvement and cut budgeted monies for the Subversive Activities Control Board by $20,000.

Funds for the Civil Rights Commission, center of debate in the 1959 budget, were included in the fiscal 1960 State and Justice Departments' appropriations. (See story p. 331)

Members in both houses complained of the use of Executive Office funds for "lobbying" in Congress and the difficulty in obtaining exact reports on White House spending.

PROVISIONS -- The final version of HR 7176 appropriated:

Executive Office of the President
Compensation of the President	$ 150,000
The White House Office	2,221,000
Special projects	1,500,000
Executive Mansion and Grounds	475,000
Bureau of the Budget	4,665,000
Council of Economic Advisers	395,000
National Security Council	792,000
President's Advisory Committee on Government Organization	57,500
President's Emergency Fund for National Defense	1,000,000
Expenses of management improvement	125,000
American Battle Monuments Commission	1,295,000
Foreign Claims Settlement Commission	408,000
Subversive Activities Control Board	380,000
TOTAL	$13,463,500

House

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

ACTION -- May 15 reported HR 7176 (H Rept 366), recommending $13,338,500 for the Executive Office and other agencies. The Committee eliminated a $250,000 item for expenses of management improvement and cut $20,000 from the Subversive Activities Control Board funds. The Committee said funds were already available to cover estimated needs.

The report's only quarrel with the Executive concerned the proper use of the President's Emergency Fund for National Defense. "This fund has been used with some frequency to initiate projects, committees and agencies which lend themselves to perpetuation long beyond defensible pretext of emergency," the report said.

Floor Action

The House May 27 passed HR 7176 by voice vote, accepting the Committee's recommendation of $13,338,500. Before passage the House rejected, by a 171-229 roll-call vote, a motion to recommit the bill with instructions to add language which would specifically prohibit use of the President's Emergency Fund for propaganda or publicity purposes relating to legislation pending before Congress. (For voting see chart p. 362)

Presidential use of the $1 million fund dominated the debate and inspired three amendments which were defeated. They would have required an accounting of the President's use of the fund, cut the fund by the amount used for a "non-emergency" study of the mutual assistance program (by the Draper Committee), and specifically prohibited use of this portion of Executive funds for propaganda on pending legislation.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

H.R. Gross (R Iowa) -- Eliminate all funds for the President's Advisory Committee on Government Organization; May 25. Standing vote, 15-26.

Charles A. Vanik (D Ohio) -- Require a report to Congress on the use of the President's Emergency Fund; May 25. Voice vote.

Gross -- Lower the Emergency Fund appropriation to $600,000; May 25. Standing, 22-57.

Vanik -- Tie the President's Emergency Fund specifically to the bill's general provision that funds shall not be used for publicity and propaganda concerning pending legislation; May 25. Standing, 24-61.

James G. O'Hara (D Mich.) -- Allow all aliens, not those from Baltic countries alone, who have been lawfully admitted for permanent residence, to be paid with funds appropriated by the bill; May 25. Standing, 19-57.

DEBATE -- May 25 -- Vanik -- "All public spending should be vouchered and accounted for.... The President should have the broadest kind of discretion for spending these funds but...the taxpayers are entitled to know how these funds have been used."

Robert H. Michel (R Ill.) -- War and cold war problems may require the President to use emergency funds for purposes which should be kept secret.

George W. Andrews (D Ala.) -- "As long as I have been on the (Appropriations) Committee the Administration has never failed to give us the amounts that have been spent and the purposes for which the money has been spent."

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

ACTION -- June 22 reported HR 7176 (S Rept 422), recommending restoration of the House cut of $250,000 for management improvement and a further cut of $20,000 in the budget of the Subversive Activities Control Board. This brought recommendations to $13,568,500.

Floor Action

The Senate June 24 passed HR 7176 by a 79-2 roll-call vote after approving committee amendments and rejecting three amendments which would have limited executive spending and scope. The amount was $230,000 more than the House had provided.

Debate consisted almost entirely of Democratic attacks on increases in Executive Office spending and on difficulties in obtaining figures for Presidential spending not listed in White House Office appropriations requests. Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) questioned specific executive expenditures both within and outside the scope of the bill, suggesting that "the President could begin to practice what he preaches." Sen. William Proxmire (D Wis.) offered, unsuccessfully, an amendment to reduce the number of White House "lobbyists". An amendment by Sen. Douglas to cut salary and expenses appropriations in order to reduce the number of super-grade personnel in the Office of the President and the Bureau of the Budget by 15 was rejected on a roll-call vote 5-75. An attempt by Douglas to require publication of indirectly appropriated executive expenses was ruled out of order. (For voting, see chart p. 419)

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Proxmire -- Reduce salaries and expenses of the White House Office by $84,281 and prohibit use of the funds for certain staff positions; June 24. Standing vote.

Douglas -- Reduce White House Office funds by $100,000 and Bureau of the Budget funds by $200,000; June 24. Roll-call vote, 5-75.

Douglas -- Reduce appropriations for Special Projects by $375,000; June 24. Voice.

DEBATE -- June 24 -- Proxmire -- "The taxpayer is now required to pay the salaries of lobbyists whose sole job is to sway the Congress to agree with the President. This is morally indefensible."

Warren G. Magnuson (D Wash.) -- "I do not believe that it adds to the concept of an independent executive working with an independent legislative (body)...for us to put unimportant restrictions on the Chief Executive."

FINAL ACTION

Final action on HR 7176 came June 29 when the House agreed to restore $125,000 to the management improvement budget and refused to concur in the additional cut of $20,000 from the Subversive Activities Control Board appropriations. The Senate then accepted the first change and receded from its amendment in the second case.

The final appropriation of $13,463,500 was $105,000 less than the Senate had appropriated and $125,000 more than the House had appropriated.

INTERIOR APPROPRIATION

HR 5915 -- Reported March 20, 1959 by House Appropriations Committee (H Rept 237). Recommended appropriations: $468,106,800.

- Passed by the House March 23 by voice vote. Appropriations voted: $468,106,800.
- Reported, amended, by Senate Appropriations Committee June 5 (S Rept 345). Recommended: $478,785,025.
- Passed by the Senate June 8 by an 82-0 roll-call vote. (See p. 415) Voted: $478,785,025.
- Conference report (H Rept 545) agreed to by the Senate and House June 15 by voice votes.

PL 86-80 -- Signed into law June 23. Final appropriation: $472,717,100.

HR 5915 appropriated $472,717,100 for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for fiscal 1960. The bill also carried $9,092,000 in indefinite appropriations (various expenses appropriated from Treasury receipts).

The Administration had requested $487,675,400 in direct appropriations and $3,426,000 in indirect appropriations. The final version of the bill increased the indirect appropriations by $5,666,000, but it cut budget requests for direct appropriations by $14,958,300.

Included in the direct appropriations total was $130,220,000 for the Agriculture Department's Forest Service. The bill did not include funds for the Interior Department's Reclamation Bureau and three power administrations, which received $284,507,875 in the public works appropriation bill (HR 9105 -- see story p. 315). In addition, the supplemental appropriation bill for fiscal 1960 (HR 7978) provided $10,187,000 for the Interior Department.

The bill was passed without controversy except for unsuccessful attempts by Rep. Richard E. Lankford (D Md.) and Sen. J. Glenn Beall (R Md.) to provide funds for the George Washington Parkway in their state. Both the House and Senate Appropriation Committees rejected a budget request of $1 million for the parkway.

PROVISIONS -- As signed into law, HR 5915 appropriated:

INTERIOR

Departmental Offices	$ 6,236,000
Bureau of Land Management	24,827,000

D.C. APPROPRIATION

HR 5676 -- Reported by House Appropriations Committee (H Rept 211) March 13, 1959. Recommended total budget: $237,186,112. Recommended Federal payment: $27,218,000.

- Passed by the House by voice vote, without amendment, March 16.
- Reported, amended, by Senate Appropriations Committee (S Rept 304) May 21. Recommended total budget: $241,569,402. Recommended Federal payment: $29,218,000.
- Passed, amended, by the Senate by a 68-0 roll-call vote May 28. (See p. 413) Total budget voted: $241,702,402. Federal payment voted: $29,351,000.
- Conference report (H Rept 639) agreed to by House and Senate on voice votes July 14.

PL 86-104 -- Signed into law July 23. Final budget: $241,289,076. Final Federal payment: $27,218,000.

HR 5676 provided a $241,289,076 fiscal 1960 budget for the government of the District of Columbia that included $27,218,000 in Federal payments. The latter was $7 million less than the Administration requested, $2,133,000 less than the Senate voted but exactly what the House voted. The bill included $34,300,000 in loan authorizations with $20 million earmarked for the District's first general fund borrowing program, to be used for increased public building. Remaining funds in the bill would be financed from D.C. revenues.

SCHOOL LUNCH PROGRAM

During Senate floor action, an amendment by Wayne Morse (D Ore.) was accepted, adding $133,000 to the Federal payment in order to set up, with matching D.C. funds, a pilot program of grade-school lunches. The Senate-voted general fund total of $27,133,000 was cut back in conference, however, to $25 million -- the sum originally voted by the House. The Administration's request for the general fund was $32 million, the authorized annual ceiling.

The Senate May 28 rejected, by a 23-47 roll-call vote, an amendment by Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) to cut from the non-Federal D.C. budget $880,000 for beginning construction of a new parkway, which he said would destroy two natural parks. (For voting, see chart p. 413)

PROVISIONS -- As it became law, HR 5676 appropriated the following funds as the Federal payment toward D.C. operating costs in fiscal 1960:

General fund	$25,000,000
Water fund	1,532,000
Sanitary sewage works fund	686,000
TOTAL	$27,218,000

The bill also authorized for capital outlay these loans: general fund, $20,000,000; highway fund, $13,100,000; water fund, $1,200,000.

ATOMIC ENERGY FUNDS

HR 8283 -- Reported by House Appropriations Committee (H Rept 685) July 17, 1959.
- Passed by the House by voice vote July 21.
- Reported by Senate Appropriations Committee, amended (S Rept 598), July 31.
- Passed, amended, by the Senate, by a roll-call vote of 79-0, Aug. 3. (See p. 431)
- Conference report (H Rept 772) agreed to by Senate and House by voice votes Aug. 6.

PL 86-164 -- Signed into law Aug. 18.

HR 8283 appropriated $2,651,614,000 in fiscal 1960 funds for the Atomic Energy Commission. The final total was $35,686,000 below the $2,687,300,000 Administration request. The House version of HR 8283 carried $58,186,000 less than the budget request; the Senate version, which restored most of the House cuts, totaled $6,886,000 less than the request. The two versions were compromised in conference.

PROVISIONS -- As enacted, HR 8283 appropriated:

Operating expenses	$2,389,114,000
Plant acquisition and construction	262,500,000
TOTAL	$2,651,614,000

In addition, the bill:

Made indefinite appropriations of $31,415,000 from Treasury receipts.

Permitted the AEC to transfer up to $16 million from its operating funds to a construction project under the civilian power reactor demonstration program.

Directed that $2 million of the funds appropriated for AEC operating expenses be transferred to and merged with funds appropriated to the National Science Foundation.

1959 SUPPLEMENTAL

HR 5916 -- Reported by House Appropriations Committee (H Rept 238) March 20, 1959. Recommended appropriations: $2,479,522,494.
- Passed by the House, amended, by voice vote March 24. Voted: $2,657,402,994.
- Reported by Senate Appropriations Committee (S Rept 207) April 18. Recommended: $2,820,040,054.
- Passed by the Senate, amended, by an 80-1 roll-call vote April 30 (See p. 409). Voted: $2,843,902,805.
- Conference report (H Rept 355) agreed to by voice votes of House and Senate May 14. (For Senate roll call, see p. 411)

PL 86-30 -- Signed into law May 20. Final appropriation: $2,764,500,380.

HR 5916, which provided supplementary funds for fiscal 1959 for various Government departments, appropriated $136,298,990 less than Administration requests.

The bill's most controversial item was the Development Loan Fund, for which President Eisenhower asked $225 million. The House Appropriations Committee refused to provide anything for the fund but Congress eventually appropriated $150 million which, with the $400 million provided in 1958, brought the fund's fiscal 1959 total to $550 million -- the same figure granted for fiscal 1960. (See story p. 191)

BACKGROUND -- The House Appropriations Committee considered budget requests of $2,864,954,526; the Senate Committee considered requests of $2,900,799,370.

House

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

ACTION -- March 20 reported HR 5916 (H Rept 238), recommending $2,479,522,494, which was $385,432,032 less than Administration requests. Although the Committee's Special Subcommittee on Deficiencies March 10 had approved $100 million for the Development Loan Fund, for which the President had asked $225 million, the Committee denied the entire request, saying it doubted the DLF could "make a sound business loan with any degree of assurance the funds will be repaid."

President Eisenhower March 20 issued a statement calling the Committee's action on his DLF request "irresponsible." He said if it was not rectified it would "do the gravest injury to the whole position of the United States in the world today," and "represent a long step backward toward isolating our country."

Floor Action

The House March 24 passed HR 5916 by voice vote. Amendments brought the total to $2,657,402,994 -- an increase of $177,880,500 over Committee recommendations. Of the total, $398,193,858 was for increased Federal pay costs voted in 1958.

The House approved, on a standing vote, a $100 million appropriation for the Development Loan Fund. It was recommended by Rep. John J. Rooney (D N.Y.), chairman of the State Department Appropriations Subcommittee.

The House also increased funds for eight other agencies for the remainder of fiscal 1959.

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Rooney -- Add $100 million for Development Loan Fund; March 24. Teller vote, 191-85; standing, 183-59.

John E. Fogarty (D R.I.) -- Increase appropriations for the Defense Education Act to $75.3 million, restoring $50.3 million requested by the Administration. March 24. Voice.

Sam Rayburn (D Texas) -- Add $100,000 for Outdoor Recreation Resources Review Commission; March 24. Voice.

Albert Thomas (D Texas) -- Add $2.5 million to Federal payment to District of Columbia, and increase by $2,064,668 D.C. funds for schools, police, fire and sanitary engineering departments; March 24. Voice.

Thomas -- Add $18 million to Post Office Department operations account; March 24. Voice.

Prince H. Preston (D Ga.) -- Authorize transfer of $900,000 from Commerce Department salaries and expenses funds to meet increased pay costs; March 24. Voice.

Olin E. Teague (D Texas) -- Add $4,306,500 to appropriation for in-patient care in Veterans Administration hospitals; March 24. Voice.

Teague -- Add $554,000 to Veterans Administration out-patient funds; March 24. Voice.

Gordon Canfield (R N.J.) -- Add $100,000 for Treasury Department salaries and expenses; March 24. Voice.

Canfield -- Add $2 million for Internal Revenue Service salaries and expenses; March 24. Voice.

Canfield -- Add $20,000 for Bureau of Narcotics salaries and expenses; March 24. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Louis C. Rabaut (D Mich.) -- Increase spending limits for various District of Columbia departments by 15 percent; March 24. Standing, 60-156.

Dale Alford (D Ark.) -- Eliminate $390,000 from Justice Department funds for expenses involved in sending U.S. marshals to Little Rock in 1958; March 24. Standing, 43-153.

George S. McGovern (D S.D.) -- Cut $74,702 from salaries and expenses in Secretary of Agriculture's office, to bring them "to 60 percent of parity;" March 24. Voice.

DEBATE -- March 24 -- Otto E. Passman (D La.) -- The Development Loan Fund item was "very little more than an actual grant," and "pressure and misrepresentation" had been exerted to get the appropriation.

Silvio O. Conte (R Mass.) -- The Administration was justified in asking $225 million for the fund, and $100 million was "the barest minimum" to avoid serious difficulties for the whole foreign aid program.

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

ACTION -- April 18 reported HR 5916 (S Rept 207), recommending an increase of $162,637,060 over House-voted authorizations, including a $200 million appropriation for the DLF. The Committee said virtually all of the fund's regular fiscal 1959 appropriation of $400 million had been committed or pledged, with about $1.5 billion in requests still awaiting action.

The Committee recommended $5,033,550 for the Office of the Architect of the Capitol, the total including $4 million to extend the Senate subway system, $750,000 to complete construction of the new Senate Office Building and $283,550 for furnishings for the new building. The House had not considered these items.

Floor Action

The Senate April 30 passed HR 5916, amended, by an 80-1 roll-call vote. It provided $2,843,902,805.

The Senate made only one change in its Appropriations Committee's recommendations: It reinstated a House-approved payment of $23.9 million to the Philippine Government as an adjustment for losses incurred when the United States devalued the dollar in 1934. The Committee had denied the funds pending further study, but Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) told the Senate the payment had been satisfactorily explained by the State Department.

The three days of debate preceding passage were highlighted by the unsuccessful attempts of Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) to cut from the bill over $4 million for furnishing the new Senate Office Building and extending the Senate subway system. His amendments were defeated by roll-call votes of 34-55 (furnishings) and 39-43 (subway).

The Senate also rejected, on a 24-54 roll call, an amendment by Sen. Allen J. Ellender (D La.) to cut by $100 million a $200 million appropriation for the Development Loan Fund. (For voting, see chart p. 409)

The Senate added to the bill riders intended to nullify Administration plans to cut Army and Marine Corps strength to 870,000 and 175,000, respectively. Senators criticized the Administration for ignoring Congress' similar 1958 attempt. (1958 Almanac p. 345)

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Leverett Saltonstall (R Mass.) -- Reinsert in the bill a provision for payment to the Philippine Government of $23,862,751; April 28. Voice vote.

Russell B. Long (D La.) -- Stipulate that no Defense Department funds could be used for any program to reduce Army strength below 900,000; April 29. Voice.

Mike Mansfield (D Mont.), Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) -- Prohibit fiscal 1959 Marine Corps personnel funds from being used if Marine Corps strength was cut below 200,000; April 30. Voice.

AMENDMENTS REJECTED

Douglas -- Eliminate $283,550 earmarked for furnishings and furniture in new Senate Office Building; April 29. Roll-call vote, 34-55.

Douglas -- Eliminate $4 million for extension of Senate subway system; April 29. Roll call, 39-43.

Allen J. Ellender (D La.) -- Cut Development Loan Fund appropriation by $100 million; April 30. Roll call, 24-54.

Douglas -- Disallow $5 million increase in funds the Defense Department could use for surplus sales; April 30. Voice.

Conference

REPORT -- A Senate-House conference committee May 13 reported HR 5916 (H Rept 355), recommending $2,764,500,380. Conferees compromised on a $150 million appropriation for the Development Loan Fund.

Senate conferees said they had receded on the Army, Marine Corps manpower provisions "with the greatest of reluctance and only because the lateness in the (fiscal) year precludes the possibility" of attaining the proposed strengths before June 30, the end of fiscal 1959.

ACTION -- The House and Senate May 14 approved the conference report by voice votes.

The Senate rejected by a 33-55 roll-call vote, a motion by Sen. Russell B. Long (D La.) to reconsider the vote on the report, which he said was called up too fast. He charged that Senate conferees had "surrendered" to the House in agreeing to delete the provisions on Army and Marine Corps strength. (For voting, see chart p. 411)

Members of the conference committee said House conferees insisted an emergency money bill was not the proper place to settle policy questions.

LEGISLATIVE FUNDS

HR 7453 -- Reported by House Appropriations Committee (H Rept 407) May 28, 1959. Appropriation recommended: $100,279,350.

- Passed by the House on a voice vote June 1. Appropriation voted: $100,279,350.
- Reported, amended, by Senate Appropriations Committee (S Rept 398) June 16. Recommended: $128,797,380.
- Passed, amended, by a 92-1 roll-call vote of the Senate June 18. (See p. 417) Voted: $128,797,380.
- Conference report (H Rept 905) agreed to by voice votes of the House Aug. 17 and the Senate Aug. 18.

PL 86-176 -- Signed into law Aug. 21. Final appropriation: $128,797,380.

Congress appropriated $128,797,380 to operate the Legislative Branch of the Federal Government in fiscal 1960. This represented an increase over fiscal 1959 appropriations of $5.5 million which was made necessary by higher costs of running most sections of the Legislative Branch.

As passed by the House, HR 7453 carried $100,279,350 but, in accordance with tradition, did not include funds for the Senate. The Senate added $28,518,030 as its share, bringing the total to $128,797,380, the sum finally accepted by both houses.

PROVISIONS -- As enacted, HR 7453 appropriated:

Senate	$ 26,406,345
House of Representatives	42,398,065
Capitol Police	143,135
Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures	24,795
Education of Pages	62,500
Miscellaneous	2,699,000
Architect of the Capitol	27,412,900
Botanic Garden	327,500
Library of Congress	14,302,790
Government Printing Office	15,020,350
TOTAL	$128,797,380

Background

The legislative budget is prepared by Congress and is not subject to revision by the Bureau of the Budget. Nor is there any central point at which the legislative budget is screened on Capitol Hill. The Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate are responsible for preparing the estimates within their respective jurisdictions. In fact, they do little more than pass along the estimates submitted to them by other officials. The House estimates, which include funds for such joint ventures as the Library of Congress and the Government Printing Office, are reviewed by an Appropriations subcommittee headed by Rep. W.F. Norrell (D Ark.). Its counterpart in the Senate is chaired by Sen. John Stennis (D Miss.). Only rarely are the estimates changed in any significant respect, either by the committees or by the House and Senate.

In practice, the power of the Appropriations Committees to control the legislative budget is limited, since most of the expenditures involved have been authorized previously by other committees and by Congress as a whole. For example, of the almost $99 million spent by the Legislative Branch in fiscal 1958, about $46 million went to pay the salaries of Senators and Representatives, and of their officers and employees -- all fixed by law or resolution.

A second barrier to tighter fiscal controls is the traditional reluctance of the Senate and the House to interfere with each other's internal affairs or for that matter with the affairs of their own Members. In 1957, motions in the House to recommit bills authorizing expenditures for the Senate were defeated when Speaker Sam Rayburn (D Texas) took the floor to state: "There has never been a time in my experience...when the House of Representatives voted something for itself that the Senate has ever changed one word of it."

Occasionally, Members objecting to the activities of a particular investigating committee attempt to cut its funds. In 1958, former Senate Minority Leader William F. Knowland (R Calif.) moved to cut funds for the Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee from $365,000 to $250,000, but lost on a 28-61 vote. Sporadic efforts in the House to cut funds for the Un-American Activities Committee have also been made without success.

SENATE REJECTS CUTS

In 1959 Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D Ill.) tried without success to cut funds for furnishing the new Senate Office Building and for extending the Senate subway system. His amendments, offered to a supplemental appropriations bill for fiscal 1959 (HR 5916), were defeated by roll-call votes of 34-55 and 39-43. (See story p. 340)

Expenditures charged to the legislative budget include a number of items that are not directly concerned with the operation of Congress, such as the entire budget for the Library of Congress, used also by the Executive Branch and the general public. But the great bulk of the increase in the cost of Congress in recent years stemmed from its legislative functions in general and its housing in particular.

Spending for legislative functions, according to the President's budget, ran at about $50 million a year from fiscal 1951 through 1954. It then began climbing to $60 million in 1955, $77 million in 1956, $90 million in 1957, $88 million in 1958, an estimated $104 million in 1959, and an estimated $136 million in fiscal 1960. Total expenditures under the full legislative budget run even higher. From $61.3 million in fiscal 1954, they were expected to reach $152.2 million in fiscal 1960.

COST OF HOUSING CONGRESS

Included in these figures, however, were most of the costs of three extensive real estate developments on Capitol Hill -- an $82-million House Office Building (the third), not above ground in 1959; a $26-million Senate Office Building (the second), completed in 1959; and a $17-million extension of the East Front of the Capitol. Actual and estimated capital expenditures for these three projects, from fiscal 1955 through fiscal 1960, totaled $100 million. Many Senators themselves remarked on the extravagance, as well as shortcomings, of their new office building. These are non-recurring costs, however, and do not represent operating expenses of Congress, which do not seem to have risen to any greater extent than those of the Executive Branch.

FIRST SUPPLEMENTAL, 1960

HR 7978 -- Reported by House Appropriations Committee June 26, 1959 (H Rept 579). Recommended appropriation: $632,568,845.

- Passed, amended, by voice vote of the House June 29. Appropriation voted: $609,843,845.
- Reported, amended, by Senate Appropriations Committee July 31 (S Rept 597). Recommended: $1,076,186,108.
- Passed, amended, by the Senate Aug. 3, by a 79-0 roll-call vote. (See p. 431)
- Conference report (H Rept 943) agreed to by voice votes of the House and Senate Aug. 19.

PL 86-213 -- Signed into law Sept. 1. Final appropriation: $977,345,608.

HR 7978, the First Supplemental Appropriation Act for fiscal 1960, provided $977,345,608 in supplemental appropriations for various agencies and departments of the Federal Government in fiscal 1959 and 1960. The total fell $240,744,947 below the President's requests and $98,840,500 short of the sum passed by the Senate. It exceeded House appropriations by $367,501,763.

Of the total, $156,285,438 was appropriated for fiscal 1959 and $821,060,170 was earmarked for use in fiscal 1960.

The biggest single item in the bill -- $500,575,000 for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration -- represented a compromise between the House figure of $462,075,000 and the Senate appropriation of $530,300,000, which also was the full amount requested for NASA by the Administration.

The final version of HR 7978 also carried $280 million for the Treasury Department to cover the initial U.S. investment in the Inter-American Development Bank, which Congress authorized earlier in 1959. (See story p. 217)

PROVISIONS -- As signed by the President, HR 7978 appropriated:

[5] $685,000 was a fiscal 1959 appropriation for contingent expenses of the Senate.

The bill also:

Required NASA to give 14 days' advance notice to the Senate and House Space Committees before using its authority under the fiscal 1960 authorization act (PL 86-45) to make expenditures of $250,000 or more for research and development.

Required NASA to give 14 days' advance notice to the Senate and House Space Committees before using its authority under PL 86-45 to make expenditures of $5 million or more for construction and equipment projects not specifically authorized by Congress.

Specified the maximum salaries for Senators' staff employees and permitted each Senator to designate titles for his employees.

Background

Congress established the National Aeronautics and Space Administration in 1958 and required, on a temporary basis, that no funds could be appropriated for the agency without prior Congressional authorization. This requirement subsequently was extended indefinitely. Congress in 1959 authorized a total of $533,654,000 for NASA -- $48,354,000 for fiscal 1959 (PL 86-12) and $485,300,000 for fiscal 1960 (PL 86-45). This was exactly the amount requested by the Administration. (See story p. 260)

Only $530,300,000 of the request was considered in HR 7978. The remaining $3,354,000, requested to cover the cost of the Federal pay raise enacted in 1958, was considered in the Second Supplemental Appropriation Act for fiscal 1959; Congress approved $3,186,000 of this request. (See story p. 340)

In acting on HR 7978, the House Appropriations Committee considered budget requests of $888,931,417. The Senate Committee considered estimates of $1,218,090,555.

House

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

ACTION -- June 26 reported HR 7978 (H Rept 579), recommending appropriations of $632,568,845. The biggest cut made by the Committee was in the money to be appropriated to the President for the purchase of strategic minerals under the Defense Production Act. The Office of Civil and Defense Mobilization told the Committee that $287.3 million was needed to replenish the revolving fund from which the minerals are purchased. The Committee recommended only $100 million. It said the agency would have $123.5 million of unspent money on hand at the end of fiscal 1959 and that the total of $223.5 million "should be adequate to finance purchases in the coming year under existing contracts."

The Committee cut $45,500,000 from the $530,300,000 NASA request; most of the cut -- $33,070,000 -- came from funds requested for research and development.

Floor Action

The House June 29 passed, by voice vote, an amended version of HR 7978, appropriating $609,843,845 for fiscal 1959 and 1960.

The largest single item in the bill was $462,075,000 for NASA for fiscal 1960. The bill contained no new funds for NASA operations in fiscal 1959 although the Appropriations Committee had recommended a total of $41,400,000 -- $18,675,000 for research and development and $22,725,000 for new construction and equipment. H.R. Gross (R Iowa) raised points of order against the two fiscal 1959 appropriation provisions on grounds that the fiscal 1960 authorization bill (PL 86-45) repealed the previously enacted fiscal 1959 authorization (PL 86-12) by barring NASA appropriations "unless previously authorized by legislation hereafter enacted by the Congress." The points of order were sustained and the 1959 NASA funds eliminated. However, Gerald R. Ford Jr. (R Mich.) countered with a successful amendment adding to NASA's fiscal 1960 appropriation part of the amount eliminated by the Gross points of order -- the $18,675,000 originally intended for fiscal 1959 research and development.

PROVISIONS -- As sent to the Senate, HR 7978 appropriated:

To the President	$110,500,000
INDEPENDENT OFFICES
Commission of Fine Arts	$ 4,500
Federal Aviation Agency	22,470,000
Foreign Claims Settlement Commission	5,670
National Aeronautics and Space Administration	462,075,000
National Mediation Board	80,000
Outdoor Recreation Resources Review Commission	850,000
River Basin Study Commission for South Carolina-Georgia-Alabama-Florida	666,000
River Basin Study Commission for Texas	720,000
Housing and Home Finance Agency	8,000,000
Total, Independent Offices	$494,871,170
Department of Health, Education and Welfare	$ 657,000
Department of the Interior	515,000
Department of State	3,102,000
Claims for damages and judgments	198,675
GRAND TOTAL	$609,843,845

AMENDMENTS ACCEPTED

Albert Thomas (D Texas) -- Require NASA to give Congress 14 days' notice before using its authority under PL 86-45 to make expenditures of $250,000 or more for research and development; June 29, Standing vote, 41-17.

Thomas -- Limit to $400,000 that portion of the appropriation for the Federal Aviation Agency which could be used to build an access road to the Chantilly airport in Northern Virginia; June 29. Voice vote.

Gerald R. Ford Jr. (R Mich.) -- Add to NASA's fiscal 1960 appropriation the $18,675,000 eliminated from its fiscal 1959 appropriation by a point of order by H.R. Gross (R Iowa); June 29. Voice. (The Ford amendment originally would have added $25 million more to NASA's 1960 research and development funds for a net increase of $43,675,000. However, the House, by a standing vote of 69-34, amended the Ford language by substituting for it the language of an amendment by Edward P. Boland (D Mass.), limiting the increase to $18,675,000).

Thomas -- Require NASA to give Congress 14 days' notice before using its authority under PL 86-45 to make unauthorized expenditures of $5 million or more for construction and equipment; June 29. Voice.

AMENDMENT REJECTED

Joel T. Broyhill (R Va.) -- Increase by $2,450,000 the Federal Aviation Agency appropriation for the construction of Chantilly airport in Northern Virginia; June 29. Voice.

DEBATE -- June 29 -- Thomas -- "Let us not rush that (NASA) agency too much.... Let us not force them into mistakes by making them act too quickly.... I have confidence that they will come up with a tremendous program."

Ford -- "I am certain a year ago if this amendment (adding $43,675,000 to NASA's fiscal 1960 appropriation) had come to the floor of the House there would not have been much difficulty in achieving success.... I am fearful if we do not fully fund this program...we will fall behind."

Boland -- Opposed the Ford amendment as originally presented because "I think we have gone far enough. We have provided in less than two years more than $500 million for research and development. Is that not enough money to get along on?"

Senate

COMMITTEE -- Appropriations.

ACTION -- July 31 reported HR 7978 (S Rept 597), recommending $1,076,186,108 -- $466,342,263 more than the House had voted. Largest item in the increase was $280 million for the Treasury Department to meet the initial U.S. investment in the Inter-American Development Bank.

The Committee restored the $23,225,000 cut from NASA's fiscal 1960 budget and added two amendments providing $45,000,000 for fiscal 1959, bringing the agency's funds for the two years up to the requested $530,300,000. Dr. T. Keith Glennan, NASA administrator, July 13 told the Committee the House cuts would have "disastrous consequences" on the Nation's space program and would retard Project Mercury, the manned satellite program. The Committee also deleted House amendments requiring advance notice to Congress of NASA spending plans.

In all, the Appropriations Committee considered budget requests totaling $1,218,090,500. In reporting HR 7978, the Committee said it had postponed action on several requests for money to buy foreign currencies derived from the Agriculture Department's PL 480 operations, which dispose of farm surpluses. The appropriations, totaling $24,453,000, would have financed various projects conducted by Federal agencies abroad. The Committee recommended that the fiscal 1961 budget show the cost in dollars of each proposed project involving the use of foreign currencies.

On the other hand, the Committee recommended certain appropriations which the President had not requested. In response to the demands of 20 Senators, but in opposition to the Bureau of the Budget and the Agriculture Department, the Committee earmarked $27 million for the Agriculture Department's Forest Service in fiscal 1960. The funds were to finance the Administration's "Program for the National Forests." The program had been submitted to Congress March 24 but the Administration favored withholding appropriations for it until fiscal 1961.

Also unbudgeted by the Administration was the Committee's recommendation for a $30-million appropriation to build a power plant and to buy new airplanes for the Military Air Transport Service.

Floor Action

The Senate Aug. 3 passed HR 7978, as reported by the Committee, by a 79-0 roll-call vote. The bill carried $1,076,186,108. (For voting, see chart p. 431)

Conference

REPORT -- Senate-House conferees Aug. 18 reported (H Rept 943) a compromise version of HR 7978 appropriating $977,345,608.

The final version of the bill appropriated $500,575,000 for NASA. Conferees accepted the basic provisions of the House bill -- $91,400,000 for salaries and expenses, $318,675,000 for research and development and $52,000,000 for construction and equipment in fiscal 1960 -- and added two cut-down Senate amendments providing additional amounts of $16,675,000 for research and development and $21,825,000 for construction and equipment for fiscal 1959.

Retained in the final version was the Senate's $280-million appropriation for the Inter-American Development Bank.

The conferees deleted from the final bill a Senate proposal to appropriate $30 million to the Defense Department to buy new airplanes for the Military Air Transport Service. The reason given for the action was a dispute which had arisen over MATS. The Air Force wanted the money, the report said, not to buy new cargo planes, but to develop a new turboprop engine which could be used for the air freight operations of MATS. The Administrator of the Federal Aviation Agency, Elwood Quesada, said he preferred a guaranteed-loan program to develop a fleet of commercial cargo carriers and suggested that the $30-million appropriation to MATS be denied. The House conferees also cited the opposition of the commercial airlines' Air Transport Assn. to "anything affecting the modernization or strengthening" of MATS. The report said the situation would be studied when the Defense Department's budget estimates for fiscal 1961 were submitted.

In other action, the conferees sharply reduced the Senate's appropriation to the Agriculture Department's Forest Service by substituting $4.5 million in place of the Senate figure of $19.5 million for forest research and land management.

The conferees dropped altogether another Senate amendment which would have appropriated $800,000 to the Treasury to cover expenses of the Coast Guard in registering small boats under the Federal Boating Act of 1958 (PL 85-911). The conferees said the Coast Guard could use $100,000 of funds already appropriated to carry out the program. (1958 Almanac p. 328)

ACTION -- Final action on HR 7978 was taken by voice votes in both chambers Aug. 19. The House acted first, adopting modified language for 15 Senate amendments reported in disagreement by the conference committee. The Senate then agreed to the House modifications and sent the bill to the White House.

One of the Senate amendments accepted by the House specified the maximum salaries for Senators' staff employees and permitted each Senator to decide for himself what titles he would give to his staff members. The new designations presumably would appear in the first public report of Senate payrolls as required by a resolution (S Res 139) adopted June 26. (See story p. 214)

House Elects Speaker Rayburn, Passes Veterans' Housing Bill, Approves, 381-20, Four-Year Extension of Military Draft

1. Election of Speaker of the House of Representatives for the 86th Congress. The nominees were Reps. Sam Rayburn (D Texas), Speaker during eight previous terms, and Charles A. Halleck (R Ind.), nominated by his party for the first time. Rayburn was elected, 281-148 (D 281-0; R 0-148), Jan. 7, 1959. He and Halleck voted "present." (See story p. 41) An R on the chart below represents a vote for Rayburn, an H a vote for Halleck.

2. HR 2256. Veterans' housing bill, to increase by $300 million the amount the Veterans Administration can draw from the Treasury for direct housing loans, and to raise the interest rate ceiling on both guaranteed and direct GI housing loans from 4.75 percent to 5.25 percent. Teague (R Calif.) motion to recommit the bill with instructions to delete the section providing $300 million for the direct loan program. Rejected 123-277 (D 2-257; R 121-20), Feb. 4, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position. (See story p. 257)

3. HR 2256. Passage of the bill. Passed 310-89 (D 257-1; R 53-88), Feb. 4, 1959. A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position.

4. HR 2260. Extending the military draft, and three related laws, for four years -- until July 1, 1963. Passed 381-20 (D 244-15; R 137-5), Feb. 5, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position. (See story p. 269)

CQ House Votes 7 through 11.

(Corresponding to Congressional Record Roll-Call Vote Nos. 13, 14, 19, 20, 21.)

House Passes Water Diversion and Orange Coloring Bills; Approves $297 Million in Airport Grants, Rejecting Cuts

7. HR 1. Authorize a three-year study of the effects of diversion of Lake Michigan waters into the Chicago, Ill., sanitary canal system, with the actual diversion limited to one year, and the remaining time used for studies and evaluations of the project. Passed 238-142 (D 219-30; R 19-112), March 13, 1959. A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position. (See story p. 270)

8. S 79. Permit, until Sept. 1, 1961, the artificial coloring of the skins of mature oranges with a coloring additive known as Citrus Red No. 2. Passed 213-94 (D 153-46; R 60-48), March 13, 1959. The President did not take a position on the bill. (See story p. 313)

9. HR 1011. Extension of the Federal Airport Construction Act authorizing $297 million in Federal matching grants for airport projects during the four years ending June 30, 1963. (Corresponding to Congressional Record Roll-Call Vote Nos. 28, 30, 34.)

House Sends REA Loan Bill to President by 254-131 Vote, Upholds Veto by Four Votes, Passes Military Construction Bill

14. HR 1321. A bill to give the Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration final authority to approve or disapprove REA loans and to vest the Administrator with all REA functions, which were transferred to the Secretary of Agriculture under Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1939 and Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1953. Passage of the bill. Passed 254-131 (D 238-5; R 16-126), April 15, 1959. A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position. (See story p. 314 and Vote 16, below)

15. HR 5674. Authorize $1,252,608,001 for military construction in fiscal 1960. Passage of the bill. Passed 379-7 (D 241-2; R 138-5), April 16, 1959. The President did not take a position on the bill. (See story p. 305)

16. S 144. An REA bill identical to HR 1321, above (Vote 14). Passage of the bill over the President's veto (two-thirds majority required). Failed to pass 280-146 (D 274-4; R 6-142), April 30, 1959 (284 "yeas" were required for passage). A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position.

CQ House Votes 17 through 18.

(Corresponding to Congressional Record Roll-Call Vote Nos. 39, 40.)

House Passes TVA Self-Financing Bill on 245-170 Roll-Call Vote After Rejecting Republican-Backed Recommittal Motion, 182-231

17. HR 3460. Authorize the Tennessee Valley Authority to issue up to $750 million worth of revenue bonds to finance new power facilities. Scherer (R Ohio) motion to recommit the bill with instructions that the Public Works Committee add provisions increasing the control of executive agencies and Congress over the issuance of bonds. Rejected 182-231 (D 41-227; R 141-4), May 7, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position. (See story p. 261)

18. HR 3460. Passage of the bill. Passed 245-170 (D 238-31; R 7-139), May 7, 1959. The President did not take a position on passage of the bill. (For final vote on the bill, see Roll Call 54.)

CQ House Votes 19 through 23.

(Corresponding to Congressional Record Roll-Call Vote Nos. 46, 47, 49, 50, 51.)

House Authorizes Space Funds; Limits Price-Support Loans; Passes Democratic Housing Bill After Rejecting GOP Substitute

19. HR 7007. Authorize $480,550,000 in fiscal 1960 appropriations for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. Passed 294-128 (D 227-46; R 67-82), May 20, 1959. The President did not take a position on the bill. (See story p. 260)

20. HR 7175. Appropriate $3,939,165,498 for the Department of Agriculture in fiscal 1960. Taber (R N.Y.) motion to recommit the bill with instructions to add language that would limit to $50,000 any single Commodity Credit Corp. price-support loan. Agreed to 261-165 (D 114-161; R 147-4), May 20, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position. (See story p. 334)

21. S 57. Housing Act of 1959. Thomas (D Texas) amendment to make all additional funds authorized in the bill available only upon enactment of pertinent appropriation bills. Agreed to 222-201 (D 80-194; R 142-7), May 21, 1959. The President did not take a position on the amendment. (See story p. 245)

22. S 57. Kilburn (R N.Y.) motion to recommit the bill and substitute the Herlong (D Fla.) bill (HR 7117), authorizing no public housing and cutting the total housing authorization to $1.3 billion. Rejected 189-234 (D 60-215; R 129-19), May 21, 1959. A "yea" was a vote supporting the President's position.

23. S 57. Passage of the House committee version of the bill, as amended on the floor. Passed 261-160 (D 228-45; R 33-115), May 21, 1959. A "nay" was a vote supporting the President's position. (For final vote on the bill, see Roll Call 45.)
